24 Marcus, Aristarchus, Demas, Lucas, my fellow-laborers.

25 The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with your spirit. Amen.

Our apostle being now come to the conclusion of his epistle, he shuts it up with salutation and prayer: first, he salutes Philemon from Epaphras, Marcus, Aristarchus, Demas, and Luke, some his fellow-prisoners, all his fellow-laborers. Here note, How graciously God provides for the comfort of his children in a prison; he sweetened St. Paul's affliction with the saints' communion: it was no joy to St. Paul that Epaphras was in prison, he had rather he had been preaching at Colosse: but seeing he was a prisoner, the apostle, no doubt, was very thankful that he was in the same prison with him, where they had opportunity (it is hoped to pray together, to discourse, encourage and comfort one another: and note the cause of Epaphras' imprisonment, in Christ Jesus, that is, for the sake of Christ Jesus. No doubt there were others in prison besides Epaphras, but none were St. Paul's fellow-prisoners but he, because, though sufferers in the same prison, yet not for the same cause, Epaphras my fellow-prisoner salueth thee. Observe, 2. Our apostle's concluding prayer, The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with your spirit. Here note, 1. The person prayed to, the Lord Jesus Christ our Saviour, our anointed King; from Christ we are called christians, because every one of us, in our measure, are partakers of a divine unction with and from him, 1 John ii. 20. Ye have an unction from the Holy One. This oil ran down from the head of our great High-Priest, to the very skirts of his garment. Note, 2. The blessing prayed for, The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with thy spirit; that is, "May the special favor of God, both in its effects and influence, in its graces and comforts, reside in thy soul and spirit; may the blessed Spirit of our Lord Jesus evermore dwell in thee by his sanctifying impressions, by his powerful assistances, and by his quickening influences." Note, 3. He doth not pray for Philemon solely, though for him eminently, but for all the saints at Colosse, who had obtained like precious faith with him: The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you, not thy, but your spirit: all the saints of God in general, yea, the whole race of mankind universally, must be remembered by us in our prayers. Amen is a word that denotes our earnestness of desire to be heard, and our comfortable expectation of being answered; it teaches us, that whatever we pray for, should be rightly understood, firmly expected, and earnestly desired. They sin in prayer who either do not understand what they pray for, or do not earnestly desire what they pray for, or do not believe God's readiness to grant what they pray for: therefore in testimony of our desire and assurance to be heard in prayer, we say Amen.

LAUS DEO.

THE EPISTLE
HEBREWS.

As touching the author and penman of this Epistle to the Hebrews, there have been many and various opinions; some have supposed it written by St. Luke, others by Barnabas, or Clemens, but most by St. Paul, which they attempt to prove from chapter xiii. 23. Know ye not that our brother Timothy is set at liberty; because it is customary with St. Paul, when he writes epistles, to call Timothy his brother, 2 Cor. i. 1. Col. i. 1. And also from the words of St. Peter, 2 Pet. iii. 15.. As our dear brother Paul hath written unto you in all his epistles. Whence it is evident, that the apostle Paul had writ to them, to whom St. Peter was then writing; that is, to the believing Jews in general, and to those of the dispersion in particular. But since we are assured that the Spirit of God did indite the book, we need not be over-solicitous to find out whose hand it was that held the pen.

The persons to whom this epistle is directed, are styled Hebrews; that is, the believing Jews converted to christianity, chiefly those that inhabited Judea, and in and about Jerusalem: who though they had embraced the gospel, yet they adhered to the Mosaic rites, and Jewish ceremonies, joining them with christianity, as necessary to salvation. Now, for this bare profession of christianity, they were exposed to a bitter persecution by the unbelieving Jews. Our apostle therefore justly fearing lest their sufferings for christianity should occasion their apostasy from it, writes this epistle to establish and confirm them in their holy profession, by acquainting them with the sad and fatal consequences of a ruinous apostasy, and the fruitlessness of former sufferings, without a resolute perseverance in the christian faith, and patience under all tribulations.

That St. Paul did not prefix his name to this epistle, as he did to others, the reason supposed is this, because he was the apostle of the Gentiles, and not of the circumcision, or of the Jews; and his name being not over-acceptable to them, he sets it not at the front of this epistle, lest the sight of it should have prejudiced the Jews, and taken them off from duly weighing and considering the weighty matters which he wrote about.

The general scope and design of this epistle is to inform the Hebrews, that the gospel ministry, or dispensation under the new Testament by Jesus Christ, far surpasseth and transcendently excelleth the ministry of the Old Testament under Moses and the prophets: and to prove, that Christ was greater than the angels, a greater person and lawgiver than Moses, a greater priest than Aaron, a greater prince than Melchizedec; and the Levitical priesthood, and the old covenant, were to give place to Christ our great High-Priest, and to the new covenant established upon better promises.

CHAPTER I.

In the first chapter of this epistle, the proofs of the eternal deity of Jesus Christ are produced with such clear evidence of scripture light, that only a veiled heart, and obstinate infidelity, can resist. And the medium which the inspired penman makes use of, is, the comparing Christ with the angels, (the glory and beauty of the creation,) and showing that he is infinitely dignified above them: and that religious adoration is due unto him from them, even from the angels of the highest order, ver 6. Let all the angels of God worship him. But this will most evidently, appear by a particular explication of the several parts and verses of the chapter, in which our apostle thus speaks:

GOD, who at sundry times, and in divers manners, spake in times past unto the fathers by the prophets,

2 Hath in those last days spoken unto us by his Son,—

Our apostle intending here a comparison between the law and the gospel, shows first wherein they both agree, and next wherein they differ. They agree (first) in this, that God was the author of them both: both law and gospel received the original from God himself; and God the Father, by way of emanency, was the peculiar author both of law and gospel. God, that God, “who spake in times past by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken to us by his Son. Observe, 2. The difference between the law and the gospel, with respect to the manner of their revelation. The revelation of the will of God under the law was, 1. At sundry times: before the flood, by Enoch and Noah; after the flood, by Abraham, by Jacob, by Moses, and all the prophets. 2. In divers manners; sometimes by a lively voice, sometimes by dreams and visions, sometimes by inspiration and immediate revelation, sometimes by Urim and Thummim, sometimes by signs from heaven. 3. The revelation of the law was made of old, formerly, in times past; this of the gospel was made in these last days. 4. That was made to the fathers, this to us. 5. That revelation was made by the prophets, this by the Son, Jesus Christ. From the whole, learn, 1. That Almighty God did not leave the world only to the light of nature, and to know him barely by his works of creation; but bestowed upon them the invaluable blessing of supernatural revelation, thereby to bring mankind to the clearer knowledge of their duty. Learn, 2. That the revelation which God was pleased to make of himself, his mind, and will, was gradual, and by parts, not all at one time, and in one manner, but at sundry times, and in divers manners. Learn, 3. That the gospel dispensation is the most perfect revelation of the will of God, which God ever did, or ever will make to the sons of men. Learn, 4. That as it is a perfect, so likewise a final revelation of God’s mind and will to a lost world: a farther discovery of the mind of God for man’s salvation is not to be expected. The gospel is the last effort which the divine mercy and goodness will make upon mankind, in order to eternal happiness; herein God has spoken to us by his Son: and if we will not hear him, he will speak no more, we must expect no other: he can send no greater prophet, no dearer person to us than his own Son; and as he can send no greater, so will he send no other: for if we despise him, whom will we reverence? Now, the dignity of this person, our apostle proceeds in this and the next verses to describe:

—Whom he hath appointed heir of all things, by whom also he made the worlds;—

The title of heir, which is here given to Christ, setteth out his dignity and dominion, together with the right he has to both: namely, that of his sonship; for what is an heir but his father’s successor; Christ, as a Son, being heir of all things, imports, that he is lord of all, and has a sovereign empire and dominion over all persons and things, over all angels and men, whether living or dead. Learn hence, that God the Father has given and granted unto Christ his Son, as Mediator and Head of his church, a sovereign power and authority over all persons and things, both in heaven and in earth, to be disposed of by him at his pleasure, and according to the sovereign purpose of his will; “whom he hath appointed heir of all things.”

—By whom also he hath made the worlds;

By whom, not for whom, as the Socinians would suggest; the word signifies the efficient and the final cause, according to Col. i. 16, 17. “By him were all things created, and by him all things consist.” And by him, not as an instrument or created cause, for then must he be created by himself, seeing all things were made by him, and nothing made without him. John i. 3. But as the principal efficient cause, according to St. John v. 19. “Whatsoever the Father doth that doth also the Son likewise.” The Father doth all by the Son, and the Son doth all from the Father. And by making the worlds, we are to understand his forming of the old world, not his reforming of the new; for if so, the apostles might be said to make the worlds as well as Christ, because they had a principal hand in converting and reforming the world. But by the worlds, here understand the visible and material worlds, all things in heaven and in earth, which were made by Christ, not as a subordinate instrument, but as a primary and principal agent, which sets forth the omnipotent power of Christ, and consequently proves him to be truly and really God. Learn hence, That the Lord Jesus Christ, by making the world and all things therein, by his own immediate power, has given a full and ample demonstration of his divinity, or being essentially and really God.

3 Who, being the brightness of his glory, and the express image of his person, and upholding all things by the word of his power, when he had by himself purged our sins, sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high;—

Our apostle here proceeds in describing the divinity of Christ’s person, by whom the Father has made known his will to us under the gospel. He declares, 1. what he is. 2. What he does, or did. 3. The consequent of both, or what he now enjoyeth. Observe, 1. Our apostle declares who, and what Christ was, and is, namely, "the brightness of the Father's glory, and the express image of his person." As the brightness of the sun is of the same nature with the sun, and of as long continuance as the sun, and cannot be separated from the sun, and yet the sun, and the brightness of the sun, are really distinct from each other. In like manner the Father and the Son are of one and the same essence, co-eternal and inseparable, yet the person of the one is distinct from the other. And as the sun communicates its light and influence to us by its beams, so doth God communicate his goodness, and manifest himself to us by Jesus Christ. Learn hence, that the Son is of the same essence with the Father, yet a person really distinct from the Father, and all the incomprehensible glory of the Father brightly shines forth in Christ his Son.

—And the express image of his person.

That is, the express character of God the Father's person, his natural image, and essential likeness; all the perfections shining forth in God the Father, are substantially in Christ the Son: is the Father eternal, omnipotent, omniscient, omnipresent? so is the Son, whose character he is; whose resemblance and image he bears; John x. 38. The Father is in me, and I in him; the same essential properties and nature being in each person, by virtue thereof their persons are said to be in each other. All the glorious perfections of the nature of God do belong unto and dwell in the person of the Son of God. Observe, 2. Our apostle having declared what Christ is, next declares what he does; namely, that he upholdeth all things by the word of his power; that is, he exerts and puts forth the same omnipotent power in the work of preservation, which he did in the work of creation, keeping it from sinking into its original chaos of confusion. This work of conservation say some, is a greater act of omnipotency than that of creation: by the former, all things were brought out of nothing, by the latter, they are preserved from returning into nothing, which their own nature, and their perpetual conflict, by contrariety of qualities, would necessarily precipitate them into. Learn hence, 1. That such is the nature and condition of the universe, that it cannot subsist one moment without continual support; such is the dependant condition of the whole creation. Learn, 2. That our Lord Jesus Christ has the weight of the whole creation upon his hand, he upholdeth what himself created; and as well his upholding as creating, his conservation as well as creation of all things by the word of his power, do prove him truly and really God. Observe, 3. A farther evidence and proof of the divinity of Christ, produced here by our apostle; as he made the world by his omnipotent power, and upholds it by his wonderful providence, so he redeemed it by his blood, he by himself purged our sins. He that made the heavens, bowed the heavens, and came down from heaven, and became a sacrifice for sin on earth, and by himself alone, by himself without a partner, by himself without a comforter, expiated the guilt of sin, and satisfied the justice of God for sin, suffering as he was man, and satisfying as he was God; who by himself purged our sins. Learn hence, that so great was the work of expiation of sin, that it could no otherwise be really effected and accomplished, than by the sacrifice and satisfaction of Christ, who was truly and really God. Observe, 4.

The consequent of all that Christ did, or his glorious condition after his humiliation, "having purged our sins, he sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high:" that is, God the Father clothed him with the highest honor, and endowed him with the greatest power that heaven itself could afford; the right hand is the place both of dignity and honor, and also of superiority and power; Christ's sitting at God's right hand imports his exaltation to the highest authority and most supreme dominion. Learn hence, that when our Lord Jesus Christ had finished his sufferings upon earth, he was placed in the seat of the highest honor and authority at the right hand of God his Father in heaven, even to be the object of adoration both to angels and men, as the following verses declare in which our apostle thus speaks:

4 Being made so much better than the angels, as he hath by inheritance obtained a more excellent name than they.

5 For unto which of the angels said he at any time, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee? And again, I will be to him a Father, and he shall be to me a Son?

6 And again when he bringeth in his first-begotten into the world, he saith, And let all the angels of God worship him.

In the foregoing verses a comparison was made between Christ and the prophets, here between Christ and the angels, and the preference and pre-eminence is given to him above them all. Angels were very glorious creatures, employed by God in giving of the law; but Christ whom God the Father employed in the dispensation of the Gospel, is far superior to them, and has an excellency above them. 1. A more excellent name, they being called ministers or servants, he styled a Son. 2. A more excellent nature, his being a divine, theirs an angelical nature: yea, his human nature, by virtue of its union with the Godhead, has a dignity surpassing the nature of angels. 3. A more excellent office and function, as Mediator between God and man, which belongs not to any angel. And, 4. Consequently a more excellent power and authority, with a right to adoration and worship, which the angels have not, but are commanded to worship him. when he brought his first-begotten into the world, that is, in the morning of the resurrection, when he was in a glorious manner begotten from the dead; the Father says, "Let all the angels of God worship him;" and therefore he that is to be worshipped, is greater than they that are to worship him. Learn hence, 1. That the evidencing and declaring of Christ to be the Son of God, was the particular care and special work of God the Father; he said it, he recorded it, he revealed it: thou art my Son. Learn, 2. That the Lord Jesus Christ, the mediator of the new covenant, is in his own person, God blessed for ever, to whom divine honor and religious worship is due and payable from glorified angels; "let all the angels of God worship him." Learn, 3. That the command of God is the ground and reason of all religious worship; the angels are to worship Christ, but the ground of their doing it is God's command; he saith, "let all the angels of God worship him." Learn, 4. That it can be no part of our duty to worship the angels, who are our fellow servants in the worship of Jesus Christ; they that are to worship Christ with us, surely are not to be worshipped by us.

7 And of the angels he saith, who maketh his angels spirits, and his ministers a flame of fire.

8 But unto the Son, he saith, Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever: a sceptre of righteousness is the sceptre of thy kingdom.

9 Thou hast loved righteousness and hated iniquity: therefore God, even thy God, hath anointed thee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows.

Still our apostle goes on, comparing Christ, and the angels together, and giving a transcendent preference to the one before the other. The angels are ministering servants, but Christ a natural Son; the angels are the prime instruments of the Father's providence, most zealous and active to accomplish his pleasure, but the Son is God; "thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever." God, not by analogy and deputation, as princes are, nor with a limitation and diminution, as Moses was made a god to Pharaoh, but absolutely and really, as subsisting in the divine nature; to the Son he saith, "thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever." Learn hence, that it is the divine nature of Jesus Christ that gives stability and fixedness, yea, immutability and unchangeableness to his throne and kingdom: "thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever." And whereas the sceptres of earthly kings are often unrighteously managed, and their thrones do ruinously fall, the sceptre of righteousness is the sceptre of Christ's kingdom; that is, all the laws, and the whole administration of his kingdom by his word and Spirit, are all just and equal, righteous and holy; "a sceptre of righteousness is the sceptre of thy kingdom." And farther, the apostle declares, that the righteous administration of Christ in his kingdom, proceeds from his own habitual righteousness and love thereunto: thou hast loved righteousness, and hated iniquity, and for that reason he was dignified and exalted by God over and above all his fellows. Learn hence, That Jesus Christ as Mediator, because of his love to righteousness, and hatred to sin, is dignified and advanced by God, not only above all men, but likewise above all angels. "Therefore God, even thy God, hath anointed thee above thy fellows."

10 And, thou, Lord, in the beginning hast laid the foundation of the earth; and the heavens are the works of thine hands:

11 They shall perish; but thou remain-est; and they all shall wax old as doth a garment;

12 And as a vesture shalt thou fold them up, and they shall be changed; but thou art the same, and thy years shall not fail.

What proof can be more desired of Christ's divinity, than what is here given by our apostle? the name and attributes of God are given to him, as also an everlasting throne and kingdom; divine honor is required to be paid to him: and here such divine works are ascribed to him, wherein no creature can have any share of efficiency with him; such is the making of the world, "thou, Lord, laidest the foundations of the earth, and the heavens are the works of thy hands:" here we have Christ's omnipotency declared, "thou hast laid the foundations of the earth, and the heavens are thy handy-works:" and his eternity and immutability asserted, "when the heavens perish, thou remainest; when they wax old, and are changed, thou art the same." Learn hence, that the whole world, the heavens and the earth being made by our Lord Jesus Christ, is an evident proof that he is exalted above all creatures, that he is an almighty and unchangeable God, thou, Lord, hast laid, &c. Learn, 2. That such is the frailty of man's nature, and such the perishing condition of all created things, that nothing will or can yield stable consolation to us, but a firm belief of the omnipotency and immutability of our Lord Jesus Christ.

13 But to which of the angels said he at any time, sit on my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footstool?

This verse contains a farther proof of Christ's preeminence above the angels, and that he is in reality the Son of God; namely, because he sits, in the quality of a Son, at the right hand of God the Father; equal to him in dignity, power, and glory, commanding all the visible and invisible world, most easily, yet irresistibly; though gradually subduing his enemies to a consummate and complete victory. To which of the angels said he at any time? The words are an interrogation, which have the force of a vehement negation, and imply, that God the Father did never say this to any of the angels, nor put such honor upon any one of them, as to say, sit on my right hand, until I make thy foes thy footstool; but to Christ he saith it, Psalm. cx. 1. "The Lord said unto my Lord, sit thou on my right hand until I make thine enemies thy footstool." Learn hence, 1. That Jesus Christ is a spiritual king; and as such has many enemies to his kingdom and government. Sin is an enemy to Christ, and his kingdom: it makes an universal opposition to Christ and his government: satan is a sworn enemy to Christ and his throne, and he exerts his enmity by temptations and persecutions. The world is an enemy also in the things of it, in the men of it, in the rule of it. The law is an enemy to Christ and his kingdom, not absolutely, but accidentally, by reason of the consequences that attend it: it slays them, Rom. vii. 9, 10, 11, which is the work of an enemy: in a word, death, the grave, and hell, are Christ's enemies. Learn, 2. That all Christ's enemies shall, in Christ's time, be made his footstool; they are conquering now initially and gradually, they shall be conquered ere long finally and perfectly; and all his people shall be made complete sharers in his victory and conquest. Learn, 3. That Christ's sitting at God's right hand, in a certain and assured expectation of having his foes become his footstool, is an undoubted proof of the divinity of his person, and that he is essentially and really God. To none of the angels, or any of the creatures, said he, at any time, sit on my right hand; but to the Son he said, sit on my right hand, &c.

14 Are they not all ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation?

This is the last testimony produced by the apostle to prove Christ's pre-eminency above the angels: he is a Son, they are but servants; not only servants to Christ, but servants to believers, to the church of Christ, to the heirs of salvation. Observe here, 1. The nature of angels declared; they are spirits, without any thing material or corporeal belonging to them, yet having a power to assume a body, and appear in human shape, when they pleased. The scripture describes them as excelling in strength, purity and holiness, to be of great activity and swiftness, and gives intimation of several ranks and orders among them, distinguishing them by the names of principalities and powers, thrones and dominions; but what the difference of these names do import none can positively declare. Observe, 2. Their general office declared. They are ministering spirits, they are God's domestic servants, they attend upon his throne, they expect his commands, they execute his pleasure, and are in a constant readiness to do his will. The angels are the great instruments of providence in the world; not that God needs them, or cannot manage without them: for he can do whatever he pleaseth in heaven and earth. God can steer all human affairs with the least nod and beck of his will, without any instrument at all: but his wisdom and goodness thinks fit to honor his creatures with his commands, that so they may be capable of his favor and rewards. Observe, 3. The special office and employment of good angels, with reference to good men: they are sent forth, there is their designation and appointment, to ministers, that is their general end and employment, for the heirs of salvation, that is, their more special and peculiar business; they have a charge of the bodies and souls of the saints whilst alive: a special charge of their souls at death, to conduct them to blessedness, and probably a care and charge of their bodies after death, as may be gathered from St. Jude, ver. 9. Learn hence, 1. That the highest honor of the most glorious angels in heaven, is to minister to the saints by God's appointment here on earth. Learn 2. That such is the love and care of God towards his saints, that he sends the most glorious attendants upon his own throne, to minister unto them, and to take care of them. Behold then the astonishing regard which the great God has for good men, in that he appoints all his angels to minister to them, for the safeguard of their persons, for the success of their affairs, and for the security of their eternal salvation. Lord! what is man, that thou art thus mindful of him; that when thou madest him lower than the angels, thou shouldst yet make the angels ministers unto him? Behold also the impiety of the church of Rome, in worshipping of angels: surely if they are our fellow servants, and minister unto us, we are by no means to worship them. See Rev. xix. 10.

CHAPTER II.

Our apostle having, by an irresistible strength, and force of argument proved his proposition laid down in the foregoing chapter, namely, that Christ the dispenser of the gospel, was not only above Moses, the deliverer of the law, but far superior to the angels themselves; he comes, in the beginning of this chapter, to draw an inference from his foregoing discourse, as appears by the illative particle. Therefore, at the head of the first verse, which runs thus:

THEREFORE we ought to give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard, lest at any time we should let them slip.

As if our apostle had said, seeing Christ is so excellent in his person, and seeing the gospel has such a glorious author as the blessed Jesus, let us take great heed that we esteem his person, revere his authority, reverence his ministry and his message, and that our memories be not like leaking vessels, suffering the word at any time to slip and run from us. Learn hence, 1. That the consideration of the revelation of the gospel by the Son of God, is a powerful motive to an high estimation of it, and diligent attendance on it. "Therefore we ought to give the more earnest heed;" that is, knowing the excellency of his person, and sublimity of his doctrine. Learn; 2. That the true and only way of honoring our Lord Jesus Christ, as the Son of God, is by diligent attendance, and obedience to his word: where there is no obedience to the gospel, there is no faith in, nor love unto Jesus Christ, the author and dispenser of the gospel. Learn, 3. That there are sundry times and seasons wherein, and several ways and means whereby men are in great danger of losing the word, if they attend not diligently to its preservation; Lest at any time, some lose the word in a time of prosperity, others in a time of persecution, some in a time of temptation. Learn, 4. That the word heard is not lost without great sin, as well as with the inevitable ruin of the souls of men; if we suffer the word to slip out of our memories, that we forget it; out of our hearts, that we despise it; out of our lives, that we are disobedient to it; it is lost as to us, and will end in our loss, yea in our ruin at the last. Learn, 5. That the only way to prevent this sin and danger, under the word, is by a very diligent attendance upon it, and giving more earnest heed to the things contained in it: we are to attend to the word before we hear, to bring us to it: to attend upon it in hearing, that it may be remembered by us; and after we have heard it, that it may be practised by us. This consideration, that it is the word of Christ, the great and mighty God, the wisdom of the Father, that we are going forth to hear, will engage us to give the more earnest heed to the things we hear, "Lest at any time we should let them slip."

2 For if the word spoken by angels was steadfast, and every transgression and disobedience received a just recompence of reward :

3 How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation,—

The apostle having set forth the transcendent dignity of Christ's person and office, and shown that he was a more excellent prophet than Moses, a more excellent priest than Aaron, a more excellent king than Melchisedec, hereupon he infers, that such as despise the gospel, the doctrine of this blessed Jesus, are far more inexcusable than those that were the transgressors of the law of Moses. If the word spoken by angels was steadfast; that is, if the law given by the ministry of angels was firm and inviolable, and all the transgressors of it were justly and severely punished; how can we escape perishing, if we neglect the gospel, which makes a discovery of that great salvation which was purchased by Christ for lost sinners? The apostle's argument is drawn (a minori ad majus) from the less to the greater. Thus, if Almighty God was so severe against the violation of a far meaner institution, to wit, the law, given by the ministry and dispensation of angels, how can we escape that neglect to hear and obey the gospel, which makes a tender, yea, the only tender of salvation to a lost world? Note here, 1. The great care which Almighty God takes to make lost sinners happy; namely, by offering them a great salvation. Note, 2. The great care which every one of us ought to take in order to our own happiness and salvation, and that is, not to neglect it. Note, 3. The great guilt which they contract, and the inevitable punishment God will inflict on such as do neglect this great salvation, How shall they escape? Learn hence, 1. That there is salvation held forth and tendered by Christ to lost sinners, in the gospel. That this salvation thus held forth and tendered unto sinners, is a great salvation; great in its author Christ Jesus; great in the price paid for it, the blood of Jesus; great in the subject recipient of it, the whole man, soul and body; great in regard of the evils it saves us from, sin, Satan, the curse of the law, death and hell; great in respect of the gracious privileges it interests believers in. Learn, 2. That notwithstanding this salvation is so great, yet there are some that neglect it. 3. That it is impossible for such neglecters to escape. Quest. 1. What shall they not escape? Ans. The curse of the law, the wrath of God, the sentence of Christ denounced, and the sentence of Christ inflicted. Quest. 2. Why shall they not escape? Ans. Because such persons sin against the remedy, the only remedy which the wisdom of God hath found out for man's recovery; and accordingly, the mouth of God has spoken it, the hand of God has written it, and the oath of God has confirmed it, that such sinners shall not escape; such as sin against the remedy must perish without the remedy.

—Which at the first began to be spoken by the Lord, and was confirmed unto us by them that heard him;

4 God also bearing them witness both with signs and wonders, and with divers miracles, and gifts of the Holy Ghost, according to his own will?

Here we have a special reason assigned, why such as reject the gospel cannot escape divine wrath, because the gospel was first published and delivered by Jesus Christ; it was clearly, plainly, sweetly, and persuasively preached by himself first. The law was promulgated by angels, the gospel proclaimed by the Son of God, and afterwards by his apostles; and God confirmed their testimony by signs and wonders, by miraculous powers, and gifts of the Holy Ghost: all which did signify God's approbation of their doctrine, and gave the world a confirmation of the truth and excellency of it, and consequently gave credibility to it. Here note, That as the law of Moses was confirmed by miracles, so was the gospel of Jesus also: nay, herein this was superior to that. Moses wrought signs and wonders, but the gifts of the Holy Ghost were peculiar to the times of the Messiah, and were the proper confirmation of the gospel dispensation. Yet note farther, That though the apostles had a power to work miracles, yet it was according to God's will, and not at their own pleasure; they could not work miracles when they pleased, nor what they pleased: whence it was evident that not they, but God was the worker of them. And the more God's overruling will was seen in the miracles then, the greater confirmation have we of the doctrine now: "Which (gospel) was at first spoken by the Lord, and was confirmed unto us by divers miracles and gifts of the Holy Ghost."

5 For unto the angels hath he not put in subjection the world to come, whereof we speak.

6 But one in a certain place testified, saying, What is man, that thou art mindful of him? Or the son of man, that thou visitest him?

7 Thou madest him a little lower than the angels: thou crownedst him with glory and honor, and didst set him over the works of thy hands:

Still our apostle prosecutes his former design, which was to persuade the Hebrews, that more heed is to be given to the word of Christ, the doctrine of the gospel, than to the word or law delivered by angels, because God had given a greater authority to Christ than ever he did to the angels, as appears by putting the world to come in subjection to Christ, and not to angels; yea, inasmuch as angels themselves are to be in subjection unto Christ, as a part of his kingdom, "Unto the angels hath he not put into subjection the world to come?" that is, the world of believers gathered out of all nations by the preaching of the gospel, is put under Christ's immediate power, and subject not to angels, but to Christ himself. Learn hence, That it is the great privilege of the gospel-church, that it depends upon Christ as its immediate and only head, and is not put in subjection to any other, either angels or men. The gospel church was not put in subjection to angels in its first erection or institution, nor was it put into subjection unto angels, as to the rule and government of it when erected; but angels and saints are equally subjected unto Christ, who is both an head of vital influence, as also an head of authority, rule, and government to the whole church, and every member thereof. Observe next, The proof which the apostle brings for this out of the Psalms, Psal. vii. in which David breaks forth into admiration and wonder, at that glory and honor which God the Father put upon man at first in the work of creation, and next in the work of redemption: when the Son of God took the nature of man upon him, well might it then be said, Lord! What is man that thou wert thus mindful of him, and the sons of men, that thy dear and only son did thus visit them? Learn hence, 1. That such was the inexpressible love of Jesus Christ, the Son of God, towards the sons of men, that he was free and willing to condescend unto any condition for their benefit and salvation: he that was the creator of angels, was willing, for our sakes, to be made lower than the angels, a little lower, that is, for a little time lower than the angels, namely, during the time of his humiliation. Learn, 2. That this wonderful condescension of Christ to take the nature of man, his respect and care, his love and grace towards mankind, is just matter of great and eternal admiration. O! what is man that thou art mindful of him, and crownest him with dignity and glory.

8 Thou hast put all things in subjection under his feet. For in that he put all in subjection under him, he left nothing that is not put under him. But now we see not yet all things put under him.

9 But we see Jesus, who was made a little lower than the angels, for the suffering of death, crowned with glory and honor; that he by the grace of God should taste death for every man.

We had an account of the depth of our Lord's humiliation before, of the height of his exaltation now, all things are and shall be put under him: for though God has given Christ dominion over all things, and all things are subject to his power, yet he hath not as yet exercised his complete power in ruining all his enemies, and reducing all his people to subjection; and this will not be seen until the last saint be converted, and until death, the last enemy, be destroyed. But yet, in the mean time, Christ is exalted with great triumph to his kingdom in heaven, and there crowned with dignity and honor, and glory in heaven. It is easy to believe, that every thing shall be put under him that riseth up against him, in his own appointed time.

—But we see Jesus, who was made a little lower than the angels, for the suffering of death, crowned with glory and honor: that he by the grace of God should taste death for every man.

Observe here, 1. The wonderful humiliation and abasement, the exinanition and deep depression of the glorious Jesus; he was made for a little time lower than the angels;

that is, he was made man and mortal, and did suffer death. Observe, 2. The manner of our Lord's death. He tasted it, he did really taste of it, and but taste of it; he tasted death; that is, he died really and not in appearance only, he tasted it. 2. Implying, that he underwent the bitterness of it: he found out experimentally what death was by dying, as a man finds out the bitterness of a thing by tasting. Again, he did but taste of it, he was not finally overcome and vanquished by it: he continued but a short time under it, it was not possible that he should be long holden of it; the dignity of his person rendered a short continuance of him under the power of death sufficient for our redemption. Observe, 3. The persons for whom he tasted death, or died: for others, not for himself; that is, in their room or stead; he underwent that death in our stead, which we should have undergone in our own persons. Observe, 4. The extent of Christ's death, he tasted death for every man; that is, Christ by his death has made God propitious to every man, made sin remissible, and every man saveable: the death of Christ renders God willing to be reconciled unto all sinners; faith renders him actually reconciled. The reason why every man doth not obtain salvation, is not for want of a sufficient propitiation. Observe, 5. The moving cause which inclined God to deliver up Christ to death, and to transfer our punishment upon him, and that was his own grace, and free goodwill, "That he by the grace of God should taste death for every man." Observe, 6. The glorious reward of our Lord's suffering with reference to himself, "We see Jesus, for suffering of death, crowned with glory and honor." As Christ's meritorious sufferings for us, so shall our patient suffering for him be rewarded with the highest glory in heaven, 1 Pet. v. 10. "The God of grace who hath called us into his eternal glory by Christ Jesus, after you have suffered awhile, make you perfect," &c.

10 For it became him for whom are all things, and by whom are all things, in bringing many sons unto glory, to make the captain of their salvation perfect through sufferings.

Observe here, 1. The gracious title given to Christ, the captain of our salvation; because the whole work of salvation, from first to last, our guidance and conduct through sin and suffering, unto glory and happiness, is committed to him. As a captain he conducts with care, he leads on with power, he discharges his trust with tenderness and love: he goes before us in obedience; in suffering, through death, and into glory. Observe, 2. That God made Jesus Christ the captain of our salvation perfect through suffering; that is, he was consecrated and set apart for the office of a complete priest by his own blood, when he offered himself without spot to God. Every Levitical priest was consecrated by the blood of a beast sacrificed; Christ was consecrated by his own blood, for no other blood would be accepted. It is called the Father's act to consecrate and make him perfect; but indeed it was the Son's own immediate act; the Father's by designation and appointment, but his own by actual performance, offering himself through the eternal Spirit without spot. Observe, 3. That Christ being consecrated and perfected through sufferings, hath consecrated the way of suffering, for all that follow him to pass through it into glory. Upon this consecration of the way of suffering by Christ Jesus, a believer's sufferings becomes, 1. Necessary and unavoidable; the head and the members must be made conformable to each other, Rom. viii. 29. They are thereby made, 2. Useful and profitable: Christ has taken the curse out of the cross, and sanctified the cross to a special end and purpose; hereby likewise all sufferings for the Gospel are, 3. Made honorable; no greater honor than to suffer for Christ, Acts v. 41. "The apostles rejoiced that they had the honor to suffer shame for his name." And lastly, sufferings hereby are made safe to the sons of God, yea, more safe than prosperity by far. Gold is not consumed, but improved and preserved in the furnace. Observe, 4. That such is the merit and desert of sin, and such the immutability and severity of the justice of God, that there was no way possible to bring sinners unto glory, but by the death and sufferings of the Son of God; or if possible, yet no other way so becoming God, it became him for whom are all things and so expressive of his love and goodness to a lost world; it would have been unbecoming God, the supreme Governor of the world, to have passed by the desert of sin, without a satisfaction; therefore his wisdom contrived that grace should be exercised, and justice satisfied, that sin should be punished, and mercy magnified: that sinners should be saved, and the glory of all God's attributes secured.

11 For both he that sanctifieth, and they who are sanctified, are all of one. For which cause he is not ashamed to call them brethren.

12 Saying, I will declare thy name unto my brethren, in the midst of the church will I sing praise unto thee.

13 And again I will put my trust in him. And again, behold, I, and the children which God hath given me.

In these words, the union of Christ and us, by his participation of the same nature with us, is declared: he and we are all of one; that is of one and the same nature, of one stock and original; it was the product of the wise, merciful, and righteous counsel of God, that the Saviour of men should have communion with them in their nature, that he might have to redeem them by his propinquity and alliance with them; "Both he that sanctifieth, and they that are sanctified, are all of one." Learn hence, 1. That the Lord Jesus Christ was, and ought to be of the same nature and stock with those whom he did redeem, and sanctify unto God. Divine justice required, that the same nature which had sinned should suffer for sin. The wisdom of God was pleased to redeem man; man must be redeemed by man: God as God could not die, therefore God becomes man, that he might be in a capacity to die: he that as man will redeem man must be of the same nature with man. This Christ was, both by divine institution, and by a voluntary susception; "He that sanctifieth, and they that are sanctified, are all of one." Learn, 2. That Christ having taken our nature upon him, accounts it no disgrace to acknowledge and own us for his brethren; Christ will be ashamed of none of his brethren, but such as are a shame unto him.

Learn, 3. That notwithstanding the union of nature which is betwixt Christ and us, yet, in respect of our persons, there is an inconceivable distance between him and us: so that it is a marvellous condescension in him to call us brethren. Here note, That though Christ calls us brethren, yet it becomes us to call him Lord; and as such to adore and worship him, to glorify and serve him, to honor and obey him.

14 Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part of the same; that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil;

15 And deliver them who through fear of death were all their life-time subject to bondage.

Observe here, 1. The reality of Christ's assuming the human nature asserted: "As the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part of the same." Which is in effect the same he had asserted in the foregoing verse, that he that sanctifieth, and they that are sanctified, are all of one; that is, of one nature and original. Observe, 2. A twofold reason assigned, why Christ thus condescendingly assumed the human nature, namely, that he might destroy the devil, who had the power of death and deliver his people that were under the slavish fear of death. 1. That he might destroy him that had the power of death. Here note, 1. The devil described in a very formidable manner, as one that had the power of death: not the supreme, but a subordinate power of death; a power of death as God's executioner to inflict it; the devil has the power of death, just as the hangman has the power of the gallows, to put those to death whom the judge condemns only. Note, 2. Him that has thus the power of death has Christ destroyed, that is, disarmed and disabled, not destroyed his being, but disarmed him of his power and authority over the children of God. Note, 3. That Christ did this by his own death; through death, that is, by his own dying, he destroyed him that had the power of death: it was upon the cross that he spoiled principalities and powers, and made a show of them openly; Christ by dying conquered death. The second reason of Christ's appearing in our flesh and nature, was to deliver his people from the slavery and bondage of the sinful and servile fears of death. Here note, 1. That there is a natural fear of death which is not sinful: art thou afraid of death? Thou wert not a man, if thou didst not fear it: there cannot but be in nature an aversion to its own dissolution; and nature will always act like itself. Note, 2. That there is a servile slavish fear of death, which hath both sin and torment in it; a fear of death as penal, and drawing after it everlasting punishment. Note, 3. That unregenerate men, if a senseless stupidity has not benumbed them, and a spirit of slumber fallen upon them, are in bondage under the servile and slavish fear of death: it will daunt the stoutest man that ever lived to look upon death, when he can see nothing but hell beyond it. Note, 4. That Jesus Christ, by dying has freed all his children from this servile and tormenting fear of death. 1. Christ has taken away the true reason of the fear of death, namely, the curse and condemnation of the law of God. "The sting of death is sin, and the strength of sin is the law;" death has its wounding power from sin, and sin hath its condemning power from the law. 2. Christ has assured believers that they shall not be losers, but gainers, yea, great gainers by death, considering the private evils freed from, and the positive good they shall rest in.

16 For verily he took not on him the nature of angels; but he took on him the seed of Abraham.

It may be rendered from the original thus: "He caught not hold on angels, but on man he caught hold." A metaphor taken from a person that catches hold of another, who is falling down some deep and dangerous precipice, to his inevitable destruction: such a good and kind office did the Son of God for us, when he suffered angels to fall headlong from that state of happiness in which they were created, into that abyss and gulph of misery into which they had plunged themselves by their voluntary transgression; the like unto which man had also done, had he not been seasonably caught by the Son of God in the arms of preventing grace and mercy. Learn, That was not the angelical, but the human nature: it was the nature of fallen man, and not of lapsed angels, which the Son of God did vouchsafe to assume, and take into a personal union with his Godhead. Quest. Why would not Christ take upon himself the nature of angels? Probably, because they were the first transgressors, and God might judge it decent that the first breach of the divine law should be punished with death, to secure obedience for the future; or, 2. Because the angels sinned without a tempter, they had no superior rank of creatures already fallen, as man had, to seduce and draw them from their obedience to their Creator's will: or, 3. Because the angels sinned against more clear and convictive light and knowledge: there was nothing of weakness, deceit, or ignorance, to lessen the malignity of their sin; they did not sin by mis-persuasion, but of purposed malice. But, after all, the reason why Christ took not hold on angels, but on man, the seed of Abraham, must be ultimately resolved into the sovereignty of God's will, who will be merciful to whom he will be merciful. Lord! why mercy, thy milder attribute, should be exercised towards man, and justice, thy severer attribute, be executed upon angels! Why vessels of clay are chosen, and vessels of gold rejected, must be resolved into that love which passes knowledge! And we shall never fully understand the riches of this discriminating grace, until thy dear Son shall appear at the great day as their Judge, and our Justifier: then shall we feel the comfort of these words, that "Christ took not upon him the nature of angels, but the seed of Abraham."

17 Wherefore in all things it behoved him to be made like unto his brethren; that he might be a merciful and faithful highpriest in things pertaining to God, to make reconciliation for the sins of the people.

18 For in that he himself hath suffered, being tempted, he is able to succour them that are tempted.

In these two verses our apostle illustrates what he had taught before, and confirms his foregoing proposition concerning Christ's participating of flesh and blood, and acquaints us here with one special end of it, namely, to be such an High-Priest as our exigencies and necessities did require: for we being persons obnoxious to temptations and sufferings of all sorts, the wisdom of God, and the nature of the thing required it, that Christ our Great High-Priest, should in a special manner be able to relieve and help us: in order to this, Observe, 1. How our apostle reports and re-asserts, that Christ was in all things, or every manner of way, made like unto his brethren; that is, he assumed the human nature with all its essential proprieties, subjected to temptations and sufferings, but not to sin, for that would have been so far from conducting to the end aimed at, that it would have been utterly destructive of it. Had he been himself a sinner, he could never have satisfied the justice of God for our sins. Observe, 2. The general end of Christ's conformity to his brethren; namely, that he might be a merciful and faithful High-Priest. That he might be our Priest, it was necessary that he should partake of our nature; for every highpriest for men must be taken from among men; this is not work for an angel, nor for God himself as such: and that he might be our merciful and faithful High-Priest, he was subject to sufferings and temptations. With what condolency and tender sympathy doth he exercise acts of mercy and compassion towards the human nature; and thus he was merciful, and with great condescension and care doth he take notice of all the concerns of his brethren under wants and sorrows, under all their temptation and sufferings: and thus he is our faithful as well as merciful High-Priest. Learn hence, That such was the unspeakable love of Christ towards his brethren, that he would refuse no condition of life, neither sufferings nor temptations, to fit him for the discharge of his office, which he had undertaken for them. Christ suffered, and was tempted, that he might succour them that are tempted: he suffered under all his temptations, but sinned in none: he suffered being tempted, but sinned not being tempted. Observe, 3. The special design and end of Christ's being our great High Priest; namely, To make reconciliation for the sins of the people. From whence learn, That the principal work of our Lord Jesus Christ, as our great High-Priest, and from which all other actings of his in that office, do flow, was to make reconciliation or atonement for sin; his intercession in heaven is founded on earth. The Socinians, therefore, who deny the satisfaction of Christ, and his dying as a propitiation, or propitiatory sacrifice for sin, taking from us our hopes and happiness; from Christ, his office and honor; from God, his grace and glory; they do indeed allow of a reconciliation in words, but it is of men to God, and not of God to men: they plead the expediency of our being reconciled to God by faith and obedience, but deny the necessity of God's being reconciled to us by sacrifice, satisfaction, and atonement; so resolved are these men to be as little as may be beholden to Jesus Christ, that rather than grant that he has made any reconciliation for us by his blood, they deny that there was any need of such a reconciliation at all, never considering the inflexibility of God's justice, or the impartiality of his indignation against sin. Oh! the depths of satan; and

Oh! the stupidity and blindness of those men that are taken captive by him at his pleasure.

CHAPTER III.

Our apostle having, in the foregoing chapter, asserted the doctrine of our Saviour's priesthood, according to his constant method, he comes in this chapter to make application to that doctrine which he had declared and confirmed, that seeing Christ was so highly dignified and exalted, being the Apostle and High-Priest of our profession, we should diligently consider him, both what he is in himself, and what he is to us: this teaches us, that all the doctrines of the gospel, especially those concerning the persons and offices of Jesus Christ, ought to be improved by us unto practice and obedience.

WHEREFORE, holy brethren, partakers of the heavenly calling, consider the Apostle and High-Priest of our profession, Christ Jesus;

These words are an exhortation to the believing Hebrews, to consider and ponder in their hearts the high dignity and excellency of Christ, as the great Prophet and Apostle of his church; and in them. Observe, 1. The title given to the Hebrews, unto whom the exhortation is directed; he styles them, 1. Holy brethren, so they were all by external profession, and many of them, no doubt, by internal sanctification. Learn hence, that all the professors of the gospel are obliged to be holy, and such as are real professors of it, are sanctified by the Holy Ghost, and made truly and really holy. 2. Partakers of the heavenly calling; that is, of that calling from heaven which makes you heirs of heaven, implying, that the only way to attain the saving knowledge of Christ in the gospel, is by means of an effectual heavenly calling. Observe, 2. The duty exhorted to, and that is diligent consideration, Consider Christ Jesus; that is, rationally attend unto, and with great attention of mind ponder upon the undertaking of the Son of God: for if you consider him in his person and offices, you will firmly adhere to him and his most holy and excellent religion, without entanglements unto Judaism. Learn thence, that the spiritual and deep mysteries of the gospel, especially those which concern the person and offices of our Lord Jesus Christ, do require our deep and diligent, our most attentive and serious consideration. Observe, 3. The title given to Jesus Christ, the object of this consideration; he is styled the Apostle and High-Priest of our profession; that is, the first and chief apostle sent of God to be the prime preacher of the gospel, the first legate sent from heaven, and the great High-Priest that mediates between God and man. Here note, that the function of an apostle and highpriest were the greatest functions that ever God instituted in his church: none greater than an highpriest under the law, none greater than an apostle under the gospel, both of them never conjoined in one man but here. Learn hence, that the Lord Jesus Christ is all in all unto his church, the King, Priest, Prophet, and Apostle of it, all in one: consider the Apostle and High-Priest of our profession,

2 Who was faithful to him that appointed him, as also Moses was faithful in all his house.

Because the Jews had generally too high an opinion of Moses, our apostle here enters upon a comparison between Christ and Moses, thus; "as Moses was faithful, so was Christ in declaring the will, the whole will of God unto his church. Was Moses universally faithful, faithful in all his house? So did the faithfulness of Christ extend itself to all the church. Did Moses do every thing according to the institution and appointment of God? So was Christ faithful to him that appointed him, doing all that in and for the church, which God had commanded him, and nothing else." Learn hence, that the worship of God in his household and family, the church, is for the substance of it, no less perfectly and completely ordered and ordained by our Lord Jesus Christ, now under the gospel, than it was by Moses of old under the law; I say, as to the substance of it, not as to every particular circumstance. As, for example, the manner of celebrating the passover, in every minute circumstance of it, is set down by Moses; how it must be killed, and how eaten; but Christ has not so set down for the sacrament; a general command we have to do this in remembrance of him; but neither the time when, nor place where, nor gestures in which, is particularly and expressively mentioned. The gospel, which teaches us a more spiritual way of serving God, is not so particular in the circumstances or worship as the law was, and yet "Christ was faithful to him that appointed him, as Moses was faithful in all his house."

3 For this man was counted worthy of more glory than Moses, inasmuch as he who hath builded the house, hath more honor than the house.

4 For every house is builded by some man: but he that built all things is God.

5 And Moses verily was faithful in all his house, as a servant, for a testimony of those things which were to be spoken after;

6 But Christ, as a Son over his own house: whose house are we, if we hold fast the confidence, and the rejoicing of the hope firm unto the end.—

Our apostle having, in the preceding verses, entered upon a comparison between Christ and Moses, and showed in general wherein they were alike and did agree; he proceeds now to evince the presence of Christ, and to show in sundry signal instances his exaltation above Moses; this man, meaning the Messiah, was counted worthy of more glory than Moses; &c. As if he had said, "Christ is as much more honorable than Moses, as the maker and master of the house is more honorable than the house: he that buildeth the house hath more honor than the house; but Christ built the house, and Moses was only of the house, or a part of it; therefore Christ ought to have more honor than Moses, for all families or houses are founded by some man; but he that built the church is the same that made all things, namely, God." Another proposition, proving the same conclusion, we have in the next verses: thus, he that is a son over his own house, is of more honor than a servant in the house of another. But Christ is a Son over his own house; Moses was only a servant in the house of another; therefore more honor his due to Christ than is payable to Moses. Learn hence, 1. That the church is God's house, a building of God, a sacred building, his special temple, the place of his constant and fixed residence. Learn, 2. That the building of the church, is so great and glorious a work, as that it could not be effected by any but him who was truly and really God: such is the wisdom of its contrivance, that none but a God could build it, and such omnipotent power was required in the building of it, that we may admire its excellency, but cannot comprehend it. Learn, 3. That Christ, the builder of his church, the house of God, is worthy of all glory and honor, upon the account of that his building; he had indeed an essential glory from all eternity, the same with that of God the Father, which was clouded for a season, by his taking upon himself the form of a servant: but there is a farther honor and glory which he received in his exaltation as Head of the church, and as Lord and Heir of the whole creation, which renders him the object of religious adoration. Learn, 4. That although every one that is employed as an instrument in building the house of God, and is faithful in his work and trust, is with Moses worthy of great honor, yet the honor of all such instruments put together, is inferior and subordinate to the glory and honor of Jesus Christ, the chief builder of the church.

—Whose house are we, if we hold fast the confidence, and the rejoicing of the hope firm unto the end.

The apostle having thus confirmed his argument, returns (according to his usual manner) to make application of it unto the Hebrews, and improves it for enforcement of his exhortation unto constancy and perseverance. Whose house are we; that is, believers who worship him according to the gospel are so, upon this condition, that we hold fast our confidence; that is, the confident profession of our christian faith, and the joy and glorying in our hopes of the promised blessedness unto the end. Learn hence, That as it is an eminent privilege to be of the house of Christ, or a part of that house, so the greatness of the privilege requires an answerable duty; because we are the house of God, it becomes us to hold fast our confidence unto the end. Learn, 2. That as at all times, so especially in a time of trial and persecution, constancy in our christian profession, is and will be a good evidence, both to ourselves and others, that we are living stones in the house of God; his house we are, if we hold fast our confidence unto the end.

7 Wherefore as the Holy Ghost saith, to-day if ye will hear his voice.

8 Harden not your hearts, as in the provocation, in the day of temptation in the wilderness:

9 When your fathers tempted me, provoked me, and saw my works forty years.

10 Wherefore I was grieved with that generation, and said, they do always err in their heart; and they have not known my ways, 11 So I swear in my wrath, they shall not enter into my rest.

The apostle having proved our Lord Jesus Christ to be the great Prophet and Teacher of his church, doth in these words draw an inference from the foregoing conclusion: namely, that seeing Christ is the chief apostle and prophet of his church, seeing he was a teacher sent of God to instruct the world in the practice of their reasonable duty, that therefore it is our obliged duty to hearken to Christ's voice, and that now to comply with his call, and that presently: "wherefore, as the Holy Ghost saith, to-day if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts." Observe here, 1. The person spoken of, and that is Christ; his voice; that is, the voice of Christ our great Apostle, speaking in his gospel. Observe, 2. A duty required of us in reference to his person, and that is to hear and obey Christ's voice. Observe, 3. The circumstance of time, and the special season when this duty of hearing Christ's voice is to be performed, and that is presently; "to-day if ye will hear his voice." Observe, 4. A cautionary direction given to all those that sit under the dispensation of the gospel, and hear Christ's voice speaking to them therein; namely to take heed that they harden not their hearts. Learn hence, 1. that the voice which speaks unto us in and by the gospel, is Christ's voice, 2. That it is the great duty of all those that sit under the preaching of the gospel, to hear and obey Christ's voice. Learn, 3. That it is not only their duty to hear Christ's voice, and answer his call in the gospel, but to do it now, to do it presently, and without delay; "to-day if ye will hear his voice." Learn, 4. That it is the duty and ought to be the special care, of all those that sit under the dispensation of the gospel, and that hear Christ's voice speaking to them therein, to take heed that they harden not their hearts. Observe, lastly, from our apostle's drawing an instance out of the Old Testament, namely, that of the Jews in the wilderness, to instruct the Hebrews to make use of the present season for hearing the voice of Christ under the New Testament; we learn, that Old Testament examples are New Testament instructions. The examples of our forefathers are of use and concernment to us, and ought to be the objects of our deepest consideration: "Your fathers tempted me, and I was grieved with that generation."

12 Take heed, brethren, lest there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God.

The apostle having propounded the example of the Israelites, in the foregoing verses, to the consideration of the Hebrews, here he advises them to take care that they do not imitate the old Israelites in their unbelief, which will endanger our revolt from God now, as it did theirs then; "take heed lest there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief." Where note, the nature of sin in general, and of unbelief in particular, declared; it is a departure from God, from the living God; the root of all apostasy is cursed infidelity: unbelief sets all the corrupt lusts and affections of the heart at liberty to act according to their own perverse nature and inclination; for it makes the soul negligent, careless, and slothful in opposing sin. Note farther, that there is need of great care and heedfulness, of circumspection and watchfulness, lest at any time, or by any means, there should be found in us an evil heart of unbelief, to occasion our backsliding from Christ, and the profession of our faith in him; "take heed lest there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief, in departing, &c."

13 But exhort one another daily, while it is called, to-day lest any of you be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin.

These words afford a special remedy against the fore-mentioned evil of apostasy, and that is mutual exhortation to constancy of religion: "exhort one another," ministers the people, and the people their ministers, and themselves mutually. Learn hence, that sedulous and mutual exhortation is a special means to preserve christians from the sin and danger of apostasy from Christ, and his holy religion; exhort one another daily. Observe next, how this duty is amplified by the properties of it, it must be frequent, exhort one another daily; and seasonably, whilst it is called to-day. We have but an uncertain season for the due performance of most certain duties; how long it will be called to-day, we know not; the day of life is uncertain, and so is the day of the gospel; a summer's day for clearness, a winter's day for shortness; our working day is a wasting day. Observe, lastly, the great peril and danger which attend the neglecters and neglecting of this duty, lest any of you be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin. Learn hence, that sin is very full of deceit, or exceedingly deceitful. 2. That the deceit which is in sin, and inseparable from it, tends exceedingly to the hardening of the sinner. There are three eminent evils in sin; pollution, by which it defiles; baseness, by which it dishonors; deceitfulness, by which it deludes us with a false expectation of what it is never able to perform.

14 For we are made partakers of Christ, if we hold the beginning of our confidence steadfast unto the end;

That is, hereby we shall declare ourselves to be made partakers of Christ and his saving benefits, if we persevere in the faith of the gospel, of which we have begun to make a profession; intimating, that such christians as do renounce the profession of christianity, either through fear or flattery, were never made partakers of Christ, nor savingly united to him: no better evidence of our interest in Christ, than what perseverance gives.

15 While it is said, to-day if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts, as in the provocation.

16 For some, when they had heard, did provoke: howbeit not all that came out of Egypt by Moses.

The intention of our apostle in these and the following verses, is to confirm his preceding exhortation, to hearken unto the voice of Christ, speaking in and by the gospel: and this he does by propounding the example of the Israelites, who came forth out of Egypt under the conduct of Moses, and heard the voice of God in the wilderness; they all came out of Egypt under the conduct of Moses, and all heard the voice of God in the wilderness; howbeit all did not provoke, but only some. Note here, 1. How the apostle again repeateth over the words of the Psalmist, which he had mentioned before, v. 7, 8. "To-day if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts." From whence we may learn, that the repetition, yea, frequent repetition of matters of moment, is very useful and necessary: we can never hear that too often, which we can never learn too well. Note farther, the privilege which the Israelites of old enjoyed in the wilderness, and which we now enjoy under the gospel: both theirs and ours is this, to hear the voice of God. This is a very great privilege, but privileges are as men use them; in themselves they are very valuable, but unto us they are no more than as they are prized and improved by us. Many, yea, most of them to whom Christ himself preached, finally perished; they got nothing by hearing his doctrine, through their unbelief, but an aggravation of their sin, and hastening of their ruin. Christ himself, in his whole ministry, was a stone of stumbling, and a rock of offence to both the houses of Israel. Let not his minister then be discouraged at the smallness of his own success, knowing that they shall be a sweet savor unto God, as well in them that perish, as in them that are saved. Note lastly, that although many, very many in the wilderness that heard the voice of God, provoked him, yet not all, ver. 16. Some when they heard, did provoke, howbeit, not all that came out of Egypt. Learn hence, that in the most general and visible apostasy of the church, God evermore reserves a remnant to himself to bear witness for himself by their faith and obedience; they provoked, howbeit, not all. God always has, and ever will reserve a remnant of faithful and undefiled souls unto himself, to maintain and keep up his own kingdom in the world, and to have a revenue of special glory from them, and by them, so long as the world continues.

17 But with whom was he grieved forty years? was it not with them that had sinned, whose carcases fell in the wilderness?

18 And to whom sware he that they should not enter into his rest, but to them that believed not?

19 So we see that they could not enter in because of unbelief.

Observe here, The party grieved, God; the parties grieving, the people of Israel: the time of both, forty years; the occasion of this grief, sin in general, unbelief in particular, hardness of heart, and final apostasy; the punishment of their sin, their carcasses fell in the wilderness. Learn, 1. That sin is the proper object of God's displeasure, the only thing he is displeased with for itself, and with the sinner for sin's sake. Learn, 2. That public sins, or the sins of societies, are great, very great provocations unto God: it was not for their personal and private sins that God was thus provoked, but for their confederacy in sinning. Learn, 3. From their exemplary punishment, their carcasses fell in the wilderness; that God sometimes makes men who have been wickedly exemplary in sin, to be righteously exemplary in punishment.

20 And to whom sware he, that they should not enter into his rest, but to them that believed not?

The rest here spoken of is the land of Canaan, so called, because God promised it to Abraham, to plant and settle his posterity in it; and because it typified heaven, that eternal rest which God has promised for his saints; into this rest the rebellious and unbelieving Israelites must not enter; God sware the contrary, he sware by himself, he sware in his wrath, he sware to make his sentence irrevocable and immutable. Lord! thine oath stands as a bar against all unbelieving sinners at this day, as it did against the Israelites of old, and cuts off all hope of future entrance into thy eternal rest which they have eternally forfeited: "to whom sware he that they should not enter into his rest, but to them that believed not?" Learn hence, 1. That unbelief is the immediate root and cause of all provoking sins. Did men believe the happiness of heaven, they would not neglect it; did they believe the torments of hell, they would avoid them. Learn, 2. That the oath of God is engaged against all unbelief, and no unbeliever shall enter into the rest of God, ver. 19. "We see they could not enter in because of unbelief."

CHAPTER IV.

This chapter is of the same nature, and carrieth on the same design with the foregoing; both of them contain an exhortation to faith, obedience, and perseverance; and inasmuch as the earthly Canaan was a type and figure of the heavenly rest, the apostle exhorteth all christians to take heed lest by unbelief they miss of the latter, as the Israelites did of the former.

LET us therefore fear, lest a promise being left us of entering into his rest, any of you should seem to come short of it.

As if the apostle had said, "seeing you have so dreadful an example of God's wrath executed upon your fathers in the wilderness for their unbelief, take heed of their sin, lest ye suffer the like punishment." Here note, 1. The manner of the exhortation, and how the apostle includes himself in the admonition, Let us fear; it is wise and safe for the ministers of God to include themselves in the exhortations and admonitions which they give to others; for they need excitement, and the means of establishment, as well as others. Note, 2. The affection of fear, which our apostle recommends for their preservation from falling; by which he means a fear of care, diligence and circumspection. Let us fear lest we come short and fail. Fear is a good monitor, and the best preservative from sin. Note, 2. The duty exhorted to, lest a promise of rest being made, we should fall short of attaining it, as the Israelites did that fell in the wilderness. Learn hence, 1. That it is matter of great and tremendous consequence, to have the promises of God propounded to us; they are either a savor of life unto life, or of death unto death; one of these two will certainly be the consequent of their proposal. God will demand a strict account of his sons of men, of the entertainment given to his promises and threatenings. Learn, 2. That they which mix not the promises of God with faith, shall utterly come short of entering into God's rest. Learn, 3. That the failing of men through unbelief, doth no way cause the promises of God to fail or cease; the veracity of God is engaged for the stability of the promise; so that though men, by their unbelief, may disappoint themselves of their expectations, yet they cannot bereave God of his faithfulness.

2 For unto us was the gospel preached, as well as unto them: but the word preached did not profit them, not being mixed with faith in them that heard it.

Observe here, 1. That the gospel is no new doctrine, no new law, but one and the same to all persons, and at all times, ever since the first publication of it in the original promises, Gen. iii. 15. It is the same for substance, though not for clearness of revelation; the same gospel was preached to Adam, to Abraham, to the Israelites in the wilderness, which was preached by Christ and his apostles, but with clearer light, evidence, and power in the administration of it: Unto us, was the gospel, the same gospel preached as well as unto them. Observe, 2. That the generality of persons who have sat under the preaching of the gospel in all ages, have not savingly profited by it, the word preached did not profit; from the beginning it has been so, partly through carelessness, and want of due attention, in the hearers, and partly for want of meditation upon, and particular application of the word unto themselves after they have heard it; partly through the neglect of prayer for a blessing upon the word they hear: for these and the like causes, the word preached did not, nor does not profit. Observe, 3. That unbelief in man's heart is the great cause of that unprofitableness which is found in the word preached; unbelief hinders the efficacy of the word preached, by withholding men from yielding their assent to the truths they hear, by hindering them from applying, from a particular and close applying of the word they hear, to their own consciences: and unbelief hinders men from calling upon God, by prayer, for a blessing upon the word they hear. Observe, 4. That the word preached then profits, and only then, when it is a mixed word: the original word is a metaphor, taken either from seed, from meat, or from physic. As seed must be mixed with the soil, and with the dew and rain of heaven, or it will never spring and grow; or as meat must be mixed with the stomach, or it will not nourish; and as physic must meet and mix with the humor, gripe and put the patient to some pain, or it will never cure: so must the word be rooted in the heart, or it will never fructify in the life; it must be mixed with faith, with love, with humility, with patience, or it will never bring forth fruit with joy.

3 For we which have believed, do enter into rest, as he said, As I have sworn in my wrath, if they shall enter into my rest; although the works were finished from the foundation of the world.—

As if the apostle had said, there is a rest promised to us believers, as well as the typical rest Canaan was promised to the Israelites. Learn thence, that the state of believers under the gospel, is a state of blessed rest. There is a spiritual rest which believers obtain entrance into by Jesus Christ, in the faith and worship of the gospel, besides their eternal rest in heaven. This spiritual rest consists in peace with God, in satisfaction and acquiescence in God, and in means of communion with God. Learn, 2. That it is faith alone which is the only way and means of entering into this blessed state of rest: we who have believed do enter into rest; as unbelief cuts off from, so faith gives an entrance into the rest of God. It follows, —As I have sworn in my wrath, if they shall enter into my rest:—

Observe, here is a threatening, confirmed by the oath of God, that they who believe not should never enter into his rest; and promise that such as do believe shall certainly enter. Learn thence, that there is a mutual in-being of promises and threatenings in the covenant, which must be considered together, and cannot be separated from each other. Where there is a promise expressed, there a threatening is tacitly understood; and where there is a threatening expressed, be it ever so severe, yet there is a gracious promise included: nay, sometimes God gives out a threatening for no other end, but that men may lay hold upon the promise. Thus the threatening that Nineveh should perish, was given out mercifully that Nineveh might not be destroyed. It follows.

—Although the works were finished from the foundation of the world.

That is, Almighty God, when he had perfected and finished the works of creation in six days, rested on the seventh day from his labor; showing us, by his own example, that work and labor must precede our rest: after God had finished the glorious work of creation, he returns as it were into his own eternal rest, and directs us to seek rest in himself; and, by his own example teaches us, that our days of labor must go before our day of rest.

4 For he spake in a certain place of the seventh day on this wise, and God did rest the seventh day from all his works.

5 And in this place again, if they shall enter into my rest.

6 Seeing, therefore, it remaineth that some must enter therein, and they to whom it was first preached, entered not in because of unbelief.

7 Again, he limiteth a certain day, saying in David, to-day, after so long a time; as it is said, to-day, if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts.

8 For if Jesus had given them rest, then would he not afterward have spoken of another day.

For the clearer understanding of these words, we must know, that there is a threefold rest spoken of in scripture, all which are called His; that is, God's rest, being all of his appointing and providing; namely, 1. The rest of the sabbath-day, in remembrance of God's resting from the work of creation. 2. The typical rest in the land of Canaan. 3. An eternal rest with God in heaven, of which the sabbath and the Israelites' rest in Canaan were a type and figure. Now the apostle's design is to prove that the rest which God principally intends for his people is this last rest, namely, an everlasting rest with himself in heaven; and this he evidently proves, because if that rest which they had obtained in the land of Canaan, under the conduct of Joshua, (called in Syriac, Jesus) had been all the rest which Almighty God intended for them, then it had been needless for David in the xivth Psalm, which was penned a long time after, even some thousands of years, to make mention of any other rest. But this he does; and therefore infers, that there is a third rest yet to come, which, by the preaching of the gospel, was now proposed to them, and that under the same promises and threatenings with the former. If Jesus or Joshua had given them the true spiritual and eternal rest here spoken of, in Canaan, then would not David afterward have spoken of another rest after their rest in Canaan; which seeing he has done, the apostle concludes, there must yet remain a farther rest to be enjoyed by the people of God. From the whole note, that God has, by promise, given his people a full assurance of enjoying a rest upon condition of faith; and this another manner of rest than that of Canaan, which the Israelites of old did enjoy.

9 There remaineth, therefore, a rest to the people of God.

From the foregoing premises the apostle draws this conclusion. That there remaineth yet a more glorious, perfect, and complete rest for the people of God. Observe here, 1. Something implied, namely, that the people of God, whilst here on earth, have work to do, and labor incumbent upon them. Rest and labor are correlates, the one supposes the other; the apostle affirming, that there is rest remaining for them, strongly supposes that there is labor at present belonging to them. God's people are an industrious working people: Christ's present call is to service and duty. Observe, 2. That God has already given his people a foretaste of, and some entrance into rest, during their present state of work and labor; the better to enable them for that, and the more to sweeten that to them. The state of sin is a state of all labor and no rest; the state of glory is all rest and no labor; but the state of grace is a mixed state, partly of labor, and partly of rest; of labor in respect of ourselves, in respect of the world, against sin, under affliction and persecution: but of rest in Christ, in his love, in his favor, and grace; and thus our labor makes our rest sweet, and our rest makes our labor easy. Observe, 3. That there is reserved and laid up in heaven, for all the people of God that serve him laboriously and faithfully here on earth, a sure and certain, a complete and perfect, a glorious and everlasting rest; for its quantity, it is full of rest; for its quality, it is unmixed rest; rest, and nothing but rest: for its duration, it is an eternal rest; the least fear of losing or leaving it, would imbitter all the joy which the saints taste in the fruition and enjoyment of it: there remaineth, or there is laid up and reserved, a rest for the people of God.

10 For he that is entered into his rest, he also hath ceased from his own works, as God did from his.

Into the spiritual heavenly rest, mentioned in the foregoing verse, the believer is said to have entered into this verse; and this is done two ways, initially, inchoatively, and imperfectly in this life; fully, finally, perfectly and completely in the next. They have now a present title and right to enter into this rest, the actual enjoyment and full possession of it is to come. Observe, 1. Believers have already entered initially into this rest whilst here on earth, and accordingly have ceased from their own works; that is, the works of the flesh, the service of sin; these they have discarded by repentance and mortification. Here note, that before conversion a person is doing his own works, fulfilling his own will, and not God's; but after he ceases from all sinful works, inchoatively, though not perfectly; "he that hath entered into his rest, hath ceased from his own works." Observe, 2. That when believers have finished all their works of evangelical obedience, they shall then, and not till then, fully and finally enter into God's rest, and be for ever happy in the enjoyment of it. All men desire rest, but it is not to be found on earth, but in heaven, not in the creature, but in God. O happy they, which, believing the excellency and glory of this rest, do work, wait, and wish for it, and with diligence and constancy, use all holy endeavours for the attaining and securing of it.

11 Let us labor, therefore, to enter into that rest, lest any man fall after the same example of unbelief.

As if our apostle had said, "seeing there is such an eternal glorious rest prepared for, and promised to believers, then it is the duty, and ought to be the endeavour of every one of us to secure our title to it, and our interest in it, by a steadfast faith, and persevering obedience, lest, following the example of our fathers in the wilderness, we fall and perish as they did. Learn hence, 1. That there is a rest promised to us under the gospel, as there was to the Jews of old under the dispensation of the law. Learn, 2. That the Jews heretofore, by the sin in general, by unbelief and disobedience in particular, did fall short of the rest proposed to them, and never entered in to it, but were destroyed by the just indignation of God. Learn, 3. That in the Israelites' sin and God's displeasure, in the event of the one, and in the effects of the other, that there was an example set forth, of what would be our own lot and portion, if through unbelief we fall short of the rest which the gospel proposes to us: "Let us labor to enter into that rest, lest any man fall after the same example of unbelief." It is our duty, to improve examples, lest we be made examples of divine displeasure. Learn, 4. That we cannot rationally have the least expectation of escaping vengeance under the guilt of those sins, which others, in like manner, being guilty of, have not escaped; for with God there is no respect of persons. Did the Israelites miss of the earthly Canaan? So shall we of the heavenly through unbelief.

12 For the word of God is quick and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow; and is a discernor of the thoughts and intents of the heart.

As if the apostle had said, "take heed especially of unbelief: for the word of God, or doctrine of the gospel, will quickly find you out, if you be guilty of it. There is a piercing power in the word of God, through the energy and efficacious operation of the Holy Spirit; it is here compared to a sword, because it does divide things most nearly united, and discover things most inward and secret, or rather God by the word doth this; he by the word pierces, "even to the dividing asunder of the soul and spirit; that is, the actings of the understanding, and the motions of the will and affections, it cuts asunder the most resolute and compact purposes of the will: yea, it pierces to the marrow, that is, the most secret and close contrivances of the soul, the thoughts and intents of the heart. O mighty power of the word; and of God in and by the word, to convey strength to the weak, wisdom to the simple, comfort to the sorrowful, light to the blind, and life to the dead; it brings souls out of the captivity of sin into the blessed liberty of faith in Christ.

13 Neither is there any creature that is not manifest in his sight; but all things are naked and open unto the eyes of him with whom we have to do.

There is not any one place of scripture, I think, which more fully informs us of the perfect and exact knowledge of Almighty God, as to our persons and things, than this before us. Observe, 1. The object, all and every thing, our persons, our actions, the manner of our actions, the design and end of our actions: he knows what we have been and done, and what we will be and do. Observe, 2. The full manifestation and clear representation of all persons and things unto God. 1. All things are here said to be naked, unclothed, their dress and paint taken off; these words are an allusion to bodies, which being stripped and unclothed, all see what they are; there may be many deformities, blemishes, yea, ulcers, upon a body undiscovered, while it is clothed and covered; but when naked, every scar appears, and nothing is hid; all things are naked in his sight; that is, he as plainly discerns what they are, as we discern what a body is that stands naked before us. The knowledge which God has of persons and things, is a clear and distinct knowledge. 2. All things are here said to be open as well as naked, unto God; a metaphor taken, says St. Chrysostom, from the sacrificed beasts, which being excoriated, their skins plucked off, they were cut down from the neck to the rump, so that all the inwards of the beast lay bare, and every part might be clearly seen: it is one thing to see a sheep alive, with its skin and fleece on, and another thing to see it naked and flayed; but a farther thing to see it opened and embowelled, with all its intestines and inwards exposed to the eye. Others think there is in the original word an allusion to anatomists, who open and dissect human bodies, the heart, the liver, the lungs, the bowels, all exactly appear whether sound or decayed: such a kind of anatomy doth God make upon man's heart: his piercing eye sees and discerns what is flesh, and what is spirit in us, what is faith, what is fancy, what is grace in reality, and what in appearance only. Doubtless the phrase doth signify a most intimate, full, and thorough knowledge of all persons, and all things, which is found in that God with whom we have to do, and to whom we must give an account for all that we have done.

14 Seeing then that we have a great High-priest, that is passed into the heavens, Jesus the Son of God, let us hold fast our profession.

Our apostle comes now to assert the priesthood of Christ, and to set forth the dignity and excellency of his office; from whence he encourages the believing Hebrews to perseverance and steadfastness in the profession of their faith in him. Here note, 1. The eminency of the person, Jesus the Son of God; not by supernatural conception only, but by eternal generation also: this is the eminency of that person who is superior to men and angels. Note, 2. The excellency of his office, a Priest, an High-Priest, a great High-Priest: not barely equal with Aaron, but superior to him, and infinitely above him: the universal supreme Pontiff of heaven and earth, in comparison of whom all other priests, even the highest of them, were but shadows. Note, 3. His relation to us, we have him; that is, special interest in him, making profession of obedience to him; and he is passed into the heavens, to open heaven to us, and to make intercession with the Father for us. This entrance of Christ's into heaven, was shadowed forth by the highpriest's entrance into the holy of holies here on earth. Note, 4. Our obligation to him, let us hold fast our profession; that is, the profession of our faith in him; without wavering, with constancy and perseverance. Learn, hence, 1. That the great opposition, ever has been, and always will be made unto the steadfastness of believers in their holy profession. The apostle's exhortation plainly supposes opposition. Learn, 2. That it is our duty, in the midst of all opposition, to hold fast our holy profession, without either apostatizing in the whole or declining in parts of it. The glory of God is in the highest manner concerned in it, and assured destruction attends the omission of it, and that in a peculiar, terrible, and dreadful manner, Chron. x. 29. Learn, 3. That believers have great encouragement unto, and assistance in the steadfastness and constancy of their holy profession, by and from the priesthood of Jesus Christ: for as he is our High-Priest, he knows our temptations, pities us under them, affords us actual help and belief against them, he interceding with the Father, that our faith may not fail, and that we may be kept by the almighty power of God, through faith unto salvation. Learn, 4. That Jesus Christ, our great High-Priest, was the Son of God; and the necessity of his being so, did thus far appear; 1. Before the entrance of sin there was no need of the office of priesthood between God and man: for every one was then in his own name to go to God with his worship, which would have been accepted according to the law of creation. 2. Sin being entered into the world, there was no more worship to be performed immediately unto God; two cannot walk or converse together, except they be agreed. 3. That the worship of God might be again restored in and to the world, it was indispensably necessary that some one should interpose between sinners and the holy God: for should sinners approach him immediately in their own names, he would be unto them a consuming fire. 4. No creature could undertake the office of being a priest for the church of God, which now consisteth all of sinners: neither the nature of the office, which was to interpose between God and sinners, nor the quality of the work, which is to make atonement for sin, would admit of it. 5. Jesus Christ therefore undertaking to be a priest, for sinners, it was necessary he should be what he was, the very Son of God: which denotes his divine person and nature, and that our great High-priest was essentially and truly God: seeing we have a great High-Priest, even Jesus the Son of God, let us hold fast our profession.

15 For we have not an highpriest which cannot be touched with the feelings of our infirmities; but was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin.

These words contain a farther description of Christ our great High Priest, by his merciful disposition towards his people; he is said to be touched; that is, sensibly affected with the infirmities, that is, the miseries, sufferings and calamities, which the human nature is exercised with, and exposed to. Our Lord Jesus Christ, now in heaven, doth exercise a tender and compassionate spirit towards his suffering children and servants here on earth: he has an experimental knowledge of what his people suffer, either from God, or from man, for God's sake, as one that is interested in them, as one concerned for them, as one related to them, yea, as being one with them. This sympathy of Christ with, and towards his suffering people, is a tender sympathy, an extensive sympathy, it reaches all our infirmities, a proportionable sympathy, answerable to every occasion, a perpetual sympathy, as long as he continues High-Priest, and we remain subject to infirmities, so long will he be touched with the feeling of them. Observe, farther, the assigned reason why our great High-Priest is so sensibly affected with our suffering condition: namely, because he was in all points tempted like as we are, sin excepted. Christ, by assuming our nature, became humbly affectionate, and by suffering our infirmities, became experimentally compassionate. Here note, that temptations may be without sin; it is not our sin to be tempted, but to comply with the temptation. 2. That Christ was tempted, yea, in all points tempted like unto us: his temptations were in all points like ours; he was tempted to sin, yet without sin. There is a twofold temptation to sin, inward and outward; inwardly Christ was not tempted to sin, outwardly he was, and with greatest vehemency assaulted both by men and devils to the worst of sin that ever man was; but he always resisted, and always overcame. Oh, what a consolation is this unto us under all our temptations, that Christ was in all things tempted like unto us, but without sin!

16 Let us, therefore, come boldly unto the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need.

These words are an inference drawn from the apostle's foregoing discourse, "seeing we have such an High-Priest as is before described, let us come with boldness, with freedom and liberty to the throne of grace, &c." Note here, 1. There is a throne of grace which believers may come unto; God has a throne of justice, and a throne of grace: if he look upon man according to the law of works, he must needs sit upon the throne of justice as a severe Lord, and strict Judge, to condemn us; but being propitiated and atoned by the blood of Christ, his throne is a throne of grace and mercy, from which he represents himself to us as a God in Christ, as a God of forgiveness, as a God in covenant, and as a God that will have communion with us. Note, 2. That believers may come holdly, and with confidence to this throne of grace; they have liberty to do it, they have authority to do it, and may have confidence and assurance of audience in the doing of it. Note, 3. That all help, succour, and spiritual assistance in every time of need, is found with God, and proceeds from mere mercy and grace in God, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need. Note, 4. That the way to obtain mercy, and find grace to help in every time of need, is by a due application of our souls for it to the throne of grace; let us come boldly to the throne of grace, that we may find help in time of need.

CHAPTER V.

Our apostle having in the foregoing chapter set forth the excellency of Christ's prophetic office, and proved him to have been a more excellent Prophet than Moses, yea, a person superior to angels, and thereupon exhorted to perseverance in the profession of the gospel, he comes now, in this, and in the following chapters, to discourse of the priesthood of Christ, as far more excellent than that of Aaron's, and consequently that there was all imaginable reason to persevere in christianity, in respect of this office likewise. In the chapter before us, the apostle informs us in the general, what an highpriest is; showing none can be so who is not called of God; and then proves Christ to be so called. For thus he speaks:

FOR every high priest taken from among men is ordained for men in things pertaining to God, that he may offer both gifts and sacrifices for sins:

Observe here, The apostle describes an highpriest several ways. 1. By his original, he is one taken from amongst men: that is, of the same nature with themselves, otherwise, he had not been capable of those compassionate impressions which are required to the due discharge of his office. Thus Christ's participation of our nature was necessary to the discharge of his office as High-Priest, and a manifest evidence that he will be tender and compassionate towards them whose nature he sustains and bears. 2. He is described by the general nature of his office, he is ordained for men in things pertaining to God; that is, he was to act and negotiate, for the good of sinful men, in things wherein they have to do more immediately with Almighty God; particularly to offer gifts, oblations, and sacrifices for their sins. Where note, that it was the entrance of sin that made the office of the priesthood necessary: had it not been for sin, every one might have gone to God in his own person, but now God will not be immediately treated with by any, but through the interposition of a Mediator; and he having first made an atonement for sin. 3. The high priest is here described by the exercise of his office, and the special discharge of his duty, which is, to offer both gifts and sacrifices for sins, that is, to give satisfaction and make atonement for sins. Here note, that the light of nature dictates to us, that something ought to be offered unto God, in acknowledgment of his supreme dominion; and because men are guilty of sin, and God essentially just, sacrifices must be offered, and a priest ordained to offer those sacrifices for the averting of his wrath, and procuring of his favor: but by what sacrifices God will be atoned, and by whom, and in what manner they must be offered, not the law of nature, but the light of scripture, divine revelation must teach us. Every high priest taken from among men, is ordained for men; that is, instituted and appointed of God, for the service of men in things pertaining to God.

2 Who can have compassion on the ignorant, and on them that are out of the way: for that he himself also is compassed with infirmity:

Our apostle proceeds in giving the character of the highpriest which God required under the law; he must have compassion for men, for sinful men, being compassed with sinful infirmities himself. Observe here, 1. A great and necessary qualification or endowment of an highpriest, he was, and is one able to have compassion; that is, able with all meekness and gentleness, with all patience and forbearance, to bear the infirmities, sins, and provocations of men, even as a nurse bears with the weakness and frowardness of a poor infant. Observe, 2. The peculiar object of his compassionate care and regard; namely, those that are ignorant, and do wander out of the way; in these two words does the apostle comprise all sorts of sinners.

whatsoever, with all sorts and kinds of sin. Observe, 3. A special reason rendered why the highpriest was thus compassionate, because he himself is compassed with infirmities; his own condition will mind him of his duty in this matter, being beset on every hand with infirmities of his own. Learn hence, 1. That it is a mighty privilege to us, that our Lord Jesus Christ, our Great High-Priest, was encompassed with the sinless infirmities of our nature. 2. That no sort of sinners are excluded from an interest in the care and love of our compassionate High-Priest; such as are ignorant, and such as are out of the way, he has compassion upon both; none are excluded, but those who by unbelief do exclude themselves, and cause the blood of the reconciling sacrifices to cry against them.

3 And by reason hereof he ought, as for the people, so also for himself, to offer for sins.

That is by reason of which infirmities he ought, both by God's command, and also from the reason and nature of the thing, as for the people, so also for himself, to offer sacrifices for sins. Note here, That this is a description of the highpriest under the law, not of our Lord Jesus Christ, our Great High-Priest under the gospel, because Christ had actually no sin of his own to offer for, being holy, harmless, and undefiled, separate from sinners. This expression therefore of offering for his own sins belongs to the weakness and imperfection of the legal highpriest. Learn hence, That it was a part of the darkness and bondage of the church under the Old Testament, that their highpriests had need to offer sacrifices for themselves, and their own sins: this they did in the view of the people. They first took care to offer for their own sins, and then for the sins of others: whosoever dealeth with God about the sins of others, ought to look well in the first place, unto his own: it is a great evidence of hypocrisy for men to be severe towards the sins of others, and careless about their own sins. Learn, 2. That such was the absolute holiness and spotless innocency of the Lord Jesus Christ our Great High-Priest, that what he offered was not for himself, but for his people. Atonement for sinners was made by him who had no sin of his own to atone for.

4 And no man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron;

5 So also Christ glorified not himself to be made an high-priest; but he that said unto him, Thou art my Son, to-day have I begotten thee.

6 As he saith also in another place, Thou art a priest for ever, after the order of Melchisedec:

The foregoing verses declare the personal qualifications of the highpriest: here we have his call and commission to this office and function: the former made him meet for it, the latter gave him right unto it. No man taketh this honor: that is, the honor of priesthood to himself, but only he that is called of God, as was Aaron, and his posterity. Note here, 1. That it is an act of sovereignty in God, to call whom he pleases to his work and service. 2. That as it is an act of sovereignty in God, so it is a special dignity and honor to us to be duly called to, as well as qualified for, his work and service. Learn, 3. That the highest excellency, and utmost necessity of any work or service to be here done for God, will, by no means warrant our undertaking of it, and engaging in it, without a lawful call unto it. Learn, 4. That the more excellent any work of God is, the more express ought to be our calling to it. No man taketh this honor upon him, but he that is called of God: it were well if our lay preachers considered this. Observe next, How the apostle applies all this to Christ: So also Christ our great High-Priest, glorified not himself to be made an High-Priest, uncalled, but he dignified him who said unto him, Thou art my Son; and thou art a priest for ever; without succession after the order, similitude, and manner of Melchisedec. Learn hence, That the office of the high priesthood over the church of God, was an honor and glory to Jesus Christ; it was so to his human nature, even as it was united to his divine nature. Christ glorified not himself to be made an High-Priest, implying that it was a glory and honor, though not assumed, but conferred: and that as Aaron was called of God, so was Christ, but in a more excellent and glorious manner. By this we understand the intolerable pride, and bold presumption of many in these times, who take upon them to officiate in matters of religion, though neither qualified for, nor called to this work: if ever any man or angel, then surely Christ might have taken this honor to himself, yet he did not uncalled: verily, this will be the eternal condemnation of all such usurpers, who, without any commission from God or man, undertake what they do not understand.

7 Who in the days of his flesh, when he had offered up prayers and supplications, with strong crying and tears, unto him that was able to save him from death, and was heard in that he feared;

Observe here, 1. A special act of Christ's priesthood or priestly office. He offered up. 2. The subject matter of his offering, supplications and prayers. 3. The intense manner of his offering, with strong cries and tears. 4. The person to whom he offered, unto God, who was able to save him from death. 5. The time of his offering; in the days of his flesh; that is, in the time of this mortal life, when clothed with our frail nature. 6. The issue and success of all this, he was heard in that he feared. Learn hence, 1. That the holy Jesus did not only take upon him our human nature, but the infirmities of our nature also. Christ had in this world a time of infirmities as well as ourselves. True, his infirmities were sinless, but sorrowful and grievous, which exposed him to all sorts of temptations and sufferings. Learn, 2. That the Lord Jesus Christ, our great High Priest, offered up most ardent prayers and supplications to Almighty God, in the days of his flesh upon his own and our behalf. The text mentions prayers and supplications, with strong cries. Learn, 3. That Christ shed tears as well as blood for a lost world;

he offered up strong cries and tears: by this he showed the truth of his humanity, and that he did not accept only the human nature, but did also assume human affections. Learn, 4. That Christ's prayers were always heard, either in kind or in equivalency: he was not specifically heard as to the passing of the cup from him, when he prayed in the garden; but he was equivalently heard as to the support of his spirit, and as to the supplies of strength, to enable him to drink the bitter cup with silence and submission; he was heard in that he feared, by being delivered, not from death, but out of death, as his followers must expect to be delivered.

8 Though he were a Son, yet learned he obedience by the things which he suffered;

Observe here, 1. Christ's eminent dignity; he was a Son, that is, the Son of God, and God himself; the word was God, John i. 1. And as the word was made flesh, so he was nearer to God than any other person; he was a Son, a sinless Son, yet a suffering Son; and he learned obedience by the things which he suffered. Observe, 2. As Christ's eminent dignity, so his exemplary obedience; he learned obedience: not by personal speculation, but by real experience; he experimentally understood what obedience was. Note here, That there are two ways of learning obedience. 1. By the comprehension of the mind. 2. By the experience of sense. Christ as God was perfect in knowledge, nothing could be added to him, but when he became man, then he came to understand and learn by sufferings, which was a new method and way of knowing. And the obedience which Christ learned, was free and voluntary, universal and complete, sincere and pure, persevering and constant. Christ learned this lesson of obedience, not barely to know it, but to do it: to learn to obey, is to obey by the things which he suffered; he did perfectly learn, and experimentally understand, what obedience was. O blessed Jesus! As didst thou, so may we learn practical obedience by the things which we suffer.

9 And, being made perfect, he became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him;

Observe here, 1. A choice and singular blessing and benefit spoken of, and that is, eternal salvation; which implies not only deliverance from hell, and redemption from eternal misery, but the obtaining of eternal life and happiness. Observe, 2. The author of this great blessing and benefit to mankind, namely, Jesus Christ, our great High-Priest, who, by making atonement for us, and reconciling us to God, is said to be the author of eternal salvation to mankind. Observe, 3. The way and means whereby he became the author of our salvation, and that was by being made perfect; the original word is an allusion to one that runs in a race, where he that wins receives the crown. Thus Christ having finished his course of sufferings; and received the reward of them, by being raised from the dead, and exalted to the right hand of God, he is said to be made perfect. Observe, 4. The qualification of the persons who are made partakers of this great benefit, or the condition upon which it is offered and tendered, and that is obedience. He became the author of eternal salvation to them that obey him.

Quest. 1. How does Christ become the author of eternal salvation? Ans. As a rule and pattern, as a price and propitiation, and as an advocate and patron: by the purity of his doctrine, as a rule; by the piety of his example as a pattern; by the merit of his obedience and sufferings, as a propitiation; and by his prevailing intercession, as our Advocate now in heaven. Where note, That the virtue of his intercession in heaven is founded on his satisfaction here on earth, in shedding of his blood for us. Quest. 2. What obedience does the gospel require as a condition, and is pleased to accept as a qualification, in those who hope for eternal salvation? Ans. Negatively, not a bare external profession of obedience, though accompanied with prophesying and working miracles, but an hearty and universal conformity, to the precepts of the gospel in sincerity and uprightness; allowing ourselves in the neglect of no known duty, nor in the practice of any known sin. Quest. 3. But is fallen man under a possibility now of performing this obedience? Ans. We are no more sufficient of ourselves, and by any power of our own, to perform the conditions of the gospel, than we are able to answer the demands of the law. But the grace of God is offered to us, and stands ready to assist us to perform the conditions which the gospel requires. Consequently, what the grace of God stands ready to enable us to do, if we be not wanting to ourselves, that may properly be said to be possible to us, and in some sense in our power to perform. Quest. 4. But is not making our obedience the condition of our salvation prejudicial to the freeness of God's grace, and the law of faith? Ans. In no wise; seeing it is acknowledged, that faith is the root of all true holiness and evangelical obedience; that we stand continually in need of the assistance of God's grace, to enable us to perform that obedience which the gospel requires, and is pleased to accept; and that God confers eternal life upon us, not for the merit of our obedience, but only for the sake of Christ. The sum of all is this, That it is indispensably necessary for a man to be a good man, that he may get to heaven; and that it is the greatest presumption in the world for any man to hope to attain salvation without obedience, and an holy life: for though our obedience cannot merit heaven; yet it does qualify and fit us for heaven; though it doth not make us worthy, yet doth it make us "meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light." And whosoever finds fault with this doctrine, finds fault with the gospel itself.

10 Called of God an high-priest, after the order of Melchisedec.

These words may be looked upon as an evidence and testimony, that the Lord Jesus Christ was, and is the author of eternal salvation to all them that obey him, because he is a Priest after the order of Melchisedec; that is, because his priesthood is eternal. Note here, 1. That God was pleased to put a signal honor upon the person and office of Melchisedec, that in him there should be an early and excellent representation made of the person and priesthood of Jesus Christ. Melchisedec was an illustrious type of Christ; he was the first personal type of Christ that ever was in the world; after him, there were many others, and he was the only type of the person of Christ that ever was in the world. Others were types of Christ in the execution of his office, but none but Melchisedec were ever types of his person for being introduced without father, without mother, without beginning of days, nor end of life, he was made like to the Son of God, of whom it is said, who can declare his generation? And farther, Melchisedec was a type of Christ in these two great offices of a King and a Priest, which none but he ever was. Note, 2. That the priesthood of Christ was not after the order of Aaron, which was to expire, and not to last long, but after the order of Melchisedec, which was to continue and last for ever: thou art a priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec. The priesthood of Christ is an eternal priesthood, he ever liveth to make intercession for us.

11 Of whom we have many things to say, and hard to be uttered; seeing ye are dull of hearing.

That is, of which priesthood of Christ, as compared with Melchisedec, we have much to say, which is not easy to make intelligible by words, to those that are ignorant and dull of understanding. Learn hence, 1. That all scripture truths are not equally easy to be understood, but require a peculiar diligence in our attendance upon them, that they may be understood. Learn, 2. That it is the incapacity of hearers, through dulness and slothfulness, and want of preparatory knowledge, which makes scripture teaching no more and no better understood: all our miscarriages under the word, are to be resolved into our sloth, negligence, and depraved affections; we have many things to say, but ye are dull of hearing.

12 For when for the time ye ought to be teachers, ye have need that one teach you again which be the first principles of the oracles of God; and are become such as have need of milk, and not of strong meat.

As if the apostle had said, "when for the time that you have professed the christian faith, you ought to have been able to be teachers of it to others, you had need yourselves to be instructed in the first rudiments of the christian religion, and are become such as have need of milk, the food of babes, and not of strong meat, the food of men." Learn hence, 1. That the time when, and how long we enjoy the dispensation of the gospel, is a circumstance which must, in particular, be accounted for; whereas for the time, all have time, but all have not time alike: the day of the gospel is not of the same length to all nations, churches and persons. Learn, 2. That it is reasonably expected by God that persons should thrive and grow in knowledge and holiness, proportionably to their time and means; and not doing so, is charged upon them as a great aggravation of their guilt: for the time ye ought to have been teachers: that is of ability sufficient for the teachers of others. They had not learned of their teachers, when the apostle had reason to hope they had been able to teach their learners. Many, after long teaching, are ignorant, and ought to be taught again the same things which they long ago heard. Learn 3. That the holy scriptures are to be looked upon, consulted with, and submitted to, as the oracles of God; they are sometimes called the living, sometimes the lively oracles of God; because they are the oracles of the living God, and also life-giving oracles to them that obey them. Learn, 4. That there are, in the scripture, truths suitable to the spiritual instruction and edification of all sorts of persons; there is in it both milk and strong meat, plain doctrine and first principles necessary for all, and truths of a deeper search that are profitable to some. "In the scripture, said one, there are shallows and there are depths; fords where the lambs may wade, and depths where the elephants may swim."

13 For every one that useth milk is unskilful in the word of righteousness: for he is a babe.

14 But strong meat belongeth to them, that are of full age, even those, who, by reason of use, have their senses exercised to discern both good and evil.

Our apostle here speaks of the difference of doctrines under the metaphor of meats: from whence we may gather, 1. That the word of God in the dispensation of it, is food provided for the souls of men. 2. That the word, as food, will not profit the soul until it be eaten, and digested: it is not food prepared, but food received, that nourishes. When manna was gathered and eaten, it nourished the Israelites; but when gathered and laid by, it putrefied and bred worms. Lord! What pains do some take to gather manna, to hear the word, but alas! it lies by them, and is of no use. Learn, 3. That as the gospel is the word of righteousness, so God requires and expects that all those who live under the dispensation of the gospel should be skilful in the word of righteousness. The gospel is a word of righteousness; it is so declaratively, it is so efficiently: declaratively, as this severity of God against sin is hereby more fully revealed, and as the righteousness which God requireth, approveth, and accepteth for our justification, is therein declared: and the righteousness which God requireth in us, and expecteth from us, is hereby discovered also; and as it is the great instrument of working holiness in us, and making us inherently righteous, so it is the word of righteousness efficiently as well as declaratively: our justification is wrought in us thereby, John xvii. 17. Learn, 4. That the spiritual senses of believers, well exercised in the word of righteousness, are the best and most undeceiving helps in judging of what is good or evil, what is true or false, that is proposed to them: such by reason of use, have their senses exercised to discern both good and evil."

CHAPTER VI.

The holy apostle having in the foregoing chapters largely treated of the divinity of our Saviour's person, and the dignity of his priesthood; showing, that he was a more excellent priest than Aaron, even an eternal High Priest, after the order of Melchisedec, in whom both crown and mitre, kingdom and priesthood did concentre.

In the close of the foregoing chapter, he gave the Hebrews a very smart reproof for their dulness and ignorance, comparing them to children, yea, to babes that must be fed with the milk, that is, plain, and easy doctrines, the first principles and rudiments of christianity, as being incapable of strong meats, that is, the harder and higher mysteries of religion.

He begins this chapter with an exhortation to them, to increase both in knowledge and obedience; exciting them to advance to an higher and more perfect degree of knowledge in the christian religion, than the first principles and ground work of it. And accordingly he thus bespeaks them, ver. 1.

THEREFORE, leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection;—

In these words of the apostle, he seems to allude to the building of an house; as in that, we first lay a good and sure foundation, but do not rest there, but proceed in raising up the fabric; in like manner, it is neither satisfactory nor sufficient to advance no further in the christian religion, than the knowledge of the first principles of it; but endeavours must be used to attain a more perfect degree and measure of knowledge in the mysteries of the gospel. Leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, he means not leaving them so as to forget them, and lay them aside, but to leave them by going beyond them, and advancing further and higher in the knowledge of christianity. Learn hence, 1. That in christianity, and other sciences, there are certain rudiments and fundamental principles, which must and ought to be carefully taught. 2. That it is a necessary and useful practice, in the church of God, to teach the doctrine of christianity, in the first principles of it, plainly and summarily to young beginners. Learn, 3. That when the ministers of the gospel have laid a good foundation of scripture knowledge in the understanding of their hearers, they must excite them by their pressing considerations to make a further progress in their knowledge, and leaving the doctrine of the beginning of Christ, go on unto perfection.

—Not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works, and of faith toward God.

2 Of the doctrine of baptisms, and of laying on of hands, and of resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment.

3 And this will we do, if God permit.

Still our apostle pursues his metaphor, in comparing christianity to a building, and the first rudiments or principles of the christian religion to a foundation which supports the superstructure. Next he summarily declares what these fundamental doctrines and first principles of the christian religion are, namely, these six. 1. Repentance, or a turning from all sinful works, called dead works, because they end in death; dead, because deadly; they proceed from death spiritual, and end in death eternal. 2. Faith towards God, or faith in God; that is, in the whole Trinity, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. Particularly, faith in the first original promise of God, to send Christ into the world to save us from our sins, and granting remission of sins by him. Here note, How closely repentance and faith are united and knit together; where the one is, there is the other; and where either is not, there is neither. He repenteth not, who hath not faith towards God, and he hath not faith towards God, who repenteth not. 3. The doctrine of baptisms: that is, of both the christian sacraments, as also of the covenant of grace of which the sacraments are seals. Persons admitted into the church by baptism, ought to be well instructed, as soon as capable of it, in the nature, use, and end of the sacraments; acquainting them not only with the nature of the outward sin, but with the necessity of the inward grace. 4. The doctrine of laying on of hands, to confirm the baptized persons in the faith, and to oblige and enable them to keep the covenant they entered into with God, when they were baptized; which was done before their admission to the Lord's table. Imposition, or laying on of hands, was an ancient and venerable rite, used in the primitive church upon several occasions; particularly, in ordination, in absolution of penitents, in healing the sick, in conferring the gifts of the Holy Ghost, Acts viii. 17. And, lastly, in confirmation, when baptized persons were brought before the church, to acknowledge, confirm, and renew their baptismal covenant with God; and to receive the benefit of public prayer and episcopal benediction, in order to the further endowments of grace to perform their vows, adorn their profession, and be admitted to the Lord's table, as complete members of the visible church of Christ. 5. The resurrection of the dead, a doctrine denied by the sadducees, derided by the Athenian philosophers, and perverted by heretics; but is a fundamental principle of the gospel; the faith whereof is indispensably necessary unto our consolation, and has a peculiar influence upon our obedience. This is the animating principle of gospel-obedience, because we are assured that our services shall not only be remembered, but rewarded also. 6. The eternal judgment, which will doom men to everlasting rewards and punishments in a future state. The ministers of the gospel ought to dwell much upon this fundamental principle of religion, to represent the dread and terror of that eternal day to all men, to the intent they may be excited and stirred up to take effectual care that they fail not under the vengeance of that fatal day. These six principles being laid down by the apostle, he tells them his resolution, to endeavour the carrying of them on to a more perfect degree and measure of knowledge in the mysteries of the gospel; in order to their becoming skilful in the word of righteousness; "Leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection; which we will do, if God permit."

4 For it is impossible for those who were once enlightened, and have tasted of the heavenly gift, and were partakers of the Holy Ghost,

5 And have tasted the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come;

6 If they shall fall away, to renew them again unto repentance: seeing they crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh, and put him to an open shame.

By the enlightened, here understand those that were baptized, and embraced christianity; the ancients called baptism illumination, and baptized persons the enlightened; because of that divine illumination which was conveyed to the minds of men by the knowledge of christianity. By tasting the heavenly gift, and being made partakers of the Holy Ghost, understand such as had not only heard of the extraordinary gifts of the Holy Ghost, but had some experience of them themselves; as also of the spiritual benefits conferred upon them in baptism, by the Holy Spirit. By tasting the good word of God, understand some relish of the truth and goodness of the gospel, some pleasure in entertaining it, by reason of the gracious promises of eternal life and happiness contained in it. The gospel that proclaimed remission of sins, was a good word; this good word they saw confirmed by miracles, tongues, and prophecy, and so could not but be convinced of the truth of it, which is here called a tasting it; who have tasted the good word of God: it follows, and the powers of the world to come; that is, the powers of the gospel age; for the world to come, in the language of the prophets, doth signify the times of the Messiah. And thus, the powers of the world to come, are the miraculous powers of the Holy Ghost bestowed upon men, in order to the propagation of the gospel; such were the gifts of healing, casting out devils, working miracles. Others, by tasting the powers of the world to come, understand some apprehensions of the resurrection and future judgment, with affections suitable thereunto. Now concerning these, says our apostle, if they fall away; that is, if they shall, after all this apostatize from this profession, out of love to this present world, or from fear of persecution and sufferings, if they shall relapse either to Heathenism, or Judaism, it is impossible to renew them again to repentance; that is, it is a thing very difficult, hardly to be hoped for, that such wilful apostates should be restored again by repentance: "seeing they crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh, and put him to an open shame;" that is, they virtually, and in effect crucify him over again, and as much as in them lies: for, by denying and renouncing of him, they declare him to be an impostor, and consequently worthy of death. So that the plain sense of the words seems to be this: "if those that are baptized, and have received the doctrine of the gospel, and are endowed with the gifts of the Holy Ghost, shall yet, after this, apostatize from christianity, it is very difficult, and next to an impossibility, to recover such again by repentance; seeing they are guilty of as great a crime, as if, in their own persons, they had put to death, and ignominiously used the Son of God." Here note, that it is not impartial apostasy from the christian religion, by any particular vicious practice, but a total apostasy from christianity, and more especially to the heathen idolatry, which is here intended. From the whole, learn, 1. That they which have been enlightened, awakened, and made partakers of the gifts and graces of the Holy Spirit in some measure, and tasted the sweetness of the word and ways of God in some degree, may yet fall away. 2. That if such do fall away, it is very difficult, though not altogether impossible, to renew them again to repentance: and that for these reasons; 1. Because of the greatness and heinous nature of the sin, it being a downright apostasy from God, against the clearest light and knowledge, and fullest conviction of a man's mind; and the highest affront to the Son of God, who revealed the christian religion to the world, and sealed it with his blood. 2. Because those who are guilty of this sin, do renounce and cast off the means of their recovery, and therefore it becomes extremely difficult to renew them again to repentance: they reject Christ and his holy gospel, and refuse the only remedy appointed for their recovery. 4. Because it is so high a provocation to God, to withdraw his grace and Holy Spirit from such persons by the power and efficacy whereof they should be brought to repentance: God justly leaving those who so unworthily leave him. Lord! how fearful and fatal a condition is it, to begin in the spirit, and end in the flesh; to decay in religion, and apostatize from grace; to have had some work of the Spirit and word upon our hearts, so as to have light and love, some taste and savor of religion, some desires after, and hopes of heaven; and, after all, to cool and give over, to revolt and backslide, and have our latter end worse than our beginning?

7 For the earth which drinketh in the rain that cometh oft upon it, and bringeth forth herbs meet for them by whom it is dressed, receiveth blessing from God;

8 But that which beareth thorns and briers is rejected, and is nigh unto cursing; whose end is to be burned.

The design and scope of our apostle in these words is threefold. 1. To set forth the excellency and necessity of the gospel, dispensed to us in the ministry of the word; he compares it to rain, which doth soften, refresh, and fructify the earth. 2. He discovers the different effect which the word of God, or the doctrine of the gospel, has upon different persons that sit under the preaching and dispensation of it; the sincere christian becomes fruitful under the dews and showers of divine grace, and receives a blessing; but the barren and fruitless professor is like an howling wilderness, or dry desert, which, after innumerable refreshing showers, brings forth nothing but briers and thorns. 3. He declares the different state and condition of such persons. A people that answers God's care and cost, is like a field that drinks in the rain, bringeth forth herbs, and receives a blessing. But such a people, as, after all the refreshing showers from heaven, and after all the culture and labor of God's husbandmen on earth, shall remain bushes and briers, barren and unfruitful under all, or worse than such; they are nigh unto cursing and their end is to be burned. Blessing attends the one, burning awaits the other. Note, 1. That what the rain is to the earth, that is the word of God, and the doctrine of the gospel to the souls of men. Is the rain of heavenly extraction? So is the word of God. Does the rain fall by divine direction? So does the word preached. Does the rain distil down gradually and successively, not all at once? So does the word fall, here a little, and there a little. Does the rain mollify and soften, revive and refresh, fructify and make fruitful where it falls? So does the word preached: Col. i. 6. The word of the gospel is come unto you, and bringeth forth fruit; since the day you heard of it. In a word, as after plenty of rain there follows a great drought, and want of rain, so after a long and plentiful enjoyment of the gospel, if people do not prize and improve their mercies, God will cut them short, and deprive them of them. Note, 2. That it is possible for a people to sit long under the ministry of the word, that spiritual rain, that celestial dew may be daily dropping and distilling down upon them, and yet that people may be bush and brier after all; barren and unfruitful in the account of God. Note, 3. That a people so remaining, and under such advantages, are nigh unto cursing, and their end is to be burned. Barrenness under the dispensation of the gospel, is always accompanied with an increase of sin, and of condemnation also: those that are not, because they will not be healed and reformed by the preaching of the gospel, are righteously given up by God to extreme obstinacy, and final obduration.

9 But, beloved, we are persuaded better things of you, and things that accompany salvation, though we thus speak.

10 For God is not unrighteous, to forget your work and labor of love which ye have showed towards his name, in that ye have ministered to the saints, and do minister.

Observe here, 1. The holy wisdom of our apostle in mollifying the severity of the foregoing commination and prediction; and the good hope, and firm persuasion he had of the Hebrews' perseverance in grace unto salvation, notwithstanding all the cautions and warnings he gave them of apostasy and apostates: "I am persuaded better things of you, though I thus speak." We may represent the ugly and filthy face of sin to our best friends, to the end that they may hate it, and escape it: we may be confident of another's sincerity, and, as occasion requires, publicly testify that confidence to themselves; "we are persuaded better things of you." Observe, 2. The ground of this confidence declared, and that is twofold: 1. The graces of God's Spirit found operative to them; their faith in Christ, and love to all his members; it was a working faith, and laborious love that was found with them, "they have administered to the saints, and do minister." Behold the nature of christian love, it is an immortal fire, ever burning, never dying. 2. Another ground of this persuasion, was the knowledge of God's faithfulness in remembering and rewarding this their labor of love: "God is not unrighteous to forget your work and labor of love;" that is, God is righteous, and will certainly remember and reward your faith, your charity, and good works; for he has promised so to do, and he is faithful that has promised. Learn hence, 1. That faith, if it be a living faith, will be a working faith. Obedience is the fruit of faith, and we ought to look on obedience as our work. Learn, 2. That it is the will and pleasure of God, that many of the saints and servants in this world be in such a condition, wherein they stand in need of being ministered unto. Learn, 3. That the best evidence we can have of the sincerity of our love, is its readiness to minister to the saints in all distresses. Learn, 4. That both the labor of our sufferings, and the labor of our services, shall be remembered, and rewarded by a righteous God: "God is not unrighteous to forget your work, and labor of love, in that ye have ministered to the saints and do minister."

11 And we desire that every one of you do show the same diligence, to the full assurance of hope unto the end.

Note here, 1. That although the apostle had a firm persuasion, that they were sincere and upright, and would hold on their way, yet he exhorts them to show the same diligence which they had done, and to persevere to the end, as they had begun. Learn hence, That ministerial exhortation unto duty is needful, even unto them that are sincere in the practice of it, that they may abide and continue therein: "we desire that you show diligence unto the end." Note, 2. The special duty he exhorts them to, and that is, to attain a full assurance of hope. Hope is a certain and assured expectation of good things promised, accompanied with love, and a longing desire to enjoy them. A full assurance of hope, is such a fixed, constant, and prevailing persuasion, concerning the good things promised, and our certain enjoyment of them, as will support us under, and carry us through all the difficulties and troubles that we conflict with. Learn hence, That a good man may, in this life, arrive at an assurance of faith and hope, as touching the goodness of his condition in the life to come. The original word signifies a full gale of hope, a metaphor taken from sailors, who enter the harbour with a full gale of wind, both with facility and safety. The christian's soul is a ship sailing in a tempestuous sea: faith represents the pilot, love the sail, hope the wind that must fill the sail: be the pilot ever so confident, the sail spread to the utmost, yet without a gale of wind the ship lies becalmed, moves not towards the harbour. A christian on earth without hope, is as a ship at sea without wind. Note, 3. The special means directed to, in order to the attaining of this full assurance of hope, and that is, to show diligence, the same diligence, and that to the end. Learn thence, that christians ought by no means to wax secure, but to use all diligence to the end of their lives, for the heightening of their hope to a full assurance; "we desire that every one of you do show the same diligence, to the full assurance of hope to the end."

12 That ye be not slothful, but followers of them, who through faith and patience inherit the promises.

Our apostle having exhorted the Hebrews to great diligence in good works in the former verse, in this verse endeavours to excite and provoke them to it by the examples of deceased saints, who are now reaping the reward of their former pains, and inheriting the promises. Here note, 1. A cautionary direction given, that ye be not slothful, either timorous and fainthearted, or remiss and negligent. God having engaged so firmly on his part, to let nothing be wanting which is requisite to enable us to persevere; if we miss of the promise, that is, of heaven the good promised, we must thank our own sloth for it. Note, 2. The great duty exhorted to, and that is, to be followers of the saints: be followers of them; that is, vigorously and constantly imitate them in their graces and gracious conversations. The graces of the saints (whether living or dead) are patterns presented to our imitation. Note, the particular and special graces in the saints, which we are to imitate and follow, namely, their faith and patience: their faith, that is, their firm trust in God, and belief of his promises, relying on his word under all trials: and their patience, that is, their perseverance in well doing, and patient expectation under all delays, and constant adherence to him under all difficulties. Learn hence, 1. That heaven is not ours by purchase, but by promise. 2. That heaven is a promised inheritance, which saints, by faith and patience, have possessed. 3. That by being followers of them in their faith and patience, he may also come with them to inherit the promises.

13 For when God made promise to Abraham, because he could swear by no greater, he swore by himself, 14 Saying, Surely, blessing I will bless thee, and multiplying I will multiply thee.

15 And so, after he had patiently endured, he obtained the promise.

The apostle having told us in general, that the saints by faith and patience do inherit the promises; instances here particularly in Abraham, unto whom God made a promise of multiplying his seed greatly to him, and confirmed that promise by an oath; but Abraham waited long by faith and patience for the complete fulfilling of the promise; and so must we. God delights to be trusted by his people upon his word and oath; and when they do not live to see the promise of God fulfilled, they glorify him exceedingly, by dying in the faith and firm belief, that it shall be fulfilled in God's own appointed time. Note here, the wonderful condescension of God towards the infirmity of men, he swears, he swears by himself, he pawns and pledges his Godhead, and if he performs not what he promises and swears, is willing to forfeit it. O felices nos? Quorum causâ Deus jurat! O miserimi! Si nec juranti credamus. "O happy man! For whose sake God condescends to swear, O miserable men! if we doubt of God's promise confirmed by his oath in which he hath lain down his Godhead as a stake and pawn, never to take it up again, if he fails in the least jot, in the punctual performance of it."

16 For men verily swear by the greater: and an oath for confirmation is to them an end of all strife.

These words contain a reason, why God, in gracious condescension to man's infirmity, is pleased to confirm his promise with an oath; it is to determine a controversy, and put an end to a strife depending between God and the fallen creature; and this is the general reason for an oath amongst men, it is to put bounds and limits to the contentions and contradictions of men; to make an end of all strife between them, which otherwise would be perpetuated, and to bring them to a mutual acquiescence: an oath for confirmation, is an end of all strife. Learn hence, 1. That there is, as we are in a state of nature, a strife and difference between God and us. 2. That the promises of the gospel are gracious proposals of the only way and means for the ending of that strife. 3. That the oath of God interposed for the confirmation of these promises, is every way sufficient on God's part, to put a period to this strife, and to establish a firm peace with us through the blood of Christ, "Men verily swear by the greater, and an oath for confirmation is an end of all strife."

17 Wherein God, willing more abundantly to show unto the heirs of promise the immutability of his counsel, confirmed it by an oath:

18 That by two immutable things, in which it was impossible for God to lie, we might have strong consolation.—

Here the apostle acquaints us with the design of God in confirming his promise, namely, to manifest the immutability of his counsel to us; that is, his decree and purpose for our salvation; to the intent, that by his word and oath we might have strong consolation. So unspeakable is the weakness of our faith, that we stand in need of the utmost condescension of God for its confirmation. Note here, that God has made many promises for the confirmation of his people's faith. God's oath is a surety for his promises; and that God's end, both in his promise and his oath is to give his people the highest assurance, and strongest consolation.

Quest. Why are we so hard to believe God upon his single word; yea, can scarce trust him upon his oath? Ans. Because of our guilt; now guilt is always full of fear, and fear full of suspicion and distrust; and because the way of reconciliation is so rare and wonderful, that we can scarce conceive it, much less believe it, also the privileges of the gospel are so glorious, that they exceed our beliefs; and because we ourselves are so false and fickle, both with God and one another, that promises, vows, and oaths, are all little enough to hold us. Now we are apt to measure God by ourselves, therefore he gives us his oath. Inference, 1. How ought we to bind ourselves to God by oath, seeing he condescends thus to bind himself to us? 2. How unreasonable is it for the believer to distrust God upon his oath? This is not only to accuse God of a lie, but to impeach him of perjury. 3. How absurd is it for the impenitent sinner not to tremble at the threatenings of God, which are confirmed by an oath, as well as his promises? "I have sworn in my wrath, they shall never enter into my rest."

—Who have fled for refuge to lay hold upon the hope set before us:

In these words there is an allusion to the cities of refuge spoken of under the law; God appointed six of them for those to fly unto, who were guilty of casual homicide, or killing a man by chance, that so they might avoid the fury of the avenger of blood. Now these cities of refuge were an illustrious type of Christ. Note here, 1. Christ is the believer's city of refuge, the only sanctuary for distressed souls. 2. That believers do by faith fly unto him for refuge, when the guilt of sin, and the wrath of God for sin, do pursue and follow them. This flying for refuge doth imply diligence and earnestness, as in the case of life and death, yea, unwearied diligence; and it implies continuance in this refuge, when once got into it, not to stir out of it for all the world. Lord! open the eyes, and awaken the consciences of all impenitent sinners, make them sensible that the avenger of blood is at their heels, and that their damnation slumbers not if they do not presently fly from the wrath to come, and take sanctuary in thy Son.

19 Which hope we have as an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast, and which entereth into that within the veil.

In these words we have the nature of a christian's hope described. 1. By a metaphorical; 2. By a typical similitude. 1. Observe the metaphor made use of, to set forth the nature and office of hope, it is compared to an anchor; which hope we have as an anchor of the soul. Doth the anchor hold fast the ship, and keep it steady, both in storms and tempests, and in the midst of the most tumultuous waves? In like manner, the hope of eternal glory quiets, stays, and strengthens the christian's spirit, when tossed upon the waves of this troublesome world. Learn hence, 1. That believers are exposed to many storms and tempests here in this world: their afflictions, persecutions, temptations, fears, &c. are compared fitly to storms, because of their fierceness and violence, and because of their tendency to ruin and destruction. Learn, 2. That these storms would prove ruinous to the souls of believers, did not hope, the anchor of the soul, take fast hold upon the promises of the gospel, which keeps the christian firm and invincible against all oppositions; "which hope we have as an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast." Observe, 2. Hope is described by a typical similitude, it entereth into that within the veil. The veil here alluded to, is that which parted the holy of holies from the body of the temple, a type of heaven. The heavens are as a veil to the sense and reason of man, there their sight and their thoughts are bounded, they can neither discern nor judge of any thing that is above or within that veil: but faith and hope pierceth through it; no created thing can keep them at a distance from God himself. As the anchor stays not in the waves of the sea, but pierces through them all till it comes to the solid bottom: so the christian's hope fixes on nothing under heaven; but pierces through all, till it entereth into that within the veil: that is, till it fixes on God as the author, on Christ as the purchaser, on the Spirit as the insurer, on the covenant as the conveyer of all grace, mercy and peace. Here hope fixes itself, to hold the soul firm and steadfast in all the storms that may befall it. Learn hence, 1. That the hope and faith of believers are invisible unto the world; they enter within the veil, where the world's eye can never follow them. Learn, 2. That hope firmly fixed on God in Christ by the promise, will hold the soul steady, and keep the christian tight, in all the storms that may befall it. "It is an anchor both sure and steadfast, and which entereth into that within the veil."

20 Whither the forerunner is for us entered, even Jesus, made an highpriest for ever after the order of Melchisedec.

Observe here, The person spoken of, Christ; the subject matter spoken of him, his entering into heaven; and the quality in which he entered heaven; namely, as our forerunner. This denotes, 1. His public capacity, that he entered heaven in our name, and to negotiate our affairs. 2. His absolute precedency, he is our forerunner, but he himself had no forerunner, none entered before him in their own names, but in his, and upon his account through the virtue of his merits, and by the prevalency of his mediation. Learn hence, 1. That there is a place and state of happiness above, prepared for pious souls, which Christ is already entered into, and has taken possession of: this place may be considered in its amplitude and largeness, in its stability and firmness, in its sanctity and holiness, in its pleasure and delightfulness, in its glory and blessedness, in its eternity and everlastingness: and this place is by Christ prepared for believers; namely, by his death and satisfaction, by his resurrection and ascension, by his mediation and intercession. Learn, 2. That our Lord Jesus Christ is not only entered into heaven, but entered as our forerunner, to take and keep possession of it in the name and stead of all believers. To enter heaven as our forerunner, implies, that he entered in our natures, that he keeps possession of it in our names: as sure as the Head is gone before the members, so certainly shall the members follow their head; as a forerunner supposes others to follow after; and it implies that Christ will put us into the actual possession of heaven in his own time. Inference, 1. Is Christ gone before to heaven, then let us be willing to follow him in the way of obedience, and in the way of suffering as well as to meet him in the end. 2. To make haste after him. Did he fly as an eagle towards heaven, and shall we creep like a snail; Is not the bosom of Christ more desirable than the arms of our dearest friends? Shall not we enjoy all comforts in the enjoyment of our Comforter? 3. Let our hearts at present be with him. O! Where should our hearts be, but where our Head is?

CHAPTER VII.

Our apostle in this chapter returns to his discourse concerning the priesthood of our Lord Jesus Christ, from which he had digressed in the former chapter, and shows us in this, wherein Melchisedec was a type of Christ, to wit, in his name, king of righteousness; in his title, king of Salem, or peace: in the original, without pedigree, or descent; in the excellency of his person, to be preferred before Abraham, and all the Levites that descended from him, in the eminency of his priesthood which could and did make a perfect expiation for sin, which the Levitical priesthood never did, nor never could do; and accordingly thus he speaks, ver. 1.

FOR this Melchisedec, king of Salem, priest of the most high God, who met Abraham returning from the slaughter of kings, and blessed him;

2 To whom also Abraham gave a tenth part of all: first, being by interpretation, King of righteousness, and after that also, King of Salem, which is, king of peace;

3 Without father, without mother, without descent, having neither beginning of days, nor end of life; but, made like unto the Son of God, abideth a priest continually.

Here observe, 1. The person spoken of described by his name, Melchisedec. Some take this Melchisedec to be Shem the son of Noah; but this cannot be because his genealogy is exactly set down by Moses. Others take him to be one of the posterity of Japhet, the father of the Gentiles: in the midst of these sinners above others, was Melchisedec raised up, as an illustrious type of Christ the promised Messiah. See here, how God can raise up instruments for his service, and unto his glory, when, where, and how he pleaseth. And learn hence, that this signal prefiguration of Christ in the nations of the world, at the same time when Abraham received the promises for himself and his posterity, gave a pledge and assurance of the certain future call of the Gentiles unto an interest in him and participation of him. Observe, 2. Melchisedec is here described by his office; he was king of Salem, and a priest of the Most High God; yes, the first that was so by special institution, and separated to the office by God's approbation? None went before him, and none succeeded him in his office. Here note, that the first personal instituted type of Christ, was Melchisedec, as priest: for in his kingly office he was not so directly typical of Christ. There were moral types of Christ's person before Melchisedec, as Adam, Abel, and Noah, which represented him in sundry things: but the first person, who was solemnly designed to represent Christ by what he was and did, was Melchisedec the priest; teaching us that the foundation of all that the Lord Jesus Christ had to do in and for the church was laid in his priestly office, whereby he made atonement, and reconciliation for sin: "Melchisedec, king of Salem, and priest of the Most High God." Observe, 3. He is described by several actions and circumstances: 1. "He met Abraham returning from the slaughter of the kings;" this meeting of Melchisedec and Abraham, after Abraham had gotten the victory over all his adversaries, was a type and representation of his glorious meeting of Christ and his church, at the last day; when he will bring out his stores in heaven for their eternal refreshment, as Melchisedec brought forth bread and wine to refresh Abraham returning from the slaughter of the kings. 2. He blessed him, Gen. xiv. 19. "And Melchisedec said, blessed be Abraham of the Most High God, possessor of heaven and earth." Sacramental blessings were authoritative, and that by special institution. In this blessing of Abraham by Melchisedec, all believers are virtually blessed by Jesus Christ: Melchisedec represented Christ in what he then did, and Abraham represented all his believing posterity in what he then received. 3. Another sacramental act, or exercise of priestly power ascribed to Melchisedec is, that he received of Abraham tithes of all; the one paid them in a way of duty, the other received them in a way of office. Note here, the antiquity of tithes, and how very ancient they were: they were paid in Abraham's time, long before the ceremonial law, and therefore cannot be said to be Jewish and Levitical. The patriarchs before the law, the Jews under the law, and the Christians in times of the gospel, have all paid this proportion: from whence some have concluded, that as the seventh part of our time, so the tenth part of our goods and estate were given to God from the beginning, as Lord of all our time, and proprietor of all our estate. Whatsoever we receive signally from God, in a way of mercy, we ought to return a portion of it to him in a way of duty. It is a certain sign that a man has not engaged God in getting an estate, when he will not intitle him to any portion of it when it is gotten. Observe, 4.

The apostle proceeds unto other instances in the description of Melchisedec, wherein he was made like unto the Son of God, ver. 3. "Without father, without mother, without descent, having neither beginning of days, nor end of life:" which expressions must not be understood absolutely, but tropically, not of Melchisedec as a man, but as a priest; for as a man, he had certainly both father and mother, though not recorded in scripture; he was assuredly born, and did not less certainly die than other men; but neither his beginning of days, nor end of life, are registered and rehearsed, that he might be the fitter type of Christ, concerning whom it is said, who can declare his generation? But though Melchisedec, as a man, had father and mother, yet as a priest, he had no predecessor nor successor; no predecessor from whom he might by birth receive his sacerdotal power; no successor who derived his priesthood from him: now herein also was Melchisedec an illustrious type of Christ, who derived his priesthood from no mortal predecessor, but immediately from his heavenly Father; neither will he transmit it to any successor, but when all enemies are subdued, he shall resign his priesthood, together with his kingdom, to God the Father who gave him both. Observe, 5. What is here asserted concerning Melchisedec; namely, that he abideth a priest for ever; that is, things are so related concerning him in scripture, as that there is no mention of the ending of the priesthood of his order. We read of no resignation of his office, or of the succession of any person to him therein: and thus he remaineth a priest for ever. This was that which our apostle did principally design to confirm from hence, namely, that there was in the scripture, before the institution of the Aaronical priesthood, a representation of an eternal, unchangeable priesthood, to be introduced into the church, which he demonstrated to be that of Jesus Christ, of which Melchisedec's priesthood was a type.

4 Now consider how great this man was, unto whom even the patriarch Abraham gave the tenth of the spoils.

These words are the apostle's application of what was before discoursed; by comparing Melchisedec's excellency with Abraham's; he shows Christ's excellency above Melchisedec's, and he calls upon them to consider this, consider how great this man was. It will be fruitless and to no advantage, to propose and declare the most important truths of the gospel, if those unto whom they are proposed do not diligently inquire into them, and duly ponder and consider of them. The Hebrews are here called upon to consider: but what? and whom? Why, who Melchisedec was, and how great a man he was? Note here, that the greatness of Melchisedec did not respect either the endowments of his person, or the largeness of his dominion, or his riches and wealth, in which sense some are said to be great in scripture: but he is pronounced great with respect to his office, and in regard to his nearness to God on that account; as also in his representing our Lord Jesus Christ. Observe farther, the proof here given of the greatness of Melchisedec, in that no meaner person than Abraham, than Abraham the patriarch, did give the tenth part of the spoils unto him. Here remark, that notwithstanding the highest advantages and privileges which Abraham was possessed of, which rendered him almost adored by his posterity, yet when the meanest duty was presented to him, he readily complied with it. The highest privileges neither can nor ought to exempt any person from the performance of the meanest duty. Duty is our highest honor, and chiefest advantage; but privileges, promotions, dignities, and exaltations, may become snares, and end in the ruin of men's souls. When a person is dignified and advanced in the church, if thereby he thinks himself exempted from the ordinary service of the ministry, he is guilty of horrid pride and ingratitude: but if he farther indulges himself in a course of idleness, sloth, sensuality, and worldliness, these are crimes unpardonable, and want a name to express them.

5 And verily they that are of the sons of Levi, who receive the office of the priesthood, have a commandment to take tithes of the people according to the law, that is, of their brethren, though they come out of the loins of Abraham;

6 But he, whose descent is not counted from them, received tithes of Abraham, and blessed him that had the promises.

7 And, without all contradiction, the less is blessed of the better.

Still the apostle goes on to give Melchisedec the preference above Abraham, and from thence to infer, that Christ, whom Melchisedec typified was much more excellent than Abraham, and all the Levitical priests which sprang from him. The argument lies thus: "the law allowed Aaron and the other priests to take tithes of their brethren that sprung from Abraham; but Melchisedec received tithes of Abraham, who was none of his people, yea, and blessed Abraham also, which is a demonstration that he was greater than Abraham; and consequently it is evident, that Christ is greater than the Jewish priests; to bless authoritatively is an act of superiority; now Melchisedec blessed Abraham, he is therefore greater than Abraham: because he that blessed is greater than he whom he blessed. Behold here the excellency of the office of God's ministers, namely, to bless the people in God's name: they bless authoritatively, they bless declaratively, they bless optatively. God help them to take heed, lest by their miscarriages, they prove a snare and a curse unto them whom they ought to bless.

8 And here men that die receive tithes: but there he receiveth them, of whom it is witnessed that he liveth.

Our apostle still carrieth on the same argument, proving Melchisedec's priesthood to surpass and excel the Aaronical and Levitical priesthood in the immortality of it: as the less is blessed of the greater, so is that which is immortal greater and better than what is mortal: but such is Melchisedec, and his order of priesthood. Indeed, in the Levitical order of priesthood, though the priests be superior to the people, and take tithes of them, yet they do die as well as the people: but we read not a word of Melchisedec's death, he is a priest for ever; that is, he did typically pre-figure Christ, who doth properly and indeed live for ever. Melchisedec ever lives secundum historiam. Christ, secundum veritatem. Learn hence, that the life of the church depends upon the everlasting life of Jesus Christ: he liveth for ever, when ministers die, or have their mouths stopped. This great High-Priest lives, upon whom the life and preservation, the continuance and salvation of the church does depend: here men that die receive tithes. Note, from their mortality, that in the outward administration of God's worship, he is pleased to make use of the ministry of frail, mortal, and dying men. Zec. i. 5. "The prophets, do they live for ever?" Hereby it doth evidently appear, that it is the power of God, and nothing else, which gives efficacy and success to all gospel administration, 2. Cor. iv. 7. "We have this treasure in earthen vessels, that the excellency of the power may be of God, and not of us."

9 And as I may so say, Levi also, who received tithes, payed tithes in Abraham.

10 For he was yet in the loins of his father when Melchisedec met him,

By Levi here we are to understand the Levites, or the Levitical priesthood; they being in Abraham's loins, are said to pay tithes in Abraham to Melchisedec, which the apostle produces as an evidence, that Melchisedec is superior to the Levites, and greater than they; and consequently, that Christ, whom Melchisedec did typify, must needs be more excellent than they also. The argument runs thus: "they who receive tithes of others, are certainly superior to them of whom they do receive them; but Melchisedec received tithes of Abraham, and Levi in Abraham's loins; therefore he is superior to them, and of a more excellent order than they:" which is the great truth he hath been so industriously proving.

11 If, therefore, perfection were by the Levitical priesthood, (for under it, the people received the law,) what farther need was there that another priest should rise after the order of Melchisedec, and not be called after the order of Aaron?

12 For the priesthood being changed, there is made of necessity a change also of the law.

If perfection, that is, a perfect expiation and remission of sin, could have been made by the sacrifice which the legal priests offered, there would then have been no need that God should institute a priest of another and more excellent order, namely, his own Son, to be a priest after Melchisedec's order, and not after the order of Aaron. Where note, that perfection is denied in the Levitical priesthood, and ascribed to the priesthood of Christ. To perfect sinful man, is to free him from the guilt of sin, and from the direful and dismal consequences of sin, and to make him righteous and holy, capable of communion with God, both here and hereafter. Now this the Levitical priesthood could not do. "But Jesus Christ has by one offering perfected for ever them that are sanctified." chap. x. 14. Thus the apostle infers the necessity of changing the priesthood; and next he tells us, ver. 12. That the change of the Levitical priesthood necessarily draweth along with it a change of the Levitical law, and the legal dispensation of the covenant of grace; for the Levitical priesthood and the Levitical law do both stand and fall together: "the priesthood being changed, there is made of necessity a change also of the law." By the changing of the priesthood, understand the abolition of it; by the change of the law, understand the abrogation of it; by the word necessity, understand that the change was not casual and contingent, but absolutely needful, in regard of the imperfection and inability of the Levitical priesthood to effect any such thing. Learn hence, that the promulgation of the gospel, and the institution of christianity, did abrogate the Levitical law, and make it of no force. This might be the reason why God did not only by the death and sacrifice of Christ, the great High-priest, abolish the Levitical priesthood, but also destroyed the temple itself, where he had put his name, and never suffered it to be rebuilt; denoting thereby the utter abolition of the Levitical priesthood, and the total abrogation of the ceremonial law.

13 For he of whom these things are spoken, pertaineth to another tribe, of which no man gave attendance at the altar.

14 For it is evident that our Lord sprang up out of Judah; of which tribe Moses spake nothing concerning priesthood.

In the foregoing verses, our apostle had asserted the change of the priesthood, and therewith the changing of the law. In these verses he proves it by the translation of the priesthood to another tribe; namely, from Levi to Judah. The Levitical priesthood was confined to one certain tribe, that of Levi, and to one certain family, that of Aaron: whence it follows, that the tribe being changed, and God having instituted a priest of another tribe, the priesthood must be changed also. Now it being evident, that Christ sprang not of the tribe of Levi, but out of Judah, the apostle, from the changing of the tribe, strongly infers the change of the priesthood. Note here, 1. How it was a fruit of the manifold wisdom of God, and a very great mercy and favor to give the law, but a far greater to take it away. 2. If under the law, the whole worship of God did so depend on the priesthood, that failing, the whole worship was to cease; as being no more acceptable to God, how much more will all worship under the New Testament be rejected by him, if there be not a due regard therein to our Lord Jesus Christ, as the great and only High-Priest of his church.

15 And it is yet far more evident: for that after the similitude of Melchisedec there ariseth another priest.

16 Who is made, not after the law of a carnal commandment, but after the power of an endless life.

17 For he testifieth, thou art a priest for ever, after the order of Melchisedec.

That the Aaronical priesthood was to be changed, and consequently the whole law of ordinances that depended thereupon, and that the time was now come wherein this change was to be made, is the grand truth which our apostle here designs the confirmation of; it being indeed that truth, whereinto our faith of the acceptance of evangelical worship is resolved: and accordingly he gives a farther proof of the change of the priesthood from the different manner of the priest's consecration. Thus the Levitical priest was set apart to his office by a number of carnal rites and outward ceremonies, which the law prescribed to be used at the consecration of Aaron, and his sons, who were purified with water, anointed with oil, sprinkled with blood, clothed with priestly vestments, initiated with sacrifices, administered in an earthly tabernacle and temple. But, says our apostle, the evangelical or gospel High-Priest, Christ Jesus, was not constituted thus, or made a priest with such carnal rites and outward ceremonies, but with the power of an endless life: that is, he was consecrated a priest by the power of the Holy Ghost, having an immortal life suitable to his priesthood, an authority to give eternal life to as many as depend upon the benefit of sacrifice and satisfaction; "He was made, not after the law of a carnal commandment," (with corporeal ceremony and carnal duration,) "but after the spiritual power of an endless life." Learn, hence, that all the outward ceremony which seemed to be wanting unto Christ, in his entrance into his priestly office, was on the account of a greater glory. Aaron was made a priest with great outward solemnity, Christ with none at all; yet all Aaron's ceremonial glory was nothing in comparison of that excellent glory which accompanied those invisible acts of divine authority, wisdom, and grace, which communicated Christ's office unto him.

18 For there is verily a disannulling of the commandment going before, for the weakness and unprofitableness thereof.

19 For the law made nothing perfect, but the bringing in of a better hope, did; by the which we draw nigh unto God.

Now the apostle comes to declare, that the Levitical priesthood being abolished, and the ceremonial law abrogated, the whole state of the church, and of the solemn worship of God therein, must necessarily be changed also. This he foresaw would be a mighty surprisal to the generality of the Hebrews, to hear that they must quit all their concern and special interest in the law of Moses; and therefore he assigns a double reason for the abrogation and disannulling of that law; namely, the weakness and unprofitableness thereof, ver. 18. "There is a disannulling of the commandment, for the weakness and unprofitableness thereof." Not that the law was weak in itself, or unprofitable to the end for which God made it; namely, to lead them to Christ; but weak and unprofitable for justification and salvation. They expected expiation of sin, sanctification and holiness by it, without any regard to Christ and his sacrifice, by whom alone it could be obtained. Those things the law could not effect in its best estate: how vain was it then for the Jews to expect them when it was abolished? Observe next, how the apostle proves the law to be weak and unprofitable; namely, because it made nothing perfect. The law, that is, the whole system of Mosaical ordinances, the legal covenant, made nothing perfect; that is, no person, how strictly soever he observed, could be justified and saved by it: it could not of itself cleanse from sin, reconcile us to God, justify our persons, sanctify our natures, and procure salvation for us. Observe, lastly, though the ceremonial law made nothing perfect, yet the gospel law, called here a better hope, because the promises of it are a good ground of hope, has efficacy, power, and virtue, to do all those things for us, and by it we have freedom of access to God. "The law made nothing perfect, but the bringing in of a better hope, whereby we draw nigh to God." Learn hence, 1. That the law could not justify or sanctify any person, or make him perfect, by reconciling him to God, and procuring salvation for him. Learn, 2. That believers of old, who lived under the law, did not live upon the law, but upon the hope of Christ, or Christ hoped for: could justification and salvation have been had any other way, or by any other means, Christ's coming had been needless, and his death in vain. Learn, 3. That the introduction of a better hope of the gospel, after a sufficient discovery made of the weakness and insufficiency of the law, did make all things perfect, or bring the church to that state of consummation, which was designed unto it. Learn, 4. That when all mankind were at an inconceivable distance from God, it was infinite condescension and grace to appoint his own Son, who was the blessed hope of the saints under the Old Testament, to be the only way and means of our approaching unto him. When "the law made nothing perfect, the bringing in of a better hope did, by which we draw nigh unto God."

20 And inasmuch as not without an oath he was made priest;

21 For those priests were made without an oath; but this with an oath, by him that said unto him, the Lord sware, and will not repent, thou art a priest for ever, after the order of Melchisedec:

22 By so much was Jesus made a surety of a better testament.

Our apostle has not yet done with his several arguments to prove the transcendent excellency of Christ's priesthood above that of Aaron's: his argument in the verses now before us lies thus: he that is made an unchangeable priest by the oath of God, is a better, greater, and more excellent priest, than any made so without it. But whereas the Levitical priests were made without an oath, by the law changeable at the will of the lawgiver; Jesus Christ was made a priest by the unchangeable oath of God. The Lord sware, and will not repent, thou art a priest for ever. Learn hence, That nothing was wanting on the part of God, that might either give eminency and glory, or stability and efficacy to the priesthood of Christ: this was both due to the glory of his person, and also needful to encourage and secure the faith of the church. Learn, 2. That Jesus Christ, our great High-priest, being initiated into his office by the oath of God, his priesthood is liable to no alteration, succession, or substitution; but the church may continually draw nigh to God, in full assurance of his meritorious satisfaction and prevailing intercession, and receive from thence a solid foundation of peace and consolation; by so much was Jesus made a surety of a better testament. Observe here, 1. The title given to the gospel-covenant, it is here called a better testament: better not for substance, but for clearness; for substance, the old covenant dispensation and the new are the same: but the latter is made more clear, more free, more full, more surely ratified, by the death of Christ, and accompanied with a more mighty operation of the Spirit of God. Observe, 2. The title here given to Christ, he is the surety of a better testament. Our surety, because our sacrifice. The Socinians own Christ to be a surety of the covenant in respect of his holy life, and exemplary death, sealing it as a testimony of his blood, but deny him to be a surety in respect of his satisfaction, merit, and intercession. But alas! as our sinful condition requires a mediator of redemption, so our changeable condition requires a mediator of intercession; and, blessed be God, he has appointed one for both, even his own and only Son, who is the surety of a better testament. Learn thence, that the Lord Jesus was not only made a surety on God's part to us, to assure us, that the promise of the covenant on his part, should be performed, but was also a surety on our part, to furnish us with that grace and assistance which shall enable us to do, answer, and perform all that is required on our part, that we may enjoy the benefit of the covenant of grace here, and glory hereafter. Christ has undertaken, as surety of the covenant, first, to satisfy for sin, by offering himself a propitiatory sacrifice: and next to furnish forth a sufficiency of grace to enable for the fulfilling the conditions of the gospel-covenant. Thus was Jesus the surety of this better covenant.

23 And they truly were many priests, because they were not suffered to continue by reason of death.

24 But this man, because he continueth ever, hath an unchangeable priesthood.

Now our apostle is come to his last argument, by which he proves the excellency of Christ's priesthood above that of Aaron. The Levitical priests, he says, were many and mortal: their mortality was the cause of their multitude: they were cut off by death, and succeeded one another; but Christ is one and the same to his church, yesterday, today, and for ever; he had no partner, has no successor, but executes an everlasting, unchangeable priesthood in his own person. Note here, 1. That the multiplication of priests, particularly of highpriests under the legal dispensation, was a manifest evidence of the imperfection of it; from Aaron the first high-priest, unto Phineas the last, who was destroyed with the temple, are reckoned fourscore and three highpriests, who succeeded one another: of these, thirteen are said to live under the tabernacle, eighteen under the first temple built by Solomon, and all the rest under the second temple: the ground of which multiplication of priests was this, because they were not suffered to continue by reason of death. Learn, 1. That the priesthood of Christ, as unchangeably exercised in his own person, is perpetual; and its perpetuity is a principal part of the glory of that office. He continueth for ever, having an unchangeable priesthood. Quest. But did not Christ, our great High-Priest, die as well as Aaron and other highpriests? Ans. Yes, he died as a priest, they died from being priests; he died as a priest, because he was also to be a sacrifice. The apostle doth not say, that he did not die, but that he always abideth: he abode a priest even in the state of death, and after his resurrection he became immortal, never to die more; he ever liveth, he dieth no more, death has no more dominion over him. See how he describes himself, Rev. i. 8. "I am he that liveth and was dead: and behold I am alive for evermore: and have the keys of hell and death."

25 Wherefore he is able also to save them to the uttermost, that come unto God by him, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them.

These words are a comfortable inference and conclusion, which our apostle draws from his preceding discourse concerning the eternity and unchangeableness of Christ's priesthood; seeing he lives for ever, he is therefore able to save to the uttermost, and that for ever. Observe here, 1. The complete power and ability of Jesus Christ to save sinners asserted; He is able to save, and that to the uttermost; that is completely and everlastingly. Learn hence, That whatever difficulties lie in the way of salvation, and whatever oppositions do arise against it, either with respect to the guilt of sin, or to the power, and dominion of it, the Lord Jesus Christ is able, by virtue of his sacerdotal office, and in the exercise of it, to carry on the work through them all unto eternal perfection: such is the dignity of his person, such is the sufficiency of his satisfaction, that he expiates the guilt of sin universally and perpetually. Observe, 2. The character and description given of the persons whom Jesus Christ thus perfectly and eternally saves. Such as come unto God by him; those, all those, and only those, whom God will save, are such as come unto him for salvation by and through our Lord Jesus Christ as mediator. Oh how injurious then are they to their own souls, who sit down desponding, either under the guilt, or under the power of their sins, and conclude them either so great that they cannot be pardoned, or so strong that they can never be vanquished or overcome! Observe, 3. The reason of this power and ability in Christ to save sinners to the uttermost assigned, and that is, the eternity of his priesthood, the perpetuity and prevalency of his intercession; "Seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them" Here note, 1. The state and condition of Christ as an High-Priest, he ever liveth. He is always living in heaven a threefold life. 1. The eternal life of God in his divine nature; this he liveth in himself. 2. A life of inconceivable glory in his human nature; this is a life which he liveth for himself. 2. A mediatory life in heaven; and this he lives for us. Note, 2. What he doth as an High-Priest in that state and condition: He maketh intercession for us. Learn, That the Lord Jesus Christ ever liveth to make intercession with his Father in heaven, on the behalf of all penitent believers here on earth. We are not to conceive of Christ as an intercessor with his Father in heaven, in such an humble supplicating manner as when here upon earth, with knees bended down, and eyes lifted up to heaven, this is inconsistent with his glorified state. But it is such a pleading and petitioning with his Father as is in the nature of a claim and demand; and it is such a claim and demand made to his Father, as is accompanied with the presenting the memorials of his death unto him. Christ need not use his mouth to plead with his Father in heaven, the bare showing of his wounded body pleads prevalently and perpetually, and this intercession of Christ is a standing evidence of the continuance of his love and care, his pity and compassion to us. Blessed be God that our great High-Priest, who suffered for us, ever liveth in heaven to make intercession for us.

26 For such an High-Priest became us, who is holy, harmless, undefiled, separated from sinners, and made higher than the heavens;

Observe here, 1. Something supposed and necessarily implied, namely, That if we intend to come unto God, we had need of an highpriest to encourage and enable us thereunto; Such an High-Priest became us; implying, that without an highpriest in general we can do nothing in this matter. Observe, 2. The care and kindness of God in providing for us, not only an highpriest, but such an High Priest as our condition required, one that has made atonement for us, procured acceptance, given us assistance, preserved us in grace, and will preserve us unto glory: behold the infinite wisdom, love, grace, and goodness of God, in giving such an High-Priest, as in the qualifications of his person, the glory of his condition, and the discharge of his office, was every way suited to deliver us from a state of apostasy, sin, and misery, and to bring us to himself through a perfect salvation. Observe, 3. The double character given of this High-Priest in his purity. 1. "He is holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners." Thus he was in his conception, birth, life and death, never tainted or stained with the least sin, but both habitually and actually more pure and holy than any priest on earth, or angels in heaven. 2. In his dignity, He is made higher than the heavens; advanced above all the inhabitants of that glorious place, where he ever liveth, and keeps his residence, remaining a Priest for ever not to sacrifice, but to apply effectually his former sacrifice to all believers.

27 Who needeth not daily, as those highpriests, to offer up sacrifice, first for his own sins, and then for the people's: for this he did once, when he offered up himself.

That is, "As Jesus Christ, our great High-Priest, had no sin of his own to expiate, like other highpriests, but his business was to offer for sins; so the oblation and offering he made upon that account, was not bullocks or rams, but himself in sacrifice, and that once, and but once, upon the cross, which once offered sacrifice was abundantly sufficient to take away sin; whereas other highpriests offered for their own sins, and for the people's sins, and that often, which was a token of their insufficiency and imperfection." Learn hence, That no sacrifice could bring us to God, and save us to perfection, but that wherein the Son of God himself was both priest and offering; such an High-Priest became us who offered himself once for all. Learn, 2. That the perfection of Christ's sacrifice makes the repetition of it needless, and the often repeating of it would argue the imperfection both of priest and sacrifice: "He needeth not daily to offer up sacrifice, for this he did once, when he offered up himself."

28 For the law maketh men high-priests, which have infirmity; but the word of the oath, which was since the law, maketh the Son, who is consecrated for evermore.

That is, the Levitical law appointed men to be highpriests that labored under infirmities, were sinners, and subject to mortality; but the promise made to Christ, and confirmed by God's oath long since the law was given, maketh the Son, and none but the Son, (who is perfect, holy, and consecrated to this everlasting office) a priest for evermore. Learn hence, 1. That there never were any more than two sorts of priests in the church; the one made by the law, the other by the oath of God. Learn, 2. That the great foundation of our faith, and the main hinge whereon all our consolation depends, is this, that our High-Priest is the Son of God, and his everlasting continuance in his office is secured by the oath of God.

CHAPTER VIII.

Our apostle having proved the excellency of Christ's priesthood in the former chapter; he proceeds in this to show his faithful execution of that his priestly office, for the good and benefit of his church; proving, by sundry arguments, that his ministry as our great High-Priest, is to be preferred before the Levitical administration: partly with respect to the place where he ministers, which is heaven; partly in respect of the sacrifice which he presents in heaven, his body, his humanity, in which he suffered; and partly with respect to that new and better covenant, whereof he is mediator. Concerning which he thus speaks particularly in the chapter before us.

NOW of the things which we have spoken, this is the sum: We have such an High-Priest, who is set on the right-hand of the throne of the majesty in the heavens;

2 A minister of the sanctuary, and of the true tabernacle which the Lord pitched, and not man.

Observe here, 1. The apostle's preface in which he doth briefly recapitulate the sum and substance of his preceding arguments. "Now of the things which we have spoken, this is the sum. Learn hence, That when doctrines are important, and the matters treated of very weighty and momentous, we should endeavour by all means to make an impression of them upon the minds of our hearers, by a brief recapitulation of the things we have insisted on; thus doth our apostle here. Observe, 2. A declaration of the first general pre-eminence of our High-Priest, and that is taken from his present state and eternal condition. "He is set on the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens." A throne, a sceptre, a crown, are ensigns of majesty, and ornaments of sovereign power: to sit in the throne, is to possess sovereign power and dominion: this Christ now enjoys in heaven, as the reward of his deep humiliation, and as the highest degree of his exaltation. Learn, hence, That the principal glory of the priestly office of Christ depends on the glorious exaltation of his person. Observe, 3. Another pre-eminence of our Lord Jesus Christ, as our great High-Priest; he is called a minister of the sanctuary. A minister; this intimates to us, that our great High-Priest, in the height of his glory condescends to discharge the office of a public minister in the behalf of his church. Our thoughts sometimes dwell upon what Christ did for us on earth, but too seldom are they taken up with the contemplation of what he is still doing for us in heaven. And a minister of the sanctuary or true tabernacle; that is, not of a literary sanctuary and tabernacle here below, for Christ never entered into that, but of the sanctuary of heaven, in which dwelleth all that was represented in the sanctuary here below: Christ our great High-Priest abides in the sanctuary of heaven for us continually: always representing the efficacy of that blood whereby atonement was made for all our sins. O blessed Jesus! Thy being continually in heaven, will draw our hearts and minds continually thither, if so be we are really interested in thy holy administration.

3 For every highpriest is ordained to offer gifts and sacrifices: wherefore it is of necessity that this man have somewhat also to offer.

4 For if we were on earth, he should not be a priest, seeing that there are priests that offer gifts according to the law:

5 Who serve unto the example and shadow of heavenly things, as Moses was admonished of God when he was about to make the tabernacle. For, see, saith he, that thou make all things according to the pattern showed to thee in the mount.

That the Lord Jesus Christ is our great High-Priest under the gospel, the apostle had sufficiently demonstrated and confirmed before. Observe here, How he next declares what is the nature, duty and office of Christ as our High-Priest; namely, to offer gifts and sacrifices. A priest that has nothing to offer is no priest at all; Christ therefore offered as well as other highpriests; but what? Bullocks and rams? In no wise; he offered himself, his whole human nature, soul and body. As to the typical sacrifices he did not, could not offer them, were he upon earth, because he was not of the tribe of Levi, whose proper office it was to meddle with those offerings; therefore leaving the shadow to them, he offered the substance himself; that is, his own body, signified by those shadows. Learn hence, That there was no salvation to be had for us, no, not by Jesus Christ himself, without his sacrifice and oblation; "It was of necessity that he should have somewhat to offer," as well as those priests had of old, according to the law. No salvation without atonement for sin by sacrifice; no sacrifice sufficient for atonement but the death of Christ; and whoever looks for salvation otherwise than in the faith and virtue of that sacrifice, will be disappointed and deceived. But although the oblation was made by Christ on earth, yet the continual application of its efficacy to the souls of believers is made by Christ now in heaven; without which, neither their access to God, nor their peace with God could be maintained, ver. 3, 4. In the fifth verse the apostle asserts, that the Levitical priests here below did perform those administrations which were but shadows of heavenly things above. "Who serve unto the example and shadow of heavenly things." Where to serve, is to officiate as priests, in offering gifts and sacrifices: but this their service was not spiritual and heavenly, but carnal and earthly: Yet a shadow and imitation of heavenly things. Learn hence, That God alone limits the signification and use of all his own institutions. The ministry of the priests of old was only in and about earthly things, not having a resemblance and shadow of heavenly things. We must not take any thing out of God's institutions which he has put in them, nor must we put more in them than God has furnished them withal. To expect that from any ordinance or institution of God which he never intended or designed, is to make an idol of the ordinance, and the way to render it useless, yea, pernicious and perilous to us; to put that into an ordinance which God never put into it, and to expect more from an ordinance than God ever promised, is to overthrow it.

—As Moses was admonished of God, when he was about to make the tabernacle. For, saith he, that thou make all things according to the pattern showed to thee in the mount.

The words imply, that divine institution is the only pure rule of religious worship: Moses did nothing of his own head when he built the tabernacle, but had his directions in every thing from God. If persons will carve out the worship of God according to their own fancies, they may please themselves perhaps, but they never can please their Maker; for nothing is pleasing to God, as to the substance of religious worship, but what is of his own prescribing; consequently all that theatrical pomp which is found in the church of Rome, and makes the worship of God a dead thing, is a mere fornication in religion, and an abomination in the sight of God. All their human inventions are intolerable presumptions: And as Moses was bound to give directions according to the pattern given him, so the priests, in their administrations, were bound to follow Moses' direction. Yet after all, the things which Moses was concerned about, were carnal things; the tabernacle was earthly, the offerings carnal, yet shadows of better things, even of heavenly; for the sanctuary was a shadow of a heavenly sanctuary; the priest, of a better priest; the service of a far better service: this seems to be the intention of our apostle.

6 But now hath he obtained a more excellent ministry, by how much also he is the mediator of a better covenant, which was established upon better promises.

Our apostle, in these words, proves the excellency of Christ's ministry or priesthood above that of Aaron and his sons, from the excellency of the new covenant (or the new dispensation of the covenant of grace) above the old, of which he was the mediator. Now the more excellent the covenant, the more excellent the ministry. Learn hence, 1. That the gospel covenant, or the new covenant, was the best covenant that ever God made with man; not but that the old and new covenant were the same for substance, though not for clearness; indeed temporal things were types and shadows of better things, even of heavenly things: and accordingly believers under the Old Testament were saved by a covenant of grace as well as we. Learn, 2. That the gospel-covenant is therefore a better covenant, because established upon better promises: their promises of old were chiefly temporal, though not only temporal promises. Ours are chiefly spiritual, yet are temporal things promised us also; but more rarely, and with the exception of the cross, or rather they are thrown in as additions to spiritual promises, Mat. vi. 33. But the promises of the covenant of grace are therefore better, because strength and assistance is engaged for, and graciously offered, in order to enable us to perform the conditions of them; the law required sinless obedience; the gospel accepts sincere obedience, and offers grace to perform it. Learn, 3. That Jesus Christ is the mediator of this better covenant: as there was a covenant made between God and man, so there was need of a mediator that the covenant might be effectual: for a mediator is necessary, both where there is a controversy and difference, and also where there is an imparity and distance between persons: in both respects Christ is mediator; and his mediation was needful, that he might bring us to God. God stood upon terms before he would pardon sin. Justice must be satisfied, and that by blood, and that blood of infinite value; therefore Christ is first a sponsor before a mediator; he first satisfies for a breach, before he goes about to make up the breach between God and the sinner: thus was he the mediator of a better covenant.

7 For if that first covenant had been faultless, then should no place have been sought for the second.

8 For finding fault with them, he saith, Behold the days come, (saith the Lord), when I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah:

9 Not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers, in the day when I took them by the hand to lead them out of the land of Egypt; because they continued not in my covenant, and I regarded them not, saith the Lord.

Observe here, 1. What is charged on the first covenant, and that is faultiness: by which we are not to understand any sinful faultiness, but defectiveness and imperfection only: for it was not faulty in the matter and substance of it, as it was instituted and ordained by God, but therefore called faulty because it was obscure, was not so surely ratified, and not attended with that virtue, power, and efficacy, which the new covenant is accompanied with. Observe, 2. Wherein consisteth that defectiveness and imperfection of the first covenant which is here complained of; namely, 1. In its inability to justify and save us, because of our inability, through the weakness of the flesh, to answer the demands of it, Rom. viii. 3. "What the law could not do in that it was weak through the flesh, God sending his own Son in the flesh, &c." The law was not properly weak to us, but we were weak to that. 2. The legal covenant required exact obedience, but afforded no spiritual assistance for the performance of what it required: but the covenant of grace, the new covenant, is called a ministration of the Spirit: and under the gospel we are said not to serve in the oldness of the letter, but in the newness of the spirit. Now, says the apostle, ver. 8. Almighty God finding fault with the Jews for the breach of the former covenant, declared by the prophet Jeremiah, chap. xxxi. 31. That the covenant he would make with all true Israelites for time to come, should not be like that which he made with their fathers in Egypt, which they continued not in the observation of, (wanting those assistances from the Holy Spirit to enable them thereunto, which are procured for us by Christ;) and accordingly, I regarded them not, saith the Lord, but gave them up for their sins, into the hands of their enemies. Observe lastly, How Almighty God makes the imperfections of the old covenant, and the Israelites' instability therein, the reason of his making a new covenant with us, in which grace and assistance is offered to enable us to obey and persevere in obedience: Finding fault with them; that is, for the breach of the former, he saith, "Behold the days come that I will make a new covenant with them." From the whole note, 1. That the grace and glory of the new covenant are much set off and manifested by comparing it with the old. Note, 2. That nothing but effectual grace from Christ will secure our covenant-obedience one moment: what greater motives, or stronger outward obligations to obedience could any people under heaven have, than the Israelites had? But they quickly turned out of the way: therefore, in the new covenant, is this grace promised, in a peculiar manner, as we shall see in the next verse.

10 For this is the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel after those days, saith the Lord; I will put my laws into their mind, and write them in their hearts: and I will be to them a God, and they shall be to me a people.

Observe here, 1. The persons with whom this covenant is made, the house of Israel, and the house of Judah; not made with them as a political body, because their policy was to be dissolved, but as a part of the universal church. Observe, 2. The author of this covenant, and that is God himself, I will make it saith the Lord. Note, That the abolishing of the old covenant and establishing the new, is an act of sovereign wisdom, grace, and authority in God: I will make a new covenant. Observe, 3. What is the great and comprehensive promise of the new covenant. "I will put my laws into their minds, and write them in their hearts; that is, 1. I will make a clear and perspicuous revelation of my mind and will unto them, and give them a thorough knowledge and understanding of my laws, so that their own consciences shall condemn them when they do transgress them. And, 2. By my Holy Spirit I will make a deep and efficacious impression of them upon their hearts and spirits. Where note, That the precepts of the old covenant are all of them turned into promises under the new; their preceptive and commanding power remaineth; but grace is promised for the performance of them. Note farther, That the work of grace, in the new covenant, passeth on the whole soul in all its powers and faculties, to their change and renovation: "I will put my laws into their minds, and write them in their hearts." And, consequently, to deny the necessity and efficacy of the sanctifying and renewing grace of God in the habits and acts of it, is plainly to overthrow the evangelical covenant. Observe, 4 What is the relation which is here said to ensue between God and his people; "I will be to them a God, and they shall be to me a people." Here note, 1. God's relation to us: I will be to them a God, I who am all sufficient in myself, will be your all sufficient preserver, and your all-sufficient rewarder. As nothing less than God's becoming our God can relieve and help us? so nothing more can be required thereunto. Note, 2. Our relation to God, they shall be to me a people; that is, a special and peculiar people, owning dependency upon him, and professing all subjection and obedience to him. And observe, God undertakes for this, they shall be to me a people. Learn thence, That God doth as well undertake for our being his people, as he doth for his being our God: he that assumes them into that relation freely, will preserve them in it powerfully: "I will be to them a God, and they shall be to me a people."

11 And they shall not teach every man his neighbour, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord, for all shall know me, from the least to the greatest.

Those words are not to be understood absolutely but comparatively: they are a promise, that under the new covenant dispensation the Holy Spirit shall be so plentifully poured forth, and the light of the gospel so clearly shine forth, that there shall not be such need as under the law, to teach men the knowledge of God, and their duty to him; they shall not need, in such a manner as formerly, to instruct one another in the meaning of the types and shadows of the law: they shall all know me: that is, all ranks and degrees of men, all sorts and conditions of persons, shall own me to be the Lord. Note here, What abuse is put upon this text by some, who bring it to set aside the necessity of human teaching; for it is by such teaching that God gives men the knowledge of himself. Learn hence, that there is a duty incumbent on every man to instruct others according to his ability and opportunity, in the knowledge of God. But, Lord, pity us, we have more, that mutually teach one another sin, folly, vanity, yea, villany of all sorts, than the knowledge of God and the duty we owe unto him! This is not what God here promiseth believers in a way of grace, but what he hath given up careless unbelieving professors to, in a way of vengeance.

12 For I will be merciful to their unrighteousness, and their sins and their iniquities will I remember no more.

This is the great fundamental promise of the covenant of grace, pardon of sin. Thence learn, that free and undeserved grace, in the pardon of sin, is the original spring and foundation of all covenant-mercies and blessings. Observe farther, How copiously the Spirit of God sets forth the benefits of pardoning grace, I will forgive and forget; I will be merciful, and remember no more; pardoning mercy is full as well as free. Observe lastly, The aggravating names here given to sin, it is called unrighteousness, because nothing can be more unequal and unjust, than for man to sin against God his creator, his ruler and benefactor; and iniquity, or a transgression of the law, an erring and swerving from the rule of holiness, which we are to walk by. Learn hence, 1. That the aggravations of sin are great and many, which the consciences of convinced sinners ought to have regard unto. Learn, 2. That we can never understand aright the glory and excellency of pardoning mercy, unless we are convinced of the greatness and vileness of our sins in these several aggravations of them. Learn, 3. That the covenant of grace fully assures us, that there are riches of grace and abundance of pardoning mercy in God, which disposes him, for Christ's sake, to be merciful to penitent sinners' unrighteousness, and to remember their transgressions no more, how many and heinous soever they have been.

13 In that he saith, a new covenant, he hath made the first old. Now that which decayeth, and waxeth old, is ready to vanish away.

The apostle, having, in the foregoing verses, proved the insufficiency of the old covenant, and the necessity of the new, and given the preference to the latter above the former; in this last verse he acquaints us with the abrogation of the old covenant, it is made old; and with the abolition of it, it is ready to vanish away: as the old things lose their power, strength, and vigor; so the old covenant lost its binding power and obliging force. And as that which waxeth old moulders away by little and little, till at last it does totally vanish, and utterly perish; thus the legal dispensation by little and little decayed, until it wholly ceased at last: yea, it is observable, that the whole policy and Jewish government did vanish away, and totally expire in a few years after the writing of this epistle. Learn hence, 1. That the outward appearance of the legal administration was glorious, and very taking to the Jews: the fabric of the temple, the ornaments of the priests, the order of their worship, had a glory in them which dazzled the eyes, and captivated the minds and affections of the people. Learn,

2. That all this glory did gradually vanish, and at last totally disappear: all the glorious institutions of the law were at best but as stars in the firmament of the church, and consequently were all to disappear at the rising of the Sun of Righteousness: in that he saith, a new covenant, he hath made the first old; now that which decayeth and waxeth old, is ready to vanish away.

CHAPTER IX.

Our apostle having, in the last verse of the foregoing chapter, asserted that the old covenant made with the church at Sinai, with all the ordinances of worship and privileges thereunto belonging, was taken away and ceased; and well knowing how hard and very difficult it would be to persuade the Hebrews to forego those things which they were so exceedingly fond of, they looking upon them to be (as indeed they were) of God's own appointment, and expected all their happiness to depend upon a strict observation of them, and a firm adherence to them; he comes in this chapter to make a comparison between the old and new covenant, between the legal and the evangelical dispensation, showing that the former was to cease, and that it was greatly to the church's advantage that it should do so, yea, absolutely necessary, that it might be brought unto that state of perfection it was designed unto; and accordingly thus he speaks, ver. 1.

THEN verily the first covenant had also ordinances of divine service, and a worldly sanctuary.

In this, and the following verses, the apostle gives us a particular and distinct view of the typical ordinances in the old covenant under the Mosiac dispensation, and also of their accomplishment in Jesus Christ: and here in general he acquaints us, that the first covenant had an outward legal service, with sundry rights and ordinances of divine worship, and a worldly sanctuary, raised by men, of earthly materials; a temporary tabernacle; verily the first covenant had ordinances of divine service, &c. Observe here, that there never was any covenant between God and man, but it had some ordinances and institutions of divine worship annexed unto it; the original covenant of works had the ordinances of the tree of life, and the tree of knowledge of good and evil. The covenant of Sinai, whereof the apostle here speaks, had a multitude of them; and the gospel covenant is not destitute of them; witness our sacraments and public worship. Observe, 2. That all ordinances for worship must be resolved into divine ordination or institution, as that which renders them acceptable and well pleasing unto God: a worship not ordained by God is not acceptable to God; it had ordinances of worship. Observe lastly, How God can animate outward carnal things with an hidden invisible spring of glory and efficacy. So he did their sanctuary with its relation unto Christ, which was an object of faith, which no eye of flesh could behold.

2 For there was a tabernacle made; the first wherein was the candlestick, and the table, and the show-bread: which is called the sanctuary,

3 And after the second veil, the tabernacle which is called The Holiest of all :

4 Which had the golden censer, and the ark of the covenant overlaid round about with gold, wherein was the golden pot that had manna, and Aaron's rod that budded, and the tables of the covenant ;

5 And over it the cherubims of glory shadowing the mercy-seat; of which we cannot now speak particularly.

In these verses, the Holy Ghost, by the apostle, sets before our eyes the beautiful face of God's public worship, under the ceremonial law. And first, he describes the place appointed by God for his solemn worship. This was, first, the tabernacle, then the temple: the tabernacle was an ambulatory temple; the temple a standing tabernacle. The tabernacle was a type and figure of Christ's incarnation, whereby the fulness of the Godhead dwelt in him bodily, as it dwelt typically in the tabernacle; this tabernacle had two parts, the sanctuary or holy place, and the sanctum sanctorum, or the holy of holies. Our apostle tells us what sacred utensils were, by God's appointment, in both these places. 1. In the sanctuary there was the candlestick, representing that fulness of light which is Christ, and which is by him communicated to the whole church. The table whereon stood the show-bread, typifying the saints' communion with Christ, and with one another; also the show-bread itself, which typified Christ, as being the only bread of life to his church, the only spiritual food of the soul that nourishes it unto life eternal. 2. In the holy of holies there was the golden censer, which was to hold the incense. This represented the intercession of Christ, which gives efficacy to the prayers of all believers: the prevalency of all our prayers depends on the incense which is in the hand of our merciful High-Priest. The ark of the covenant overlaid with gold; this, with the mercy-seat which covered the ark, was the most glorious and mysterious utensil of the tabernacle, the most eminent pledge of the divine presence; called the ark of the covenant, because the two tables, in which the ten commandments were writ by the finger of God, were kept in it; next the golden pot, in which the manna was laid up, and miraculously kept from putrefaction (which of itself would have stunk in a few days) a type of Christ the bread of life. Then Aaron's rod that budded: this originally was the rod of Moses, wherewith he fed his sheep in the wilderness, and afterwards wrought his miracles, and particularly smote the rock with it till it gushed out water. When Aaron was called to the office of the priesthood, it was delivered unto his keeping. This rod of Moses, wherewith he smote the rock, is commanded to be laid up in the tabernacle, because the spiritual rock that followed them was to be smitten with the rod of the law, that it might give forth the waters of life unto the church. Last of all the tables of the covenant; that is, the two tables of stone cut out by Moses, and written on with the finger of God, containing the ten commandments, which were the substance of God's covenant with the people. These two tables of stone were by the express command of God, put into the ark, and there was nothing else in the ark but them. The pot of manna, and Aaron's rod, were laid up in the holy of holies, near the ark, but not in it, which were of no actual use in the service of God, but only kept as sacred memorials. Having thus described what was in the ark, next the apostle tells us what was over the ark, namely, the cherubims and the mercy seat. The cherubims were Alata animalia, winged creatures, of human shape, but wings, to denote their angelical nature; there were two of them, one at each end of the ark, shadowing the mercy-seat; from between these cherubims, over the mercy-seat, it was God that manifested his majestical presence, spake unto Moses, and gave out his oracles as a prince spake from his throne. The mercy-seat was of pure beaten gold, the measure of it exactly answering the ark: this covered the ark wherein the law was; and was a type of Christ, who fully covers our sins; the transgressions of the law, out of God's sight; and is therefore called by the apostle, Rom. iii. 25. our propitiatory, or propitiation, or mercy-seat. "For if thou, Lord, shouldst mark iniquities, according to the law, who could stand?" These are the particular things which the apostle thought fit to take notice of, in the Jewish tabernacle; all which we see pointed at Christ; and there was in them all, more or less, a representation of the person and mediation of Christ. Hereunto were they designed, by divine wisdom, to denote, that in him alone is God well pleased, in him alone will he be glorified.

6 Now, when these things were thus ordained, the priests went always into the first tabernacle, accomplishing the service of God:

7 But into the second went the high-priest alone once every year, not without blood, which he offered for himself, and for the errors of the people:

8 The Holy Ghost this signifying, that the way into the holiest of all was not yet made manifest, while as the first tabernacle was yet standing:

9 Which was a figure for the time then present, in which were offered both gifts and sacrifices, that could not make him that did the service perfect as pertaining to the conscience;

10 Which stood only in meats and drinks, and divers washings, and carnal ordinances, imposed on them until the time of reformation.

Our apostle having given an account, in the preceding verses, of the structure or fabric of the tabernacle, in the two parts of it which belonged to the priest; namely, the holy place, and the holy of holies, (for of the first court, the court of the people, he says nothing); he comes now to discourse of this service, which, by the appointment of God, the priests were to perform in this magnificent structure.

— Now, when these things were thus ordained, the priest went always into the first tabernacle, accomplishing the service of God.

Where Observe, 1. The persons administering, the Priests only, and they of the posterity of Aaron: all others were forbidden upon pain of excision. Observe, 2. The general foundation of the services of these priests in the sanctuary. They entered into it, but were to go no farther; they must not so much as look into the holy of holies: no, nor yet abide in the sanctuary when the highpriest entered into the most holy place. Observe, 3. The time of this their entrance into the sanctuary to discharge their service, always; that is, every day, and at all times, as occasion did require. Observe, 4. The service itself, accomplishing the service of God; these services were either daily or weekly: daily, were dressing the lamps, supplying them with holy oil, morning and evening, also the service of the golden altar, on which the priests burnt incense every day. The weekly service of the sanctuary was the changing of the show-bread every sabbath in the morning. All the service was typical, representing the continual application of the benefits of Christ's sacrifice unto his church to the end of the world. The tabernacle itself, and the inhabitation of God in it, was a type of the incarnation of the Son of God. All the utensils of it were representations of his grace. He is the light and life of the church, the lamp and the bread thereof. The incense of his intercession renders all our obedience acceptable unto God; and accordingly there was continual application unto these things without intermission, every day: signifying unto us that a continual application unto God by Christ, and a continual application of the mediation of Christ by faith, are the springs of light, life and comfort of the church. Having thus described the priest's service in the first part of the temple, ver. 6, he comes now to declare the service and administration of the highpriest in the second part of the temple, or holy of holies, ver. 7.

— But into the second went the highpriest alone once every year, not without blood, which he offered for himself, and for the errors of the people.—

Observe here, 1. The person administering described, the highpriest alone; none of the priests were permitted to be so near him as the sanctuary, when he administered in the most holy place. Thus sacredly was the presence of God, in the holy of holies, made inaccessible not only to the people, but even to all the priests themselves. The great truth which was represented and shadowed forth was, that there was no entrance into the gracious presence of God, but by our great High-Priest the holy Jesus. The highpriest alone, and no other person, entered into the holy of holies. Observe, 2. The highpriest engaging in his services. "He entered through the veil into the holy place." This was a type both of the entrance of Christ into heaven; and of our entrance by him into the throne of grace. We read, Mat. xxvii. 51. of the rending of this veil, at the death of our Saviour, from top to bottom: signifying thereby, that the way was laid open into the holy place, and the gracious presence of God discovered, and made accessible to all that come unto him by Jesus Christ. Observe, 3. The time of this service expressed, it was once only every year; and the day, the precise day of the year, determined, Lev. xvi. 29. to wit, the tenth day of the month Tisri, answering our September called the great day of atonement; on which day such a complete atonement was made for sin, that the Jews had a saying, "that on the day of expiation all Israel was made as innocent as in the day of creation." Observe, 4. The nature of this service; the apostle tells us, it was not without blood, that is, he did it by blood, sprinkling it seven times with his finger towards the mercy-seat, Lev. xvi. 11, 12. There is an emphasis in the expression, not without blood, to manifest the necessity of the death and blood-shedding of Jesus Christ our great High-Priest, and the impossibility of our entering into the gracious presence of God without the blood of the reconciling sacrifice Christ Jesus. Observe, 5. For whom his blood was offered; first for himself, then for the people; that is, for his own sins, and the sins of the people: this argued the great imperfection of that state; whereas Christ our great High-Priest, was not to offer up the blood of goats, but his own blood, not for himself at all, but for others only; not once a year, but once for all; "by one offering he hath for ever perfected them that are sanctified."

— The Holy Ghost this signifying, that the way into the holiest of all was not yet made manifest.

The apostle, in this verse, declares the spiritual use and signification of the Levitical service, and what the Holy Ghost did intend thereby; namely, that the true and proper means to enter into heaven, the holy of holies, was not so fully and clearly manifested; and that heaven, represented by the holy of holies, was as yet inaccessible; for Christ first entered into heaven as our forerunner, with his blood to appear before God, and thereby prepare the way for our entrance after him. Hence learn, 1. That the Holy Ghost's design, in all the Levitical service, was to direct the faith of believers to Christ the promised Messiah, who was signified thereby; the Holy Ghost thus signifying. Learn, 2. That although typical institutions, attended diligently unto, were sufficient to direct the faith of the Jews unto the expectation of a real expiation of sin, and a gracious acceptance with God thereupon; yet the clear manifestation of the way of expiation of sin by the blood of Christ, is the great privilege and discovery of the gospel. Learn, 3. Although the standing of the first tabernacle was a great mercy and privilege, yet the removal of it was a greater, because it made way for the bringing in of that which was much better, the gospel state.

— Which was a figure for the time then present, in which were offered both gifts and sacrifices, that could not make him that did the service perfect as pertaining to the conscience,— —Which stood only in meats and drinks and divers washings, and carnal ordinances, imposed on them until the time of reformation.

As if the apostle had said, “the first tabernacle was but a figure, or typical representation of good things to come, serving only for the present non-age of the church: for the gifts and sacrifices then offered could not, of themselves, perfectly justify, sanctify, or save any man, nor could they pacify the conscience of the sinner.” Where note, that conscience cannot be satisfied until God’s wrath be pacified, Now, the ceremonial rites could not pacify God’s wrath, because they could not satisfy God’s justice: nothing but the blood of Christ could do that, which those sacrifices were only typical representations and prefigurations of.—Observe farther, the apostle’s reasons why those legal rites could not make them perfect; namely, because the nature of them was such, that they reached only to the outward man, consisting only, for the most part, in meats, drinks, and divers washings, that concerned the flesh and body of man, which did not of themselves, commend any man to God, and were imposed upon them as a yoke, until the times of reformation; that is, the time of the Messiah, the time of the New Testament dispensation. Note here, the great impression of the Jewish dispensation, it was weak and imperfect and consequently not to be continued. Note farther, that nothing can give peace to conscience but what gives satisfaction to God’s justice. Whoever seeks it in any other way, than by virtue of Christ’s atonement, will never attain it in this world, or that which is to come; no offerings could make him that did the service perfect, as pertaining to the conscience.

11 But Christ being come an high-priest of good things to come, by a greater and more perfect tabernacle, not made with hands, that is to say, not of this building;

12 Neither by the blood of goats and calves, but by his own blood, he entered in once into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us.

Our apostle having showed, in the preceding verses, how, and after what manner, the Levitical priests executed their office, he comes now to declare how, and after what manner Christ, our great High-Priest, did also execute his. And, 1. As the Levitical priests had a tabernacle, an earthly sanctuary, to officiate in; so Christ had a greater and more perfect tabernacle to execute his office in, namely, that of his own body, not like theirs, made with hands, but miraculously formed in the virgin’s womb, by the overshadowing power of the Holy Ghost; in which tabernacle the fullness of the Godhead dwelt substantially. The human nature of Christ was that tabernacle in which the Son of God administered his sacerdotal office in this world, and wherein he continueth yet to do so in heaven by his intercession. And well may this tabernacle be called greater, being so not in quantity and measure, but in dignity and worth; and more perfect, that is, more perfectly fitted and suited to the end of a tabernacle, both for the inhabitation of the divine nature, and the means of exercising the sacerdotal office, in the making atonement for sin, than the other was. Learn hence, that the human nature of Christ, in which he exercised and discharged the duties of his sacerdotal office, in making atonement for sin, is the greatest, most perfect, and excellent ordinance of God, far excelling those that were most excellent under the Old Testament. The glory of this tabernacle of our Saviour’s body in heaven, will be the object of holy admiration unto all eternity, as it was admirably fitted and perfected for service and usefulness here on earth. Observe, 2. The apostle declares, that as Christ had a more excellent tabernacle, so he was incomparably a more excellent High-Priest than ever the legal dispensation had; they entered the holy of holies, he entered heaven; they entered often, he but once; they entered with the blood of goats and calves, he in his own blood. And the effect, fruit, and benefit of it was unspeakable: thereby he obtained eternal redemption for us. Note here, that whereas it is said that Christ entered into heaven with his own blood, it is not so to be understood, as if he carried the material blood which he shed with him into heaven, in a vessel or otherwise, as the highpriest carried the blood of the sacrifice in his hand into the most holy place; but that Christ presented his body in heaven, out of which the blood was shed, and by the merit of his death, made expiation for sin, and purchased eternal redemption for sinners. Learn hence, that the entrance of our Lord Jesus Christ, as our Great High-Priest, into heaven, to appear in the presence of God for us, and to save thereby to the utmost was a matter so great and glorious, that it could not be accomplished but by his own blood. No other sacrifice was sufficient to this end; not by the blood of bulls and goats.

13 For if the blood of bulls, and of goats, and the ashes of a heifer, sprinkling the unclean, sanctifieth to the purifying of the flesh;

14 How much more shall the blood of Christ, who, through the Eternal Spirit, offered himself without spot to God, purge your conscience from dead works, to serve the living God?

The apostle had asserted, in the former verse, that eternal redemption was the fruit of Christ’s sacrifice: he proves it in these, and that by an argument drawn from the less to the greater: thus, “If,” says he, “the blood of bulls and goats, and the water that was mixed with the ashes of the burnt heifer, (or red cow mentioned, Numbers xix) purified from ceremonial uncleanness, and procured the external sanctification of the flesh, or outward man; how much more shall the blood of Christ, who, by the eternal spirit, (that is, his Godhead, his divine nature) offered up himself, his whole man, soul, and body, a sacrifice, without spot, to God the father, be able to purge our consciences from all spiritual impurity and uncleanness of sin, (that dead, because deadly work,) and render us fit to serve the living God in an holy course of christian obedience? Note here, 1. That Christ's offering himself to God was a special act, as High-Priest of the church, wherein he gave up himself in a way of most profound obedience, to do and to suffer whatever the justice of God required unto the expiation of sin, even to the shedding of his blood. Note, 2. That Christ's Godhead it was, which rendered the suffering of his manhood infinitely meritorious; or that Christ's blood was effectual, not simply as it was material blood, but as offered by the eternal Spirit; his blood, though not the blood of God, yet was the blood of him that was God. Note, 3. That the purging of our consciences from dead works is an immediate effect of the death of Christ, and a benefit which, upon our faith and obedience, we are made partakers of. Note, 4. That the best works of men, antecedently unto the purging of their consciences by the blood of Christ, are but dead works, unsuitable to the nature of the living God. Lord help us to remember, that when we come to hear, to pray, or perform any act of worship, that we are doing it to the living God. O how improper for, and unsuitable to, a living God, are dead services without life, without heart, without spirit?

15 And for this cause he is the Mediator of the New Testament, that by means of death, for the redemption of the transgressions that were under the first testament, they which are called might receive the promise of eternal inheritance.

16 For where a testament is, there must also of necessity be the death of the testator.

17 For a testament is of force after men are dead: otherwise it is of no strength at all whilst the testator liveth.

These words represent unto us one special benefit accruing by the death of Christ, namely, the ratification of the gospel covenant; for by this means he took upon him the glorious office to be the Mediator of the new covenant, that by the intervention of his death he might make satisfaction for the sins of believers under the Old Testament, as well as for those that live under the New; and that as well those that lived before Christ's coming in the flesh as since, might by virtue of his death, obtain the promised eternal inheritance. Note here, that God designed an eternal inheritance unto some persons; that the persons designed are they that are called; that the way and manner of conveying a right and title to this inheritance was by promise; that there was an obstacle to the enjoyment of this inheritance, which was transgression against the first covenant; that this obstacle might be removed, and the inheritance enjoyed, God made a new covenant; which had a Mediator, who expiated sin by the sacrifice of his death. Note farther, That the efficacy and merit of Christ's death and mediation extends itself to all that are effectually called, as we those that lived before his coming in the flesh, as those that lived since. Note lastly, how the covenant of grace is here called a Testament, because it received its ratification and confirmation by the blood of Christ.—All things required in a testament are here found, namely, a testator deceased, Christ Jesus; legacies bequeathed, temporal, spiritual, and eternal blessings; legatees named, the heirs of promise; conditions required, upon which only the legacies may be obtained, faith, repentance, and sincere obedience; seals annexed, baptism, and the Lord's Supper; witnesses subscribing, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost.—The sum is this, that the death of Christ is the foundation, life, and soul of the new covenant; and that the new covenant is of the nature of a testament, and the benefits promised therein: to wit, remission of sin, reconciliation with God, sanctification on earth, and glorification in heaven, are legacies freely left us by our deceased Testator, who was dead but is alive again, and lives for evermore, to execute his own will and testament, of which the scripture is the instrument, and the sacraments the seals. Learn, from the whole, 1. That there is an irrevocable grant of the whole inheritance of grace and glory made unto believers in the new covenant. 2. That as the grant of these things is free and gracious, so the enjoyment of them is secured against contingencies, by the death of Jesus Christ the great Testator. A testament is of force after men are dead; but of no strength at all while the testator liveth.

18 Whereupon, neither the first testament was dedicated without blood.

19 For when Moses had spoken every precept to all the people according to the law, he took the blood of calves and of goats, with water and scarlet wool, and hyssop, and sprinkled both the book and all the people.

20 Saying, This is the blood of the testament, which God hath enjoined unto you.

21 Moreover, he sprinkled likewise with blood both the tabernacle and all the vessels of the ministry.

22 And almost all things are by the law purged with blood; and without shedding of blood is no remission.

Our apostle having entered upon a comparison between the first and second covenant in the former verses, he goes on to prosecute it in these; showing that both of them were dedicated, that is, confirmed by blood. The first covenant which God made with Israel in Horeb, had not its sanction without typical blood. The using of blood for the sanction of leagues and covenants was a very ancient rite, and probably signified, that the parties confederating did thereby engage blood and life for the observation of them. Now that the covenant between God and Israel was thus solemnized, and received its confirmation by blood, the apostle makes appear from the history of Moses, Exodus xxiv. unto which he appeals; where we find the sprinkler to be Moses, the sprinkling to be blood, the things sprinkled were the book wherein the covenant was written, and the people who engaged themselves in the covenant. Now the use and end of this sprinkling upon the people, was the confirmation of the covenant on their part, as the sprinkling of it upon the altar was the confirmation on God's part. And the words added to the action were, this is the blood of the covenant; that is, this is the blood by which the covenant is confirmed, and made inviolable betwixt God and you: he calls it the blood of the covenant, because it was a sign of it, and a real confirming it. In like manner, the new covenant was confirmed by blood, even by the blood of Christ, as is evident from his own words. Luke xii. 20. This cup is the new testament in my blood for remission of sin. Remission of sin is one principal blessing promised in the new covenant; but this promise had been in vain, if Christ's blood had not been shed to satisfy divine justice, and thereby make sin remissible: for though man had repented, and could have made even hell itself to swim with his tears, yet his sins could not have been remitted, had not this blood made it remissible: so that the blood of Christ is the firm and immovable basis and foundation upon which the new covenant was fixed. This is the first part of our apostle's design in these words: namely, to prove the necessity of Christ's blood for confirmation of the new covenant. Next, he proves the efficacy of that blood for taking away of sin; telling us that the tabernacle, the vessels, and all the utensils thereunto belonging, yea, all the things which were purified, were ceremonially purified by blood; and that, as without shedding of blood then there could be no remission, so no acceptance with God now without the shedding of the blood of Christ. Learn hence, that in all things wherein we have to do with God, and whereby we approach unto him, it is the blood of Christ, and the application of it to our consciences, that gives a gracious acceptance with God; without this all is unclean and defiled now, as without shedding of blood there was no purification then.

23 It was therefore necessary that the patterns of things in the heavens should be purified with these; but the heavenly things themselves with better sacrifices than these.

As if the apostle had said, "if the tabernacle and utensils thereunto belonging, which were patterns and types of heavenly things, must be consecrated by the blood of bulls and goats, much more must the heavenly things themselves, which were shadowed by them, be purified and consecrated by better blood than the blood of beasts, even with the precious blood of Jesus Christ." Learn hence, 1. That there is such uncleanness in our natures, in our persons, in our duties, in all our services, that, unless they and we are purified by the blood of Christ, neither we nor they can have any acceptance with God. Learn, 2. That the sacrifice of Christ is the one only everlasting fountain and spring of all sanctification and sacred dedication, whereby the whole new creation is purified and dedicated unto God. Learn, 3. That neither heaven itself, nor heavenly things, could have been made meet for us, or we for them, had not they been dedicated, and we purged, by the sacrifice of Christ. By heavenly things here we may understand heaven itself, of which the tabernacle was a type. Now as the purification of the tabernacle was only to prepare it to be a place in which their persons might be presented before God; in like manner, was heaven itself prepared and purified for us by our Lord's entrance into it with his own atonement, or propitiatory sacrifice. Christ's entering into heaven, and his appearing with his blood of sprinkling in the presence of God for us, procures the acceptance of our prayers and praises whilst we live, and our admission into those heavenly mansions of bliss and glory prepared for us when we die.

24 For Christ is not entered into the holy places made with hands, which are the figures of the true: but into heaven itself, now to appear in the presence of God for us.

Observe here, 1. The person spoken of, and that is Christ, our Great High Priest, the mediator of the new covenant.— Observe, 2. What is spoken of him, 1. Negatively, that he is not entered into the holy place of the sanctuary, or tabernacle made with hands, that is, built by the hands of men, which was a figure of the true holy of holies, to wit, heaven. All God's appointments in his service have their proper season, their proper glory, beauty, and use; even the tabernacle, and the external utensils thereof, made with men's hands, had so, whilst they had the force of a divine institution. 2. Positively, He is entered into heaven itself, the place of the peculiar residence of the presence, majesty, and glory of God; where all his blessed saints enjoy him, and his holy angels minister unto him. Observe, 3. The end of our great High-priest's entrance into heaven declared, now to appear in the presence of God for us. The priests of old, when they entered the holy place, were forced soon to go out again to prepare for a new sacrifice: but this word now is expressive of the whole season and duration of time; from the entrance of Christ into heaven, until the consummation of all things: there is no moment of time in which it may not be said, he now appeareth in the presence of God for us. Learn, hence, That the continual appearance of our Lord Jesus Christ for us in heaven, as our great High-Priest, in the presence of his Father, is the foundation both of our safety and our comfort, from whence relief may be derived upon all occasions, whatever difficulties, temptations and trials may be before us.

25 Nor yet that he should offer himself often, as the highpriest entereth into the holy place every year with blood of others.

26 (For then must he often have suffered since the foundation of the world,) but now once in the end of the world, hath he appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself.

Our apostle, in these words, sets forth the excellency of Christ's sacrifice from its singularity; it needeth no repetition, as their sacrifices of old did; their sacrifices were repeated often, and their repetition was an evidence of their imperfection: but Christ's once offering himself a sacrifice was sufficient, in regard of the infinite worth and dignity of his person: once in the end of the world, in the gospel-age, the last age of the world, hath he appeared to take away sin by the sacrifice of himself. Here note, that the virtue of Christ's sacrifice once offered, did extend itself to all times, and purchased pardon for sins committed in all ages, even long before it was offered: for the death of Christ must be considered, not as a natural, but as a moral cause: not as a medicine that heals, but as a ransom that frees a captive. A captive may be released upon assurance given that a ransom shall be paid, though it be not actually paid. Thus the death of Christ was available to purchase pardon for believers before his coming, because he interposed as their Surety: and is therefore called the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world, not only in respect of God's decree, but Christ's efficacy: the salvation we derive from him, was ever in him; Christ's once offering was sufficient; his sacrifice may be often commemorated, but only once offered.—Such indeed is the absolute perfection of the once offering of Christ, that it stands in need of, and will admit of no repetition in any kind. Note farther, that this once offering of Christ is always effectual unto all the ends of it, now and hereafter, even no less than it was in the day and hour when it was actually offered. This sacrifice needs no repetition like those of old, but is always fresh in the virtue of it, and needs nothing but renewed application by faith for the communication of its effects and fruits unto us; for by one offering he hath for ever perfected them that are sanctified. Though the sufferings of Christ were necessary to the expiation of sin, yet he suffered neither more nor oftener than was necessary; to have suffered often was altogether needless, and would have been useless. Note lastly, the great end for which Christ once became a sacrifice, namely, to put away sin; plainly implying, that sin had erected a dominion, a tyranny over all men, as by a law; that no power of any mere creature was able to disannul or abolish this law of sin; that the destruction and dissolution of this law of sin, was the great end of Christ's coming to discharge his priestly office in the sacrifice of himself: "Now in the end of the world hath he appeared to put away, to abolish and destroy sin, by the sacrifice of himself."

27 And as it is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment:

28 So Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time, without sin unto salvation.

These words may be considered relatively and absolutely. Relatively thus; "as God hath appointed that all men should once die penally for sin, and then be judged, so did he determine that Christ should once suffer penally, to expiate sin, and take away the guilt of it fully. And as after death men must appear the second time to judgment, so after his once offering to take away sin and death, Christ shall appear the second time to bestow upon us eternal salvation." Note here, that Christ's being offered to take away the sins of many, cannot be meant of his taking them away in the Socinian sense, to wit, by his holy doctrine, which was confirmed by his death, but of his bearing our sins by way of imputation: for this is evident from the opposition here, between his first appearance and his second: Christ was once offered to bear our sins, but he shall appear a second time without sin. Why? Did he not appear the first time without sin? Yes, certainly he did, as to any inherent guilt: for the scripture assures us he had no sin. What then is the meaning of the opposition, at his first coming he bore our sins; at his second coming he shall appear without sin? The words can have no other imaginable sense but this: that at his first coming he sustained the person of sinner, and died as a sacrifice; but at his second coming he shall appear as a judge, to confer eternal life on those who are made partakers of the sacrifice of his death. Thus the words are to be considered relatively. Absolutely thus, "It is appointed for all men once to die." Here is the first word of certainty, all men must die: then the word of singularity, they must once die, not often; once and but once; they die by statute and appointment. The supreme Lord of life and death appoints man his time, both for coming into the world, and going out of it; we come in at his command, and leave it at his dispose. And after death the judgment: the word after signifies the order of time: for death goes before, and judgment follows it. The judgment is both particular of every individual person, and general and universal of all: after which follows the first, eternal, and unalterable condition of man, either in a state of misery, or felicity. The parties judged will be angels and men; the person judging, Jesus Christ: he, by redeeming mankind, obtained right and power to judge mankind; such a Judge as the power of the mightiest cannot daunt; such a Judge as the subtilty of the wisest cannot delude; such a Judge as the richest of the wealthiest cannot bribe: in a word, such a Judge as there is no appealing from, or repealing of his sentence. O great day! when the stiffest knee shall bow at the tribunal of Jesus Christ, and the strongest back shall break under the insupportable burden of a Redeemer's wrath! when the Alexanders and Cesars, which once shook the earth, and made the world to tremble, shall revere and lie prostrate at the foot of Christ! And, Lord, seeing that judgment is before us, let us seriously believe it, daily expect it, duly prepare for it: let no profit tempt us, no pleasure entice us, no power embolden us, no privacy encourage us, to do that thing which we cannot account for at thy tribunal. AMEN.

CHAPTER X.

The design of our apostle in the chapter before us, is twofold; first, to show the weakness and imperfection of the Levitical sacrifices considered in themselves, and the necessity and efficacy of the sacrifice of Christ. Secondly, to improve this doctrine unto faith, obedience, and perseverance in our christian profession unto the death, by several weighty arguments; showing particularly, the fatal danger of apostacy from Christ, and his holy religion.

FOR the law having a shadow of good things to come, and not the very image of the things, can never with those sacrifices, which they offered year by year continually, make the comers thereunto perfect.

In the former part of this chapter, the apostle proves the impotency and imperfection of the Levitical sacrifices by sundry arguments; namely, first from the nature of them, they were but shadows; from the plurality of them, they were many; from the repetition of them, they were often; and from the inefficaciousness of them, they could not take away sin.

The former of these is taken notice of, in this first verse, the law having a shadow of good things to come. An allusion probably to the art of painting, wherein a shadow is first drawn; and afterwards the very image itself: or a metaphor taken from the shadow of a body in the light of the sun. As the shadow is the representation of a body; a just and true representation of it, and of nothing else, yet but an obscure representation of a body; the life, vigor, and spirit of a body, cannot be represented by it: thus was it between the sacrifices of the law, and the sacrifice of Christ; the blood of those sacrifices were representations of Christ: they were a just representation of Christ: he was the idea in the mind of God, when Moses was charged to make all things according to the pattern showed him in the mount; and they were but an obscure and dark representation of him; the glory and efficacy of these good things appeared not visible in them. Learn hence, that whatever there may be in religious institutions, and the diligent observation of them, if they only shadow forth Jesus Christ, and do not actually exhibit him to the faith of believers, with the benefits of his mediation, they cannot make us perfect, nor give us acceptance with God.

—Those sacrifices which they offered year by year continually, make the comers thereunto perfect.

2 For then would they not have ceased to be offered? because that the worshippers once purged, should have had no more conscience of sins.

3 But in those sacrifices there is a remembrance again made of sins every year.

Here we have a second argument to prove the impotency and weakness of the legal sacrifices; and it is drawn from the repetition and non-cessation from them. Thus, "those sacrifices which were often repeated, year by year, could not of themselves make satisfaction for sin, or purge the conscience of the sinner from guilt. Had justice been satisfied, and conscience quieted, there had been no reason why those sacrifices should have been so often repeated. But the case was otherwise, for in their most solemn sacrifices there was a commemoration and confession made of their former sins by the highpriest every year; which was an intimation to them, that they needed a new and better sacrifice for the expiation of sin, namely, that of the Messiah, in and by which alone remission of sin was to be expected and obtained." Learn hence, 1. That the repetition and reiteration of the same sacrifices is an evident demonstration of their weakness and insufficiency. Accordingly the church of Rome, by affirming the sacrifice in the mass to be the very same with that which Christ offered on the cross, do prove an insufficiency in the sacrifice of Christ for the expiation of sin, if the apostle's argument here be good: for he affirms, that all sacrifices that must be repeated are weak and insufficient. Learn, 2. That although repeated sins have need of repeated confession, and renewed pardon, yet they have no need of a sacrifice; for he who is once purged has no more conscience of sin, that is, though he knows he has many sins, yet he has not a trembling, tormenting, accusing conscience, because he is purged, and his sins pardoned, through that one sacrifice of Jesus Christ. Learn, 3. That the discharge of conscience from the guilt of sin, by virtue of the sacrifice of Christ, is a full demonstration of the sufficiency of the virtue of that sacrifice: and that there needs no reiteration of it, but only fresh applications made unto it by repeated acts and exercises of faith.

4 For it is not possible that the blood of bulls and of goats should take away sins.

The intendment of our apostle in these words, is to prove that the sacrifices of the law could not expiate sin, nor make reconciliation with God, which the sacrifice of Christ alone was ordained and appointed to. Here observe, 1. The subject matter spoken of. The blood of bulls and goats: they were accompanied with great solemnity and pomp of ceremony in their celebration: and the people had a great esteem and veneration of them in their minds: but when all was done, that which was offered was no more than the blood of bulls and goats. Observe, 2. That which is denied of these sacrifices, namely, the taking away of sins: to take away sin is to make atonement for sin, to expiate the guilt of it before God, by a satisfaction given, or price paid, that it shall never bind over the penitent sinner unto punishment. Observe, 3. The manner of the negation; it was impossible that the blood of bulls and of goats should take away sins. Impossible from divine institution: they were never designed for that end, therefore could never effect it; for the virtue of every institution depends upon its designation to its end. Now the blood of bulls was only designed to represent the taking away of sin, but never by itself to effect it. And it was also impossible from the nature of the thing; for how could the blood of a beast expiate the sin of a man? satisfaction must be made for sin in and by the same nature that had sinned. Learn hence, that it was utterly impossible that sin should be taken away before God, and from the conscience of a sinner by any other blood than the blood of Christ: it is this alone that cleanseth us from all sin, for he alone was the propitiation for them.

5 Wherefore, when he cometh into the world, he saith, sacrifice and offering thou wouldst not, but a body hast thou prepared me.

6 In burnt-offerings and sacrifices for sin thou hast no pleasure.

7 Then said I, Lo, I come (in the volume of the book it is written of me) to do thy will, O God.

8 Above, when he said, Sacrifice and offering, and burnt-offerings, and offering for sin thou wouldst not, neither hadst pleasure therein (which are offered by the law);

9 Then said he, Lo, I come to do thy will, O God. He taketh away the first, that he may establish the second.

10 By the which will we are sanctified, through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ, once for all.

Our apostle having showed the weakness and insufficiency of the Levitical sacrifices in the former verses, he comes now to declare the efficacy and sufficiency of Christ's sacrifice, and of his blessed undertaking, to do, fulfil, perform, and suffer all things required by the will and wisdom, by the holiness, and righteousness of God, unto the complete salvation of the church. And this he doth by a quotation out of the Old Testament, Psal. xl. 6, 7, 8. Where Christ is brought in, as newly made man, speaking to his Father, in and after this manner: "Forasmuch as thy wisdom did institute, and formerly appoint sacrifices, as types prefigure the sacrifice of thy Son, but thou didst not intend their longer continuance, when he should once be offered up: pursuant to this holy will and pleasure of thine, I am now come into the world: thou hast prepared me a body, an holy and innocent human nature, fit to be united to my glorious Godhead, in which nature I will suffer, and, by my sufferings, satisfy thy justice for sin; and, by the sufficiency of my sacrifice, put a period to all the Levitical sacrifices that did precede me, and prefigure me." Learn, hence, 1. That in the fulness of God's appointed time, Christ came into the world to accomplish that which the Levitical sacrifices did only prefigure, but could not effectuate. 2. That in order thereunto, Christ did assume the human nature, and offered in himself that nature willingly to his Father, as a sacrifice to atone divine displeasure. 3. That by this one sacrifice and oblation of Christ, which he performed in obedience to the will of God, all that believe in him are justified and saved, do obtain remission of sin, grace here, and glory hereafter; "by which will we are sanctified, through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ, once for all."

11 And every priest standeth daily ministering, and offering oftentimes the same sacrifices, which can never take away sins:

12 But this man after he had offered one sacrifice for sins, for ever sat down on the right hand of God;

13 From henceforth expecting till his enemies be made his footstool:

14 For by one offering he hath perfected for ever them that are sanctified.

Our apostle still proceeds upon his former argument, namely, to assign a farther difference between Christ and the Levitical priests. 1. The Levitical priesthood consisted of a plurality of persons; the priests were many; by reason of death they had many successors; but the evangelical priesthood consisted but of one single person, the Lord Jesus, called here, this man. 2. The Levitical priesthood consisted of a plurality of sacrifices; there were also many, many in number, and many in kind, bulls, lambs, goats, &c. but the sacrifice which Christ offered was but one, as to the kind namely, that body which was prepared, ver. 5. 3. The Levitical sacrifices were oftentimes offered, ver. 11. but the sacrifice of Christ was but once offered, 4. The Levitical sacrifices could never take away sin; but Christ by the sacrifice of his death took away sin for ever, fully and everlastingly. 5. The Levitical priests stood and ministered, ver. 11. Every priest standeth daily. This is the posture of servants; but Christ sits, which is the posture of the Lord; this man after he had offered sat down, 6. They stood daily ministering and offering, because their sacrifices could not take away sin: but Christ did his work fully by one offering, and after that sits or rests for ever in heaven. Learn hence, 1. That Christ crucified is the only divine and proper sacrifice under the gospel. Divine, because its institution and appointment was of God: proper, because all the essential properties of an expiatory sacrifice were found in this. It was a living creature offered by a priest; it was offered to God, and it was a sweet savor unto him; and it is the only proper sacrifice of the gospel: doing good is called a sacrifice, Heb. xiii. 16. Righteousness is called a sacrifice, Psal. iv. 5. but not properly, but allusively and metaphorically only. Learn, 2. That the sacrifice of Christ is but of one kind, and was but once offered; yet it is of such unspeakable value, and everlasting efficacy, as to take away sin fully and finally, and to perfect all them that are or shall be sanctified to the end of the world. The virtue of this sacrifice reacheth backward as far as Adam, and reacheth forward to the last believer springing from Adam: and as it reacheth backward and forward to all believers, in former, present, and future ages, so to all the sins of all believers, which are fully purged and expiated by it; the design and end of this oblation being to atone, pacify, and reconcile God, by giving a full and adequate compensation and satisfaction to the justice of God, for the wrong done to the holiness of his law. Thus our Jesus, by one offering, has perfected for ever them that are sanctified.

15 Whereof the Holy Ghost also is a witness to us: for after that he had said before,

16 This is the covenant that I will make with them after those days, saith the Lord, I will put my laws into their hearts, and in their minds will I write them:

17 And their sins and iniquities will I remember no more.

18 Now, where remission of these is, there is no more offering for sin.

Our apostle had asserted the perfection of Christ's sacrifice in the former verses, he proves it in these by the testimony of the Holy Ghost, recorded, Jer. xxxi. 31. where after he had promised a new covenant instead of the old, and had said, this is the covenant I will make with them after these days, namely, when the days of the Old Testament are expired, then he says, I will put my laws into their hearts, and their sins and iniquities will I remember no more. Now seeing God promiseth, under the new covenant, sanctification and remission of sin to all believers, of which covenant Christ is Mediator, and by whose death the covenant is ratified and confirmed, therefore this one sacrifice once offered up is abundantly sufficient. And if remission of sins be obtained by Christ's one sacrifice, there needs no repetition of it, nor any other offering for sin. Learn hence, that the sacrifice of Christ was of that excellent virtue and transcendent merit, that by once offering it took away sin, all sin, and made it eternally remissible; and upon faith actually and eternally remitted: to what purpose then should there be any more offerings for sin? Yea, they who look for and trust to any other, fall into that sin for which there is no remission provided in the covenant, nor shall any other offering be accepted for them for ever; for they despise both the wisdom and grace of God, the blood of Christ, and the testimony of the Holy Ghost; wherefore there is no remission.

Here now we are come to a full end of the doctrinal part of this epistle, concerning the nature of Christ's priesthood, the necessity and efficacy of his sacrifice, the power and prevalence of his intercession. O glorious mysteries; the light of the church of the Gentiles, the glory of the people Israel, the foundation and bulwark of evangelical faith!

19 Having, therefore, brethren, boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus.

20 By a new and living way, which he hath consecrated for us, through the veil, that is to say, his flesh;

21 And having an highpriest over the house of God:

22 Let us draw near with a true heart, in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water.

The apostle having thus finished the doctrinal part of his discourse, and informed their judgment of the excellency of the evangelical service above the Levitical sacrifices, he comes now, in the applicatory part of his discourse, to direct their practice in several weighty and important duties, which appeared to be incumbent upon them; as namely, to draw near to God, ver. 22. to persevere in the christian profession, ver. 23, to stir up one another to love and good works, ver. 24 to continue in christian communion, ver. 25. The first duty exhorted to is to draw near to God, seeing we have boldness, &c. Let us draw near with a true heart. Note here, 1. The duty exhorted to, and that is, to draw near to God; in general, to worship him; in particular to pray unto him, and seek remission of sin and eternal life from him; to come unto God as clothed with glorious majesty, sitting upon a throne of grace, and propitiated by the blood of Christ. Note, 2. The manner of performing this duty, with a pure heart, and in full assurance of faith; with the heart, or we give him a skin instead of a sacrifice; with sincerity of heart, which is the life and soul of all acceptable worship; and with a full assurance of faith grounded upon the fidelity of God, and the immutability of the promise. Note, 3. The qualifications of the person: he that draws near to God, must, 1. Have his heart sprinkled from an evil conscience, that is, his soul cleansed by the blood of Christ, and freed from the accusations of an evil condemning conscience. 2. His body washed with pure water, to wit, the laver of regeneration, which was signified by the legal washings. Note, 4. The encouragement we have thus to draw near to God; and that is threefold: 1. We have a new and living way unto the holiest by the blood of Jesus; an allusion to the legal dispensation, wherein the highpriest had a way to pass through the veil with blood into the holiest, to expiate the people's sins, and obtain mercy for them: ours is called a new way, because newly made manifest; and a living way, because it leads to and ends in life eternal; or a living way, in opposition to the typical way of going into the holiest, which was a dead way to all but the highpriest, and to him too if he entered above once a year, and then also if he entered without blood. Farther, this new and living way is here said to be consecrated through the veil of Christ's flesh; that is, made passable for penitent sinners; the throne of grace made accessible through the blood of a mediator. When Christ died, the veil of the temple was rent, to signify that our great High-Priest was ready to enter the holy place of heaven, to procure eternal redemption for us. 2. Encouragement is boldness, or freedom and liberty to enter into the holiest; a freedom for our prayers to enter heaven whilst we live, and a right and liberty for our persons to enter it when we die. 3. The mean whereby we obtain this liberty, By the blood of Jesus. We, that before could not come near him for our sins, may now come near him by faith in the blood of his Son; for that blood satisfied justice, merited divine favor, and made God accessible. Learn hence, 1. That as sin had made God inaccessible to sinners, as sinners: so the blood of Christ, that new and living way, has made him accessible to believers. 2. That although, from the first promise of Christ, there was always a way for believers to come to God, yet it was not so manifest, as it was after Christ's death and ascension, and the gospel's revelation.

23 Let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering; for he is faithful that promised.

The second duty which the apostle exhorts the Hebrews here unto, is perseverance in the christian faith and hope, in order to the actual enjoyment of the great reward. Where, Observe, 1. The duty itself to hold fast the profession of our faith: not blindly, without due examination: but, having examined the grounds and foundations of our faith, to maintain the profession of it against all temptations and terrors of the world, occasioned by sufferings and persecutions, and against all the cunning arts and insinuations of busy and disputing men, whose design it is to unhinge us from our religion, and make us proselytes to their party and faction: thus let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering. Observe, 2. The reason enforcing this duty, because he is faithful that has promised. Mark the gradation: we have a promise, even a promise of eternal glory, as the reward of our perseverance. This promise is God's promise, not man's, and the promise of a faithful God, who neither can nor will change his mind; he can as soon change his being as change his word and promise; He is faithful, &c.

24 And let us consider one another to provoke unto love, and to good works.

Observe here, the duty exhorted to, to consider one another, that is, to watch over one another. This consideration respects the gifts, the graces, the temptations, the dangers of one another, and is the foundation of all those mutual duties of warning, exhorting, and admonishing one another: duties, God knows, generally lost amongst us, and with them is the glory of the christian religion departed from us. Learn hence, that the mutual watch of christians over each other, and their mutual exhortations of each other unto gospel-duties, is necessarily required, as a special mean for their preservation in their christian profession. Observe, 2. The duty we are to provoke and be provoked unto, and that is, to love and good works; that is no true faith which can be separated from love: and that is no true love that is separated from good works. The great end of christian communion amongst believers, should be to excite one another to love! which is the spring and fountain of all good works: and to provoke one another to good works; as the genuine effect and fruit of a sincere love to God and our neighbour.

25 Not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is; but exhorting one another; and so much the more, as ye see the day approaching.

Observe here, 1. That in the apostle's time there were christian assemblies, in which christians did meet together to worship and serve God, and edify and comfort one another; and, in times of peace and liberty, they had convenient places erected, and separated for that end and use. The light of nature, as well as of scripture, dictates that God is to be worshipped solemnly and publicly; that public worship pleases him most, and that he accepts it best. Observe, 2. It was the manner or custom of some then to forsake the public assemblies; some out of sloth and negligence; others out of fear and persecution: this was a dangerous sin, and so continues. God and Christ esteem themselves forsaken, when their worship and worshippers are causelessly forsaken. Observe, 3. The duty intimated and directed to, not to forsake the assembling together, as some do; for christian assemblies are the life, the food and nourishment of our souls; consequently forsaking of church assemblies is usually the forerunner of apostasy. Observe, 4. The great inducement and encouragement to this duty, because the day approacheth. What day? Ans. The day of Jerusalem's approaching destruction to them; the day of death and judgment coming upon, and hastening towards us. Learn hence, that the intimations given of approaching judgments, ought to influence unto special diligence in all evangelical duties. 2. That to see evidently the approaches of death and judgment, and yet not to be sedulous and diligent in the duties of divine worship, is a sign and token of a backsliding frame, tending unto final apostasy from Christ and his holy religion.

26 For if we sin wilfully, after that we have received the knowledge of the truth; there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins, 27 But a certain fearful looking for of judgment, and fiery indignation, which shall devour the adversaries.

In these verses the apostle gives a vehement enforcement of his preceding exhortation, to an untainting perseverance in the profession of christianity, and this is drawn from the dreadful consequences of apostasy. We have here the nature of the sin expressed, the impossibility of deliverance from the guilt of it declared, and the punishment that will unavoidably follow upon it asserted. Observe, 1. Wherein the nature of this sin consists, if we sin wilfully, that is, by renouncing christianity. Where note, How our apostle puts himself in among the number; to show that there is no respect of persons in this matter, but those who have equally sinned, shall be equally punished. Note farther, that the apostle, by sinning wilfully, does not mean every wilful sin, and that there is no recovery after any voluntary sin committed: but by wilfully, he means obstinately, maliciously, and with despite. Observe, 2. The season and circumstance of this sin, after we have received the knowledge of the truth, that is, after the gospel has been preached unto us, and we, upon conviction of its truth, and sense of its power, have taken upon us the public profession of christianity: after we have dedicated ourselves to Christ in baptism, and joined ourselves unto the body of his church: after all this to relinquish and renounce the christian profession, either for fear of sufferings, or love of this present world, exposes us to an unutterable and inevitable condemnation. Observe, 3. What the apostle charges as an aggravation of this sin, namely, that it cannot be expiated, "There remains no more sacrifice for sin:" for God has no other Son to offer as a sacrifice for sin, if this be rejected; and no other Spirit to make that sacrifice effectual, if the Holy Spirit be despised, and finally resisted; and therefore no ground of hope can remain for such apostates. The punishment of sins unpardonable is unavoidable: it is an eternal decree of divine justice, that the sacrifice of Christ shall never benefit that man, who finally falls away after he has received the knowledge of the truth. Observe, 4. The dreadful and tremendous judgment here threatened to apostates, and what they must eternally expect, namely, the fiery indignation, and fearful wrath of the just and holy God. From the whole learn, 1. That there is an inseparable connexion between apostasy and eternal ruin. 2. That the minds of wretched apostates are oftentimes filled with dreadful expectations of approaching wrath. 3. That the dread and terror of God's final judgment against apostates, is, in itself inconceivable, and accordingly shadowed out by things of the greatest dread and terror in the world. 4. That God's fiery indignation, though it shall devour his adversaries, yet shall it never eat them up; it shall eternally prey upon them, but never consume them, or annihilate their being. O mysterious fire! whose strange property it is always to torture, but never to kill; or always to kill, but never to consume. God grant that we may never experimentally know, or feelingly find, either where hell is, or what it is.

28 He that despised Moses' law died without mercy, under two or three witnessess:

29 Of how much sorer punishment, suppose ye, shall he be thought worthy, who hath trodden under foot the Son of God, and hath counted the blood of the covenant, wherewith he was sanctified, an unholy thing, and hath done despite unto the spirit of grace?

The apostle here confirms what he had before spoken, of the sad and certain destruction of apostates; and compares it with the punishment inflicted on the breakers of Moses' law. If those, under the testimony of two or three witnesses of that apostasy, died without mercy; how much sorer punishment is due to the contemners of Christ, who tread under foot, that is, vilify and undervalue our Lord Jesus Christ, esteeming him as one that died a public malefactor; counting the blood of the covenant an unholy thing; that is, a common thing; making nothing of the solemnest rite that ever was used in the world for the confirmation of any covenant, to wit, the shedding of the blood of the Son of God, and doing despite unto the Spirit of grace; as if he were guilty of lying and falsehood, in bearing witness of the divine power of Christ. Learn hence, 1. That although to transgress Moses' law was an heinous offence, yet to sin wilfully against the gospel, after we have received the knowledge of it, is far more heinous. Learn, 2. That to revolt from and rebel against God loving sinful man, against Jesus Christ ransoming and redeeming captive slaves, and against the Holy Spirit sanctifying and cleansing polluted souls, comes nearest the sin of devils; and as the sin is the more heinous, so the punishment must be far more grievous: for God has allotted different degrees of punishments, unto different degrees and aggravations of sins. Learn, 3. That the punishment of final apostasy is eternal, without any hope of mercy, and without the least relaxation of punishment: for they shall have judgment without any mercy.

30 For we know him that hath said, Vengeance belongeth unto me; I will recompense, saith the Lord. And again the Lord shall judge his people.

The apostle had declared in the verses before, the certain judgment of apostates: here he declares the Judge, the Lord; and the judgment, vengeance; Vengeance is mine, saith the Lord; where, by vengeance, is meant vindictive justice in punishing sinners. The apostle's argument seems to be this: "if God professes himself an avenger of all sin and injury done to his people, as he certainly doth, Deut. xxxii 36. Much more will he show himself an avenger of so horrible an indignity offered to his Son and his Holy Spirit." Learn hence, that the consideration of the righteous nature of God, and that inclosure he has made of vengeance to himself under an irrevocable purpose for its execution, gives indubitable assurance of the unavoidable destruction of all wilful apostates.

31 It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God.

Our apostle, in these words, winds up his whole argument against the wilful despisers of the gospel, taken from the aggravation of that sin, with the severity of the punishment that would certainly befall them that are guilty of it. Note here, 1. The description given of God, he is the Living God; so called, both by way of opposition unto all dead and dumb idols, and also with respect to his lively power and strength, whereby he is able to avenge the sins of men; and likewise to signify the eternal duration of his existence. He ever liveth to execute his wrath, and inflict vengeance on the apostate sinner. Learn, that the name of the living God is either full of terror or comfort to the souls of men. O Lord! thine attributes, which are the principal delight of all sincere christians, and the special object of their hope and faith, are an eternal spring of dread and terror to all impenitent sinners. Note, 2. What is the effect and fruit of all sin in general, and of apostasy in particular, namely, a falling into God's hands. There is a threefold hand of God mentioned in scripture; his protecting hand, his correcting hand, and his wrathful and revenging hand. It is safe and comfortable to fall into God's protecting hand; it is profitable and beneficial, though not pleasing and delightful, to fall into God's chastening and correcting hand; but to fall into his angry hand; his wrathful and revengeful hand, this is sad and fearful: either to fall under this sentence of his wrath in this life, or under the full and final execution of that wrath in this life to come. Note, 3. The tremendous dreadfulness of that wrath; it is a fearful, dreadful thing, that which no tongue can utter, no heart can conceive. Who knoweth the power of thy wrath? Psalm xc. Learn hence, that the wrath and vengeance which the ever-living God will certainly inflict upon all wicked sinners in general, and upon all wretched apostates in particular, is very dreadful and tremendous; and so must needs be, because it is a wrath inconceivably great, and unavoidably sure, and because it is the wrath of a just God, of an almighty God, and of an ever living God.

32 But call to remembrance the former days, in which, after ye were illuminated, ye endured a great fight of afflictions;

Our apostle here proceeds to a new argument to persuade christians to perseverance drawn from the consideration of their former sufferings for christianity: "Since ye were illuminated, that is, baptized into the christian faith, ye endured courageously afflictions, a fight of afflictions, yea, a great fight of afflictions." Learn hence, That the wisdom of God oftentimes permits and suffers persons, at their first conversion, to fall into manifold trials and temptations: carnal relations now first scoff, then frown, and at last cast off. The world hates them, marks them out for persecution, loads them with calumny and slander. But observe farther, the apostle directs them to call to remembrance their former sufferings: he doth not mean the remembrance of what was bitter and afflictive in their sufferings, but the cause for which they suffered, and the presence of God enjoyed by them in and under their sufferings: this would encourage, embolden, and strengthen unto duty. Learn hence, That a wise management of former experience is a great direction and encouragement unto future obedience.

33 Partly, whilst ye were made a gazing-stock both by reproaches and afflictions; and partly, whilst ye became companions of them that were so used.

Here our apostle particularly mentions the sufferings which the primitive saints underwent for the sake of christianity, and reduces them to three heads, shame, pain, loss: they suffered in their names, by being disgraced; in their persons, by being scourged; in their estates, by the spoiling of their goods. Let all that make profession of the name of Christ expect and provide for such sufferings, especially for reproaches. We may put a due value upon our names and reputations, but must not be over solicitous about the preservation of them. Let us keep in the way of our duty, and leave our good name to God's care and keeping. The world first thunders out reproaches, then falls into a storm of persecution. Learn hence, That all temporary sufferings, in all their aggravating circumstances, in all their formidable dress and appearance, may be, and oftentimes are, the lot and portion of those who have undertaken the profession of christianity. "Ye endured a great fight of afflictions, whilst ye were made a gazing-stock to the world." The christians here were exposed to the world as it were upon a stage, or in a theatre where multitudes might gaze upon them, revile, and make a sport of them.

34 For ye had compassion of me in my bonds, and took joyfully the spoiling of your goods, knowing in yourselves that ye have in heaven a better and an enduring substance.

The first words of this verse, Ye had compassion on me in my bonds, prove St. Paul to be the author of this epistle; for who else could there be, whose bonds for the gospel were so known, and so famous among the believing Jews? His bonds were first at Jerusalem, afterwards at Rome, the two capital cities of the Jews and Gentiles. And St. Paul declares here what a tender sympathy and fellow-feeling with him in his suffering they did express: ye had compassion of me in my bonds, that is, ye owned me in my sufferings, ye sympathized with me under my sufferings, ye administered to my succour and relief when burdened with my sufferings. Observe next, He reminds them of their deportment under their own sufferings; ye took joyfully the spoiling of your goods. Probably, the bread which they eat, the clothes which they wore, the beds whereon they lay, were taken from them by their persecutors: yet all this spoil was taken joyfully; not more joyfully by the spoilers, than it was by the spoiled. Learn, It is the peculiar glory and excellency of the gospel, that it gives insuperable joy unto the christian's mind, under the greatest outward sufferings: "They endured joyfully the spoiling of their goods." Observe lastly, The reason of this their christian patience under sufferings: they had a substance: they had a substance in heaven; and they had a better substance in heaven than they lost upon earth; and they knew they had it, "knowing in yourselves that ye have in heaven a better and more enduring substance." Learn hence, That faith by giving an incomparable preference to the things of heaven, above all perishing things on earth, affords abundant joy and full satisfaction in the loss of them all, upon the account of an assured interest in better things.

35 Cast not away therefore your confidence, which hath great recompence of reward.

As if he had said, "Seeing you have endured so much, never shrink back from a bold and courageous profession of Christ and his holy religion, which will be crowned with a great recompence of reward." Observe, 1. The exhortation, Cast not away your confidence and courage in the free profession of christianity, like cowardly soldiers, that in the heat of the battle do cast down their shields and armor, and run away. The christian is a spiritual soldier: he must not shrink, or give back, but die a conqueror rather than be taken prisoner. Observe, 2. The reason which enforces the exhortation, (Which hath great recompence of reward) mark, the reward is certain, and that it is due to such as persevere. Perseverance and the reward are inseparably joined together, so that the one shall infallibly follow the other. Hence learn, That in times of suffering, and in the approaches of them, it is the duty of believers to look upon the glory of heaven, under the notion of a refreshing and all-sufficient reward; cast not away your confidence, which hath great recompence of reward.

36 For ye have need of patience; that after ye have done the will of God, ye might receive the promise

37 For yet a little while, and he that shall come will come, and will not tarry.

Ye have need of patience: but had they it not already, when they endured such a great fight of afflictions? Yes, assuredly; the meaning hereof is this: "Ye have need of the continued exercise of patience; implying, that without the constant exercise of patience, none can pass through tribulation to the glory of God, and their own advantage. We have need of patience to perform difficult duties, to resist strong temptations, to wait for an answer of our prayers, and also to wait for the reward of our patience. After we have done the will of God, we have need of patience to enable us to wait for the receiving of the promise, that is, the good promised. Here note, That the glory of heaven firmly believed, will powerfully sustain the christian spirit under sufferings. 2. That patience is as necessary to enable us to expect and wait for the reward of our sufferings, as it is needful and necessary to support and uphold us under sufferings. Observe farther, The comfortable assurance which the apostle gives, both of the certain coming, and speedy coming of Christ to reward their faith and patience; "he that shall come will come, and will not tarry." Note here, The christian's suffering season will be short, Christ will come to call him off. "He will come, and will not tarry;" and when he comes, no difficulties shall be able to stand before him, but such as have suffered patiently, shall be rewarded gloriously.

38 Now the just shall live by faith, but if any man draw back, my soul shall have no pleasure in him.

These words, The just shall live by faith, are taken out of the prophet Habakkuk, and are three times made use of by St. Paul, in his epistles, Rom. i. 17. Gal. iii. 11. and in this place. By the just man, understand a justified man; by the life which he lives, understand a life of sanctification and of glorification, a life of grace and holiness, and a life of glory and happiness. Learn, That whatever life the believer lives, after a more excellent manner, and for more excellent purposes and ends than other men, he lives that life by the help and assistance of his faith. In the following words, "But if any man draw back, my soul shall have no pleasure in him." Observe, 1. The crime supposed, if any man that has embraced christianity, shall, either for sufferings feared or felt, draw back from his holy profession. The word signifies to sneak and slink away out of fear; and the apostle means by it, a quitting our profession of christianity for fear of suffering. Learn hence, That in and under great, sharp, and long trials, persons are in danger of drawing back from that profession of the gospel wherein they are engaged. Observe, 2. The sentence pronounced upon this crime, "My soul shall have no pleasure in him; that is, God will be exceedingly displeased with him, and punish him very severely; intimating, that apostasy from the profession of God's true religion, is a sin highly provoking to him, and will be most severely punished by him. Here note, That these threatenings imply, that there is a possibility of the saints falling away, considered in themselves; but not that they are ever totally deserted by the Holy Spirit, and left under the reigning power of sin. These threatenings are intended to awaken their care, and have a singular influence on their preservation. From the whole learn, That backsliders from the gospel are in a peculiar manner, the abhorrence of the soul of God: "If any man draw back, my soul shall have no pleasure in him."

39 But we are not of them who draw back unto perdition; but of them that believe to the saving of the soul.

Observe here, 1. A twofold opposite state, namely, them that draw back, and them that believe, that is, persevere in believing; "we are not of them that draw back." Intimating, 1. That in the visible church there ever have been, are, and will be, a number of hypocrites, who, for fear of suffering in a time of persecution, will draw back. 2. That it is every christian's duty to evidence to his own conscience, and also to give evidence unto others, that he is not of this sort or number; "we are not of them who draw back." Observe, 2. A twofold opposite event, perdition on the one hand, and salvation on the other. The first of these is denied, the latter is affirmed, concerning these Hebrews: "we are not of them that draw back unto perdition; but of them that believe, to the saving of the soul." Where note, 1. The actual influence of apostasy on the one hand to destruction; nothing can free apostates from eternal ruin. Note, 2. The actual influence of faith on the other hand to the saving of the soul. Thence learn, That sincere faith will carry men through all difficulties, hazards, and troubles, unto the certain enjoyment of eternal blessedness. "We are of them that do believe, unto the saving of the soul."

CHAPTER XI.

Our apostle having, in the close of the foregoing chapter, spoken of the just man's living by faith, he comes, in this chapter, to give an excellent description of it, and passes many high encomiums upon it, showing both what it is, and what great things it has done in all ages of the church. From whence we may observe, in general, That it is faith alone, which in all ages of the world, under all dispensations of divine grace, in and towards the church, hath been the grand vital principle, enabling the saints to live unto God, to obtain the promises, and inherit eternal life, and will continue so to be to the consummation of all things.

NOW faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen.

Observe here, 1. The thing described, or the subject spoken of, and that is faith; that faith whereby the just man lives, the apostle here speaks of, though not as justifying, but as it is effectually useful in our whole life, especially unto constancy and perseverance in the christian profession, which was the great duty urged and enforced in the foregoing chapter. Observe, 2. The description itself, it is the substance of things hoped for. 1. That is, it is a confident and firm expectation of the good things which God has promised, giving the good things hoped for, a real subsistence in our minds and souls. 2. It is the evidence of things not seen; that is, it evidences the reality and certainty of future things, it realizes the invisible realities of another world unto our minds, and causes us to believe them as strongly as what we see with our bodily eyes. Learn hence, That a lively faith gives such a reality, certainty, and present being to things hoped for, and yet to come, as if they were visibly seen and actually enjoyed

2 For by it the elders obtained a good report.

Having in the former verse described faith, in this and the following verses he enters upon the just praise and deserved commendation of this divine and excellent grace, which has such an universal influence into all the parts of the christian life. In this verse, to commend that faith which he had in the former verse described, he brings in the experience of the elders, or Old Testament saints, all true believers from the foundation of the world, who by faith obtained from God a good testimony, recorded in the holy scriptures. But, or through it, as a condition appointed and ordained of God: not for it, or by the worth and influence of it as the meritorious cause, the elders or saints of God, from the beginning of the world, obtained a good report. Learn hence, 1. That the Old Testament saints had the same kind of faith that we have, and were saved in the same manner that we are; they had the same promises, the same terms of grace, the same meritorious purchase by the blood of Christ: he is therefore called the Lamb slain from the beginning of the world, slain in God's purpose and decree, slain in the types and figures of his death; though his blood was not actually shed, yet was it decreed to be shed, and so was as effectual to them as to us. Learn, 2. That the renown of the Old Testament saints was their faith, that made them famous; not their priority in living before us, not their longevity in living many years beyond us, not upon the account of their other graces, which yet rendered them truly excellent, are they said to obtain a good report; but upon the score and account of their faith. Abel was famous for righteousness, Enuch for walking with God, Abraham for obedience, Moses for meekness, but the crown is set upon the head of their faith only: by it the elders obtained, &c.

3 Through faith we understand that the worlds were framed by the word of God, so that things which are seen were not made of things which do appear.

The design of the apostle in these words is to prove, that faith satisfies itself in the word of God, concerning the way and manner of the world's creation; for though the world be now visible, and the things contained in it are said to be seen, yet the original framing and making of the world has a principal place among things not seen. Learn hence, That by faith assenting to divine revelation, and not by reason, we understand the truth and wonders, the seasons and causes, the manner and end of the world's creation. Reason indeed tells us that there was a creation, consequently a creator; but reason without divine revelation could never have discovered the circumstances and manner of the creation, which wholly depended upon the will of God. Reason and nature could never have known them, had not God in his word first revealed them: the old heathens could never determine who made the world, nor when, nor how it was made, or whence, and out of what it was made. Reason may propound the question, how was the world made, and all things herein? But revelation must resolve it. A poor child learns more by its catechism, than all the philosophers ever learn by their profound researches, and painful studies. Through faith we understand that the worlds were framed, it follows, by the word of God, that is, both by his external and imperial word, his word of command, saying, Let it be: He spake and it was done, Psalm xxxiii. 9. And also by his essential and substantial word, Jesus Christ, by whom God made the worlds, Heb. i. 2. in that order which Moses has historically related. Observe lastly, How and after what manner the world was made, not out of any pre-jacent or pre-existent matter, but out of nothing: that which was not at all, could not be seen: the things that are seen, were not made of things that do appear. Here note, That the power of God framed many things out of nothing, as the heaven of heavens, the dwelling place of God and angels, immediately; other things mediately out of the chaos, that is, such rude, indisposed and unfit matter, as had no disposition to receive such a form, as it did actually receive from the power of God; and may therefore deservedly be called a creation out of nothing. Learn hence, That in the work of creation, though other attributes of wisdom and goodness visibly appeared, yet none were so eminently conspicuous as the power of God. Well might St. Paul say, Rom. i. 20. That herein was manifested his eternal power and Godhead.

4 By faith, Abel offered unto God a more excellent sacrifice than Cain, by which he had obtained witness, that he was righteous, God testifying of his gifts; and by it he being dead yet speaketh.

From a general declaration of the nature of faith in the foregoing verses, our apostle proceeds to give instances of the efficacy and power of faith in particular persons, in this and the following verses. And he begins here with Abel. But why not with Adam? Because Adam was the first sinner, and the greatest of sinners; and although received to grace and mercy, yet after his fall Moses speaks little of him, nothing very notable; neither did Almighty God put that honor upon Adam which he put upon his son Abel; he had the honor to shed his blood for Christ, and for testifying his faith in him; and accordingly Abel is here represented as the first evangelical believer, By faith Abel, &c. Observe farther, 1. The action which Abel performed, he offered sacrifice to God; he offered a sacrifice most excellent, and he offered it by faith. But did not Cain bring his offering of faith too? Yes, no doubt, he believed the being of God, and considered him as a creator and preserver, and accordingly offered the fruits of the earth, as an acknowledgment that all these things were made, preserved, and bestowed on man by God. But Abel's faith was fixed on God, not only as a creator, but as a redeemer also, accompanied with a sense of sin and guilt, trusting in the way of redemption and recovery which God had provided. Here note, That the performance of the outward duties of divine worship, is not the rule of the acceptance of men's persons with God, but a difference and distinction is made from the inward principle, whence those duties do proceed. Cain and Abel both offered sacrifice, but not from a like principle, nor yet for a like end. Observe, 2. The effect and fruit of Abel's faith, it procured a testimony and witness from God himself that he was righteous; he testified that he had respect to his person by the approbation of his suffering. Our persons must be justified before our performances can be accepted. God has first respect to the offerer, then to the offering; for the person must recommend the gift, not the gift recommend the person. Observe, lastly, The privilege of Abel's faith; by it, being dead, he yet speaketh. Some understand the words in a passive sense, he is spoken of: he being dead, there is an honorable mention of him. Religion is the truest honor, and the righteous shall be had in everlasting remembrance, others in an active sense, and so the words import, that the dead saints do yet speak, and that somewhat worthy to be heard and observed; they speak by the precious graces with which they were enriched; they speak by the holy life they maintained, by the good works they wrought, by the eminent services they did for God and man, by their sharp trials, by their bitter sufferings; by these they speak, to the honor of religion, and to the furtherance of the gospel. God's Abels, his dead saints, do thus speak when laid in the dust.

5 By faith Enoch was translated, that he should not see death; and was not found, because God had translated him: for before his translation he had this testimony that he pleased God.

The second instance is Enoch, concerning whom our apostle affirms, that he was translated, and that he was translated by faith; translated from one condition to another; from grace to glory, from earth to heaven. He was gathered by God, both in body and soul, to himself; and in a way of eminent grace and favor free from death. Hereby God gave the world a convincing testimony, that the body is capable of eternal life and happiness. But how was he translated by faith? Ans. Not efficiently; faith was not the efficient cause of his translation. That was an immediate act of divine power; not meritoriously, for it is recorded as an act of sovereign grace and favor; but instrumentally only; he was by faith brought into that state and condition of favor and acceptance with God, as to have this peculiar privilege conferred upon him. Some we find are carried to heaven by special prerogative, by privileged dispensation; By faith Enoch was translated, that he should not see death. But observe farther, What went before his translation, and that was his pleasing God; before his translation he had this testimony, that he pleased God. Such as would live with God hereafter, must study and seek to please God by walking with him here; would we come where Enoch is, we must walk as Enoch did. There is no hope of living with God in heaven, if we do not please him here on earth.

6 But without faith it is impossible to please him: for he that cometh to God, must believe, that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him.

Without faith, that is without justifying faith, without faith in the Messiah, for that is the faith here spoken of, there is no possibility of pleasing God, and if so, then no possibility of being saved without faith. This appears partly from the divine constitution, God has so appointed it, partly from the nature of the thing itself; faith being the first regular motion of the soul towards God, no works, no duties, no performances, whatsoever can please God without faith. He that cometh to God, that is, hath any access or approach to him in a way of worship, or any access or acceptance into his grace and favor, he must believe, 1. God's being; 2. God's bounty; that he is: and that he is a rewarder of such as diligently seek him. Learn, hence, 1. That the first point of faith, if we would have any thing to do with God, is firmly to believe that there is a God: He that cometh to God must believe that he is. Learn, 2. That the fountain of all obedience and service to God, is a firm belief of his being a rewarder of all them that diligently seek him. Learn, 3. That the whole issue of our finding God when we seek him, depends upon our diligently seeking of him; he is a rewarder of them, of all and only them, that diligently seek him.

7 By faith Noah being warned of God of things not seen as yet, moved with fear, prepared an ark to the saving of his house; by the which he condemned the world, and became heir of the righteousness which is by faith.

Observe here, 1. The person spoken of, Noah an eminent person in the line of the church, and one that walked with God, and found grace in the eyes of the Lord. Observe, 2. What was spoken of him; he was warned of God, touching his designs and purposes to destroy and drown the old world. Observe, 3. What was the effect of this warning, it produced in Noah fear and obedience; fear of the threatening, and obedience to the command: he was moved with fear, and prepared the ark. Observe, 4. The exercise, yea, eminent exercise of Noah's faith: neither the difficulty of the work, nor the length of time, an hundred and twenty years; nor his want of success all that time of preaching, nor the contempt and scorn cast upon him by the whole world, could weaken his hands or discourage his heart in the least from going on with his work. Observe, 5. The consequent of Noah's faith and obedience with respect unto the world, he condemned the world: not as a judge, properly and authoritatively, but as a witness, by plea and testimony; he condemned it by his doctrine, by his example, and left it altogether without excuse. Observe, 6. The fruit and effect of Noah's faith and obedience with reference to himself: He became heir of the righteous- ness which is by faith; that is of the happiness promised to them who are justified by faith; he was evidenced and declared to be a righteous person.

8 By faith Abraham, when he was called to go out into a place which he should after receive for an inheritance, obeyed; and he went out, not knowing whither he went.

The next illustrious instance of the efficacy of faith we have here in the person of Abraham, who obeyed the call and command of God in leaving his own native country, to go he knew not whither, and to receive an inheritance he knew not when. Where note, 1. The foundation of Abraham's faith and obedience, and that was the call of God; he had an immediate command to go out of his own country into a certain place, with a promise to receive it for an inheritance: Get thee from thy country, relations, friends, and all outward enjoyments, is a command becoming the greatness of God to give; and self-denial in fact, or resolution to comply with such a command from the great God, is the foundation of all sincere profession. Note, 2. What was the principle of Abraham's obedience in complying with this call of God, and that was his faith: By faith Abraham, when he was called, obeyed. True faith, wherever it is, bringeth forth sincere obedience; these two can no more be separated than the light and the sun, than the fire and heat; obedience is the daughter of faith, and faith the parent and principle of obedience. Note, 3. The difficulty, and therein the excellency of his obedience; he obeyed, and went out, not knowing whither he went. If faith be once satisfied in the call and command of God, it will follow him when it cannot see a step of its way; over hills and mountains, through dales and valleys, fearing nothing. He that has God's call, need not fear God's conduct.

9 By faith he sojourned in the land of promise, as in a strange country, dwelling in tabernacles with Isaac and Jacob, the heirs with him of the same promise.

10 For he looked for a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God.

The apostle spake of the place which Abraham was called from, in the foregoing verse, namely, out of Ur of the Chaldees; here he speaks of the place he was called to, Canaan, styled the land of promise, that is, the land which God had newly promised to give unto him. Where note, 1. Abraham's act of obedience, "he sojourned in the land of promise, as in a strange country;" he was there as a sojourner, not an inheritor, moving up and down from place to place, until God thought fit to settle him and his posterity. Abraham was a sojourner both in his condition of life, and in his disposition of heart. Canaan was a type of heaven, and accordingly Abraham expected a better country, with a city which had foundations, whose builder and maker is God. Learn, That the children of God here on earth, where they have best right, and most possessions, are but strangers and pilgrims. Note, 2. The manner of his sojourning in this land, dwelling in tabernacles. This was both an act of policy, and an act of piety: of policy, that they might live peaceably, without giving umbrage to the natives, or occasioning any envy or grudge from them; and of piety, to express their hopes and desires of a better country. Note, 3. Abraham's companions, his fellows, and followers, in this act of obedience he sojourned with Isaac and Jacob as heirs of the same promise. Where mark, How all the saints of God are of the same spiritual disposition; they are animated by the same spirit, governed by the same laws; they act from the same principle, and for the same end, and desire nothing more than to live together, and to enjoy God and one another. Note, 4. The reason rendered why Abraham esteemed himself but as a stranger in Canaan, because his thoughts ran much upon heaven, of which Canaan was but a type; "he looked for a city which had foundations, whose builder and maker is God." Where observe, 1. Abraham's act of expectation, he looked for it, he rationally expected it was not a blind hope, but well built on the power and promise of God. 2. What he looked for, a city; not Jerusalem an earthly city, as some would have it, for that was not possessed until eight hundred years after, and then only by his posterity for a limited time; but an heavenly city, a settled, quiet habitation, a suitable dwelling for them that have had a life of trouble in this world. 3. The city itself described, 1. By the nature of it: it has foundations, in opposition to tents and tabernacles which had no foundation, but were moving, ambulatory dwellings, supported only by stakes and cords; this city is founded upon the eternal power, the infinite wisdom and immutable counsel of God. 2. By the maker and builder of it, God, he is the contriver, framer, and erecter of this city; and as he is the maker, so he is the disposer of it also; please God, and he will give it thee, none can give it thee without him, he will never give it thee without pleasing of him.

11 Through faith also Sarah herself received strength to conceive seed, and was delivered of a child when she was past age, because she judged him faithful who had promised.

Our Apostle having spoken of Abraham's faith before, makes an honorable mention of his wife Sarah's faith here. It is a blessed thing when husband and wife are one in the faith, as well as one flesh. When the constant companion of our lives draws with us in the same yoke of religion. Note, 1. The person whose faith is here commended, Sarah herself, a woman, a barren woman, and a barren woman well stricken in age; a woman weak in sex may be strong in faith. Though Sarah at first laughed, yet she afterwards firmly believed. And the apostle takes no notice of the former, but applauds the latter. Oh! with what great indulgence doth God cover the failings of his children, but proclaims aloud their graces to the world! Men do not thus; they will overlook all that is good in others, and report only what is amiss. Sarah's laughing, Rahab's lie, Job's impatience, are not mentioned, but their graces are remembered. Who would not serve such a gracious master, that winks at our failings, but accepts and rewards our weak services and sincere graces? Note, 2. The commendation and fruit of Sarah's faith, she received by its strength and ability for conception; probably she recovered her youthful vigor, and received a general restoration of nature, to an ability for all its primitive operations, which was before decayed by age; she received strength to conceive seed when past age. Learn, That it is the property of faith to expect a blessing absolutely above the use of means, when we have a particular and special warrant from God so to do, as Sarah had in this case. Note, 3. The ground of Sarah's faith, "Because she had judged him faithful that had promised," that is, she resolved her faith into, and rested upon the veracity of God in the accomplishment of the promise, which is the proper and immediate object of faith. Learn, that wherever we exercise and put forth faith, we must take care and be sure that we have a promise to exercise it upon, otherwise it is not faith, but fancy: God's promise, and not God's power, is the ground of faith; it is not what God can do, but what he will do, and what he has engaged and promised to do, that is the ground of faith: he can quench all the fire in hell: but where has he said he will do it: "she judged him faithful who had promised."

12 Therefore sprang there even of one, and him as good as dead; so many, as the stars of the sky in multitude, and as the sand which is by the sea shore innumerable.

These words acquaint us with that gratuitous remuneration and gracious reward which God gave Abraham and Sarah, as the fruit of their faith, namely, the blessing of a numerous posterity; there sprang of them, and both of them, as good as dead, with reference to the procreation of children, a numerous issue, like the stars of heaven, and the sands of the sea. Hence learn, that the God of nature, at his own pleasure, works things above the power of nature in its ordinary efficacy and operation; by weak and dead means he often produces mighty effects. Learn, 2. That whatever difficulties and oppositions lie in the way of the accomplishing God's promises, they shall have an assured accomplishment on God's part, if faith be kept up in lively exercise on our part.

13 These all died in faith—

That is all the forementioned saints, Abel, Noah, Abraham and Sarah, they all died in the faith of the promised Messiah, believing he should come, and expecting salvation by his coming. It is not enough for a christian to live in the faith, but he must also die in the faith; and to die in the faith, is an honorable and happy manner of dying; it is a greater happiness to die in the Lord, than to die for the Lord; if a man die for the Lord, and be not in the Lord, he is not blessed in his death: a man may die for the Lord's cause, yet not for the Lord's sake, but out of vain glory.

—Not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off, and were persuaded of them, and embraced them, and confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth.

Observe here, the great trial which the faith of the Old Testament saints was put unto, they died, not having received the promises; that is, they went to their graves before the great blessings God had promised were accomplished. Faith is contented with the promise, though it wants actual possession of the good things promised. God would have believers, in all ages of the church, to live by faith, and promises not actually performed; and it is a great honor to God, when we are ready to die, to go to the grave with assurance, and to profess our confidence that God will make them good; "these all died, not having received the promises." Yet observe, the actings and exercise of their faith towards these promises, which they had not yet received in their accomplishment; 1. They saw them afar off, at a great distance; it is the property of faith to eye the blessings promised at a distance; so that no distance of time or place can weaken faith as to the accomplishment of divine promises. 2. They were persuaded of them: this imports the mind's satisfactory acquiescing in the truth of God for the accomplishment of his promises: a firm persuasion of the truth of God's promises, and a quiet waiting for the accomplishment of them at a great distance is an eminent fruit of faith. 3. They embraced him; the word signifies, they saluted and hugged them. Whence note, that faith is an act of the will, as well as of the understanding; there is in faith adherence as well as assent; an embracing as well as a persuasion; the heart cleaves to the promise with love, delight, and a complacency. "And confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth"; so they were in outward condition, wandering from place to place; so they were in affection, and disposition, looking upon this world as their pilgrimage, and heaven as their home and proper country; because thence they are born, there lies their inheritance, there are all their kindred, there is their longest abode. Christians should not only account, but confess themselves pilgrims, and discover it by their journeying and mending their pace heavenward.

14 For they that say such things declare plainly, that they seek a country:

15 And truly if they had been mindful of that country from whence they came out, they might have had opportunity to have returned:

16 But now they desire a better country, that is, an heavenly. Wherefore God is not ashamed to be called their God; for he hath prepared for them a city.

As if the apostle had said, "they that say such things, namely, that they, even in the land of promise, are pilgrims and strangers, do declare plainly, that they seek a country where they may rest and dwell, when this their pilgrimage on earth is ended." Now, this country was not Chaldaea, but heaven; a glorious city which God prepared for them, as an abundant recompence for their earthly country, which they left at God's command. Here note, 1. That heaven is the christian's proper country; they are born from heaven, their conversation is in heaven, their eternal habitation is there, their head and husband, their friends and kindred, are there; and it is theirs by a right of donation, by a right of purchase, by a right of possession and conquest. Note, 2. That this heavenly country is by far the better, yea the best of countries; best in regard of the largeness and extent of it; best in regard of the safety and security of it; best in regard of the order and government of it; best in regard of the company and society dwelling in it: all saints, none but saints, none but perfect saints; best in regard to the immunities and privileges belonging to it, and in regard of the duration and continuance of it, a country that can never be invaded, never be conquered. Note, 3. That sincere christians have strong desires after, and vehement longings for, this better, this best of countries: now they desire a better country: and God is not ashamed to be called their God.—They that by their faith give glory to God, in acknowledging his faithfulness in this life, he will never be ashamed of them, either in life, or at death, or after death. Learn, 1. That it is the greatest privilege, honor, and advantage, that any can be made partakes of, that God will bear the name and title of their God. 2. God's owning of believers as his, and of himself to be their God, is an abundant recompence of all the hardships which they undergo in this their pilgrimage. The top and sum of all happiness, is to have the Lord for our God.

17 By faith Abraham, when he was tried, offered up Isaac: and he that had received the promises offered up his only begotten son;

18 Of whom it was said, that in Isaac shall thy seed be called:

19 Accounting that God was able to raise him up, even from the dead, from whence also he received him in a figure.

The next person instanced in, for the fame of his faith, is, Abraham, who was deservedly styled the father of the faithful: him God tries in a very extraordinary manner, by putting him upon offering up his son Isaac. Where note, that where God gives much grace, he tries grace much; the greater the faith, the greater the trial; strong faith must prepare for strong trials. Here Abraham's faith was tried, whether he would depend upon God's promise above reason; his obedience was tried, whether he would yield to God's command against nature; his love was tried, whether his affection was not more warm towards his son, than to his God; and his fear was tried, whether he did reverentially acknowledge and stand in awe of God, by adoring his sovereignty and dominion over him. Trials are the best touchstone of faith; without which men will want the best evidence of its sincerity: and great trials in believers are an evidence of great faith. Observe farther, The excellency of Abraham's faith and obedience upon his trial; he offered up his son Isaac; that is, he did in part, and was ready to have done it thoroughly, had not God countermanded him. Learn hence, that where there is a divine command obliging us to obedience, it is the wisdom and duty of faith, to close its eye against all insuperable difficulties and dangers. Abraham objected not against the horrid nature of the command, to kill a son, his own son, the only son, the son of the promise: but deliberately, and upon due consideration, was ready to execute what God required. Lord! what a strong faith was here, fortified with an impregnable resolution, that could make Abraham hold out three days against the violent assaults of his own nature, and the charming presence of his son, enough to melt his heart; yet nothing made him stagger in his duty, but he performs a most miraculous act of obedience, in defiance of all difficulties. Observe lastly, the fruit and success of Abraham's faith: he believed God could and would raise Isaac from the grave, and he receives him again in a figure, as one snatched out of the very jaws of death. There is no such way to enjoy the continuance of an earthly comfort, as by resigning it up to God: "Accounting that God was able to raise him up even from the dead, from whence also he received him in a figure."

20 By faith Isaac blessed Jacob and Esau concerning things to come.

Note, that there is a blessing by way of prayer, and a blessing by way of prophecy, foretelling what shall befall persons in time to come; of this kind is Isaac's blessing. The patriarchs were in a peculiar manner directed and guided by God, and their blessing was a conferring of a right to the parties blessed. Thus Isaac blessed Jacob and Esau concerning things to come; that is, concerning the great and future things which should happen to their posterity after them. Note here, Esau's wicked men have their portion in outward blessings as well as Jacob's, as well as the best and holiest of men; partly as they are God's creatures, partly as they descend from parents in covenant with God, and partly because they make some profession of the name of God: and God will be behindhand with none, but so far as they do good they shall see good.

21 By faith Jacob when he was dying, blessed both the sons of Joseph: and worshipped leaning upon the top of his staff.

Observe here, in dying Jacob, the frame and carriage of holy men in their dying seasons to bless their children, and worship their God. Jacob blessed Joseph and his two sons, laying hold on the covenant made with Abraham. It is no small privilege to be born of parents taken into visible covenant with God, and no small comfort, when God comes to take away such parents from us, to have the benefit of their blessings and prayers. Jacob, when dying, blessed both the sons of Joseph; and as he blessed them, so he worshipped God with religious worship, and in a devout manner, leaning upon the top of his staff. Learn hence, that our addresses to God ought to be exceeding reverent, both as to the frame of our souls, and also as to the gesture of our bodies; we cannot always be affectionate in prayer, for affection depends upon the vigorous motions of the bodily spirits; but we should always be reverent and serious in prayer, otherwise it is no worship. Learn farther, that where faith gives a willing mind, bodily infirmities shall be no less an hindrance from duty.

22 By faith Joseph, when he died, made mention of the departing of the children of Israel; and gave commandment concerning his bones.

Here we have a twofold instance of Joseph's faith when dying. 1. "He made mention of the departing of the children of Israel;" he said unto his brethren, "behold I die, but God shall bring you into the land which he hath sworn unto your fathers." See how the good man dies in the faith of the promise. Thence learn, that it is of singular use, and great advantage to the church, that such believers as have been eminent in profession, should, in their dying moments, testify their faith in the promises of God; so did Jacob before, so did Joseph now. The second instance or evidence of Joseph's faith was, that he gave commandment concerning his bones; that is, he took an oath of his brethren that they should carry his bones out of Egypt, and bury them in Canaan, thereby owning and professing himself to be of the posterity of Abraham; and thereby also encouraging the faith and expectation of his brethren and their posterity, to hope for their deliverance out of Egypt, and be put into the possession of the promised land; so that it is evident that there was faith, much faith, showed by Joseph in disposing of his bones. The papists' plea from hence, for paying veneration to their relics, is weak and contemptible: this was a special charge given in faith to do what was done; and to shut them up in a coffin, and decently bury them, was all that was done. Now to take example from hence, to dig men's bones out of their graves, to enshrine them, and place them upon altars, to carry them in procession, to adore them, to ascribe miraculous operations to them, casting out of devils, and the like, is fond and ridiculous.

23 By faith Moses, when he was born, was hid three months of his parents, because they saw he was a proper child; and they were not afraid of the king's commandment.

In these words the faith of Moses' parents is celebrated: the birth of Moses fell out in the very height and fury of Pharaoh's persecution, when the king had given commandment to destroy all the male children; Moses was then born, and hid by his parents, and preserved as a deliverer of the church of God. O! how blind are all the persecutors and opposers of the church of God! When they think all things secure, and their counsels so deeply laid, that God himself cannot deliver out of their hands; then doth the Almighty lay in provision for his church's deliverance, and their destruction. Now was Moses a deliverer born and hid. But observe a double cause of Moses' hiding; the first external, They saw he was a proper child; they had a persuasion that God would provide a person to be their deliverer: and they saw something divine in Moses to stir up their faith, and raise their expectation, that he might be the person. The second internal and moving cause, they were not afraid of the king's commandment, or bloody decree. Learn hence, 1. That the commands of kings and princes have oftentimes been a very great trial to the children of God; so was Nebuchadnezzar's command to worship the golden image, and such was Pharaoh's command here. Learn, 2. Kings and princes must not be obeyed in things contrary to the word of God: obedience without reserve is to be paid to none but God. "They were not afraid of the king's commandment."

24 By faith Moses, when he was come to years, refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter;

25 Choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season.

26 Esteeming the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures of Egypt; for he had respect unto the recompence of the reward.

The next person whom our apostle instances in, is Moses himself, whose faith and self-denial were most evidently conspicuous in all the instances of them. Observe, 1. His great self-denial, with all the enhancing circumstances of it: "when he came to years, he refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter." Note here, 1. The circumstance of time, when he came to years: it was no childish act, when he knew not what he did, but when he came to age, and understood: nay, farther, this was when Moses was newly come to age, in the prime and vigor of his time, when he had just began to taste the sweetness of youthful pleasures: the world appears a dead and dry thing in the winter of old age, but looks green and beautiful in the spring of youth: but Moses when come, just come, to years refused it. Note, 2. The circumstance of his education, he had been bred from a child in a princely way and manner, he never knew what belonged to a low estate: those that never had much, forsake but little when they forsake all: want will never much pinch those who never understood plenty; but those who have enjoyed fulness all their days, for them to stoop voluntarily, from the height of ease and honor, to the depth of affliction and hardship, is admirable. Thus did Moses, he refused honor, and chose affliction. Note, 3. The circumstance of his obligations, Pharaoh's daughter having saved his life, adopted him for her son, giving him princely breeding, he was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians: and set her heart upon him as her own. However, Moses breaks through all, and away he goes. But whither went he? Why to a company of poor bondmen, laboring at the brick-kilns, to take his lot of suffering with them. Note, 4. The circumstance of his expectations; how very fair and certain a prospect he had of enjoying the crown of Egypt; he did not refuse it because he despaired of attaining it, for he was an adopted heir unto it. Note, lastly, that all this was not a rash and sudden determination, but a deliberate and advised choice, Acts vii. 23. St. Stephen says, he made this choice when he was full forty years old; that is, when he was of ripest judgment, and in the height of prosperity and reputation: he did not only, as Josephus says, at three years old cast a crown, given him for a play-toy, to the ground, and trample it under his feet; but as the apostle says here, when he came to be a man, he treated it with no more respect, refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter. Behold here Moses' faith, an eminent self-denial, in choosing rather to suffer affliction with the worshippers of the true God, than to gain a kingdom by renouncing God, and his holy religion. From whence learn, That faith is a grace which will teach and enable a person openly to renounce all worldly advantages at God's call, when he cannot enjoy them with an upright mind and a good conscience. Quest. But how did Moses come to know his stock and race, that he was an Hebrew born, and not an Egyptian, no son of Pharaoh's daughter? Ans. He found himself circumcised, and so belonged to a circumcised people. The token of God's covenant received in infancy, duly considered, is a most effectual mean to preserve a person in the profession of the true religion. Add to this, that his own mother was his nurse, and continually with him, and probably his father frequently; who, being persons fearing God, took care very early to impress him with the principles of the true religion, and with the detestation of the Egyptian idolatry.

25 Choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season;

Observe here, 1. The common lot and usual condition of God's people in this world; it is an afflicted state and condition. 2. That wicked men oftentimes enjoy pleasures in the ways of sin, whilst good men meet with much affliction in the work of holiness. 3. That notwithstanding this, all wise and good men do rather choose afflicted godliness, than pleasant and prosperous wickedness. 4. That a spiritual eye can see an excellency in the people of God, when in the lowest suffering condition, will join himself unto them, and appear with them, and for them, though it be with great loss, and much hazard. Moses here chose rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the short sinful pleasures of Pharaoh's court.

26 Esteeming the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures in Egypt; for he had respect unto the recompence of the reward.

The former verse acquainted us with the general choice which Moses made of affliction with the people of God; this acquaints us with one sort and particular kind of affliction which he chose, namely, reproach for Christ; this he counted his glory, his riches, his treasures, beyond all the riches and treasures of Egypt. Note here, that the people of God have been, and usually are, a people under reproach; not only a persecuted, but a reproached people; the foundation of all sufferings is laid in reproach; that is the cover for all. The Jews by reproaches, first stirred up the rage of the people against Christ before they attempted to take away his life. Note, 2. The reproach of good men is the reproach of Christ, because he and they are but one mystical body, and because of the near union that is between them. The reproach of the wife is the reproach of the husband, especially if she be reproached for his sake, and upon his account. Again observe, what an high esteem a gracious person has of reproaches, in the cause of Christ, and for the sake of Christ: he esteems them his glory, his treasure, his greatest treasure; he rejoices and takes pleasure in them, and very much values himself by them. Verily no man deserves the name of a christian till he has such an esteem of Christ, and value for him, that the worst things in the world, even persecution and reproach, shall be preferred by him before the great things of the world, when they stand in competition with him, or in opposition to him. Observe lastly, The ground of Moses' faith, self-denial, contempt of the world, and all his excellent actions, and that was the recompence of the reward which he had respect unto; for he had respect unto the recompence of the reward. Where note, That there is a reward laid up for good men; that it is lawful, yea, laudable, very expedient, yea, very necessary and needful, for a christian to eye this reward, and to have respect unto it in the whole course of his obedience; and this doing will be a mighty encouraging motive to undergo all hardships and difficulties in the way of religion he had respect unto the recompence of the reward.

27 By faith he forsook Egypt, not fearing the wrath of the king: for he endured as seeing him who is invisible.

28 Through faith he kept the passover, and the sprinkling of blood, lest he that destroyed the first-born should touch them.

29 By faith they passed through the Red Sea as by dry land; which the Egyptians assaying to do were drowned.

Our apostle having described the faith of Moses, with respect to his sufferings with the people of God, in the former verses, comes now to instance in the power and activity of it with respect to their deliverance, in these verses. Where note, 1. The spiritual fortitude which attended his faith, he forsook Egypt, not fearing the wrath of the king: even the wrath of the greatest king upon the earth is to be disregarded, if it lies against our duty to God. Note, 2. The reason or ground of this his fortitude and courage, he endured as seeing him who is invisible; that is, he saw him by faith whom he could not see by sense: he saw him in his omnipresence, power, faithfulness, and had a fixed trust in him at all times, and on all occasions. Learn hence, That there is nothing insuperable to faith, whilst it can keep a clear view of the power of God, and the promises of God. Note, 3. The commendation of Moses' faith, from a due observation of a double ordinance of worship, namely, the passover, and the sprinkling of blood. As to the former, Moses' faith in keeping the passover had respect to its divine institution, to the command for its perpetual observance, to the sacramental nature of it, to the mystical or typical signification of it. Learn hence, that a vigorous and lively exercise of faith, is always required unto the right and due celebration of a sacramental ordinance: by faith he kept the passover: it follows—and the sprinkling of blood. This was a temporary ordinance and observation, annexed to the first celebration of the passover, not repeated afterwards; the sprinkling of the blood on the side-posts of their houses, was a token that the destroying angel should pass over those houses, that none should be destroyed in them: but this rite, though it ceased with the first passover, yet it abides for ever in its mystical signification; God hereby teaching us, that unless we are sprinkled with the blood of Christ, our Paschal Lamb, no other privilege can secure us from the displeasure of God, and everlasting destruction; by faith he kept the passover, and sprinkling of blood, ver. 28. Note, 4. A farther instance of the power and efficacy of Moses' faith in passing through the Red Sea, ver. 29. Probably he entered first into the sea, at the head of the people himself, both to conduct them, and to encourage them; the waters doubtless were raised to a very great height on both sides of them; and though they were a wall unto them, yet it was a mighty act of faith, to put themselves between such walls, as were ready every moment to fall upon them, had they not been under an almighty restraint. Learn hence, that faith will overcome all fears and dangers, and find a way through a sea of difficulties, under the call, and at the command of God. But how came it to pass that the Egyptians going in the same path through the Red Sea, were drowned, in which the Israelites were preserved? Ans. The Egyptians entering in was an act of presumption, the Israelites was an act of faith. God commanded the Israelites to go through: now, as faith gives courage to obey God in difficult duties, so it gives encouragement to hope that safety shall evermore accompany duty.

30 By faith the walls of Jericho fell down, after they were compassed about seven days.

After the faith of Moses and the Israelites at the Red Sea, we have here the faith of Joshua and the Israelites before Jericho, recorded and related. Jericho was a walled and well fenced city, and a frontier town that kept them from entering into Canaan. God commanded them not to fight but to walk, to go round the city seven days, and he would give them an unexpected entrance into it; they believe and obey, and the success was according to their desire; by faith the walls of Jericho fell down, &c. Here note, 1. The grace exercised, faith: they believed God upon his word, they entered Canaan at this frontier town; God remembers his promise, and disappoints not the faith and expectation of his people. Note, 2. The readiness and exactness of the people's obedience, they compassed the town so many days, they do what God commands, and no more; here is no mount raised, no engine planted, no sword drawn, they only walk, not fight. Doubtless the men of Jericho made themselves merry with this sight, and said one to another "what, will these men beat down our city with their eyes? Will they conquer us only by gazing upon us?" And farther, as the army only must encompass the city, so must the priests blow with the rams' horns; a contemptible mean! Had they made use of the silver trumpets of the sanctuary, that had been a good ground to hope for success, they being the symbols and sacred signs of God's presence with them; but verily trumpets of rams' horns seemed more fit to move laughter, than to do execution; yet assuredly no ram of iron could have been so forcible for battery as these rams' horns, when God had appointed them. It is the praise of omnipotency oftentimes to work by improbabilities. Note, 3. The event and success which followed their faith, and accompanied their obedience, the walls of Jericho fell down. Nothing can stand before the power of God, and the faith of his people. If we will believe God's promises, and execute his commands, we need no shifts nor artifices, no power nor policy of our own to work deliverance for us. Learn hence, That when faith makes use of the means prescribed by God, though it cannot discern what influence the means can have to the end aimed at, yet the issue and the event shall certainly be according to God's appointment and faith's expectation; by faith the walls of Jericho fell down, after, &c.

31 By faith the harlot Rahab perished not with them that believed not, when she had received the spies with peace.

Observe here, 1. The person spoken of, Rahab, a Gentile, an Amorite, an harlot, who kept a victualling house in Jericho, and so was both harlot and hostess, defiled both in mind and body with idolatry and adultery. 2. What is spoken of her: she believed; by faith, Rahab, &c. She was converted to God before the spies came to her, by what she had heard of him and his mighty works. Behold here a blessed instance! 1. Of the sovereignty and freedom of God's grace. 2. Of the power and efficacy of divine grace, in calling and converting a person given up by her own choice to the vilest of sins, even to the ravings of lust; but no sinner nor sin is to be despaired of, in whose cure sovereign grace is engaged. Observe, 3. The effect and fruit of her faith, she received the spies with peace; that is, entertained them safely, concealed them, gave them intelligence, exposed herself to danger, in the conveyance of them; an eminent fruit, a special evidence, and an high demonstration of her faith; indeed she told an officious lie; but God pardoned it, and the apostle here makes no mention of it: the Holy Ghost lays, as it were, the finger upon the scar, and covers it out of sight contrary to the practice of the malignant world, who overlook all the good, and reflect only upon the evil of an action; whereas God takes notice of the good, but passes by the evil. Observe, 4. The benefit and advantage she received by her faith, she perished not; that is, when the credulous and idolatrous people of Jericho were destroyed, she and her family were preserved. From the whole learn, 1. That God is ready to show wonderful mercy to penitent sinners, if they return to him, and believe in him, how great soever their sins have formerly been. Learn, 2. That true faith wherever it is, will show itself by some eminent effects, and notable fruits of it. Learn, 3. That the rewards of faith are excellent, and truly glorious; as she was preserved from the common ruin at Jericho, so shall all believers be saved from that wrath and destruction, which shall come ere long upon the impenitent and unbelieving world.

32 And what shall I more say? for the time would fail me to tell of Gideon, and of Barak, and of Samson, and of Jephthae: of David also, and Samuel, and of the prophets:

33 Who through faith subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, obtained promises, stopped the mouths of lions.

34 Quenched the violence of fire, escaped the edge of the sword, out of weakness were made strong, waxed valiant in fight, turned to flight the armies of the aliens.

35 Women received their dead raised to life again

In these and the following verses, our apostle sums up the remaining testimonies which he might have produced to show the great things which faith have assisted persons to do, and also enable them to suffer the hardest and most terrible things that could be encountered with. In the verses now before us, an account is given us of the great things of all sorts, which faith has enabled to do; particularly, it was faith that made them fearless whom God raised up, in the days of the judges, to conflict with the enemies of the church; it was faith that assisted them in the combat, and rendered them victorious in the conflict; it was faith rendered Gideon successful over the Midianites, Barak over the Canaanites, Samson over the Philistines, Jephthae over the Amorites, David over the Jebusites and Moabites: it was faith in the promise of God that made them courageous, and rendered them victorious; there is nothing so great, so difficult or seemingly insuperable, that should hinder us from acting faith in all things, even things more great and excellent than the conquest of earthly kingdoms. Observe next, Our apostle having enumerated the persons believing, he now reckons up the noble acts and honorable achievements of their faith. Through faith they subdued kingdoms: so did Joshua subdue all the kingdoms in Canaan, and David all the kingdoms about it, viz. Moab, Ammon, Edom, Syria, and the Philistines: these were subdued by faith because what they did was in obedience to God's command, and in the accomplishment of his promises, for he had given all those kingdoms by promise to the Israelites, before they were subdued by them; thus they are said to subdue kingdoms by faith. Yet note, that they made use of all other heroic virtues besides faith; courage, valor, military skill, and military stratagems; faith excites all graces and virtues, and puts them in motion. Wrought righteousness; they executed the judgments of God on the enemies of the church, and administered justice impartially to all that were under their rule and government; and this working righteousness is a fruit of faith, for unbelief is the cause of all the injustice and oppression that is in the world: obtained promises; that is, the good things promised: so did Abraham, by faith, obtain a promised son, Joshua a promised Canaan, David a promised kingdom: but there was a great space of time between the promise and the performance, which put their faith sometimes hard to it. Stopped the mouths of lions; thus Daniel, chap. vi. because he believed in his God, ver. 23.

and the faith which heretofore stopped the mouth of lions, can stop the rage of the most savage oppressors and persecutors, whenever God pleases. Quenched the violence of fire; so did the three children's faith, Dan. iii. not a hair of their head was singed, they knew not which way God would deliver them, but they committed themselves to the omnipotency and sovereignty of God in the discharge of their duty, with a full persuasion that one way or other he would deliver them. Escaped the edge of the sword; as did David the sword of Goliath and Saul, though sometimes his fear prevailed that he should one day perish by the sword of Saul. Fear may be in cases of danger, and yet faith at the same time have the principal conduct of the soul; by faith David escaped the edge of the sword: so did the Jews the sword of Haman, and Elijah the sword of Jezebel, out of weakness were made strong; some apply this to Gideon and his three hundred men, Judges vii. 15, others to Hezekiah, who by the power of faith was in a wonderful manner recovered, and restored from a desperate sickness to perfect health, Isa. xxxviii. Waxed valiant in fight: so did Joshua, Gideon, Barak, Jephthae, and David, who through faith in the promise, and of the presence of God with them, feared neither the number nor strength of their enemies. David often declares that God "girded him with strength to the battle, and taught his hands to war, and his fingers to fight; so that though an host encamped against him, yet his heart was not afraid." Turned to flight the armies of the aliens; those aliens were the heathens and idolators, Philistines and Midianites, who were enemies to Israel, and to the God of Israel, and they made them fly and turned their backs; for as they fought for God out of a principle of faith, so God fought for them, according to the faithfulness of his promise, which was the ground of their confidence and courage. Women received their dead raised to life again; this is applied to the widow of Zarephath, and the Shunamite, 2. Kings iv. 36. 1. Kings xvii. 23. They were raised by the prophet's faith and received by their mothers, when raised with joy and thankfulness. These ten instances did the apostle select and choose out of many, to give, of the great things that had been done through faith, thereby to assure the Hebrews, and us with them, that there is nothing too hard nor difficult for faith to effect, when it is set on work, and managed according to the power of God.

—And others were tortured, not accepting deliverance; that they might obtain a better resurrection:

36 And others had trial of cruel mockings and scourgings, yea, moreover of bonds and imprisonment:

37 They were stoned, they were sawn asunder, were tempted, were slain with the sword: they wandered about in sheepskins, and goat-skins, being destitute, afflicted, tormented;

38 Of whom the world was not worthy: they wandered in deserts, and in mountains, and in dens and caves of the earth.

Our apostle having, in the foregoing verses, acquainted the Hebrews with the great things which faith enabled the Old Testament saints to do, he now lays before them an account of the hard and difficult things which faith enabled them to suffer, and here reckons up the sharpest and bitterest sufferings that human nature perhaps can be exposed to; but to do the greatest things, and to suffer the hardest, is all one to faith. Faith stands ready for both, as God shall call. Observe here in general, that the evils enumerated are of such various sorts and kinds, as to comprise every thing that may befall believers on the account of their christian profession: do we meet with temptations, scorings, mockings, scourgings, bonds, imprisonments, yea, death itself, by all sorts of tortures and extremities? This is our encouragement, that others in the cause of God, have undergone them, and been carried victoriously through them: but the particulars in this little book of martyrs follow.

Others were tortured, not accepting deliverance. In this passage, and several others here following, the apostle is concluded to refer to the story in the Maccabees, which though written after the closing of the canon of the scripture, when there was no extraordinary prophet in the church, yet the matters of fact were then fresh in memory, and are here alluded to, particularly Eleazar, 2 Mac. vi. 28 who was beaten to death when he had been persuaded and allured to accept deliverance by transgressing the law; and also the mother and her seven sons, they expected a better resurrection, better than what their persecutors offered them, even a glorious resurrection of their bodies at the last day. Others had trials of cruel mockings, as Micaiah, 1 Kings xxii. 24. and others; and scourgings, as Jeremiah, chap. xx. 2. &c. and xxxvii. 15. Also bonds and imprisonments, as Joseph in Egypt, and Jeremy in the dungeon; some were stoned, as Zacharias the son of Jehoiada, 2 Chron. xxiv. 21. Others sawn asunder, as Isaiah under the tyranny of Manasseh; others were tempted with fair promises and great rewards, but refusing, were slain with the sword. Learn hence, that torments in the cause of religion have been a very old invention of the devil and the world, and they have placed great hopes of prevailing by them; but no instruments of cruelty, no endeavours of hell shall ever prevail against the faith of God's elect. They wandered about in sheep-skins and goat-skins; destitute, afflicted, tormented. This some refer to Elijah, who was destitute and fed by ravens, 1 Kings xvii. 4. but it has been the portion of many of God's faithful servants to be driven from their habitations, sometimes by the cruelty of the laws, sometimes by force and violence. Of whom the world was not worthy: that is, the men of the world think the saints of God not worthy to live amongst them, whereas the world is not worthy of such excellent company; and therefore, as soon as their work is done, God removes them. Learn hence, 1. that God's esteem of his people is never the less because of their outward sufferings and calamities, whatever the world judgeth of them; they esteem them the filth of the world, and the offscouring of all things; but God is of another mind. Learn, 2. Let the world think as highly and as proudly of itself as it pleases, God thinks it at all times, but especially when it persecutes his people, base, and unworthy of their society. They wandered in deserts and mountains: behold here the state and condition of some of the servants of the living God, who, when driven from all the inhabited places, took up their lodgings in deserts and mountains, in dens and caves of the earth. Learn hence, that oftentimes it is much better and more safe for the saints of God to be in a wilderness, among the beasts of the fields, than in a savage world inflamed by the devil into rage and persecution.

39 And these all, having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promise.

That is "All the forementioned scripture saints, with others that lived from the beginning of the world, and the first giving out of the promise of the Messiah, Gen. iii. 15. all and every one of these obtained a good report through faith, that is, a good testimony that they pleased God; nevertheless they received not the promise, that is, the actual exhibition of the promise; Christ, the promised Messiah; the promise they had, but not the thing promised, this was not in their days exhibited. Christ was not then come in the flesh; this promise was made by God to the elders from the beginning, but not actually accomplished until the fulness of time. Learn hence, That the Old Testament saints had from the beginning the promise from God, concerning the exhibition of Christ in the flesh for the redemption of the world; which promise they were persuaded of the truth of, embraced it with desire, longing for the actual accomplishment of it, and thus enjoyed the benefit of it as well as we."

40 God having provided some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect.

The better thing here spoken of, is the coming of Christ in the flesh. Lord, what are we? And how were we better than they, that this better thing should be reserved for us? They saw the promise afar off, we enjoy it at hand. Jucundius est spectare quam expectare bonum. That they without us should not be made perfect: without us, is as much as without the things which are actually exhibited unto us. God never intended or designed, that the infant condition of the church should be perfect before the exhibition of Christ: that is, that they should be justified and saved by any sacrifices or services done in their time, but by looking to the sacrifice and satisfaction of Christ, whereby both they and we are perfected. Learn hence, That it is Christ alone who was to give perfection and consummation to his church: all the outward glorious worship of the Old Testament, though it pleased God, yet had no perfection in it; this God reserved for our times, that they without us should not be made perfect.

CHAPTER XII.

This chapter contains an application of the doctrine delivered and confirmed in the foregoing chapter, in which our apostle having pressed christian Hebrews to perseverance in the faith, and patience under the heaviest sufferings for the sake of their holy profession, by laying before them several instances of the Old Testament saints, who by the help of their faith did such great service for God, and endured such sufferings from the world; he comes now to reinforce his exhortation to patience and constancy in the cause of Christ; from the testimony before insisted on, with new additional motives, encouragements, and directions, in the chapter before us, in which he thus bespeaks them.

WHEREFORE, seeing we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us.

As if our apostle had said, "Seeing we, who are now called forth for to suffer, have before us so many instances of the faithful, who like a cloud of witnesses, have gone before us, and by the help of their faith conquered all impediments that lay in the way of their salvation, let us take encouragement from them to quit ourselves like men; and as runners in a race, let us cast off all worldly incumbrances which will entangle us, and avoid all sin, especially a bosom corruption, which easily besets us, and as easily overcomes us, and let us run with patience and perseverance the race of christianity set before us. Note, 1. That the Old Testament saints are here called witnesses, a cloud of witnesses, and a cloud encompassing us; they are witnesses of this grand troth, namely, that faith will carry believers safely through all that they may be called to do and suffer in the profession of the gospel; they are called a cloud of witnesses, partly for their number, there being a great multitude of them; partly for their direction, there being a leading virtue in them. As there was a cloud that went before the children of Israel to lead them in the wilderness, so this cloud of witnesses leads us up and down the wilderness of this world, in the darkest night of our sorrows and sufferings; and they are said to encompass us, because the scripture every where encompasses us with them, so that we can be in no suffering state or condition, be it never so sad, but we may turn our eye, and behold the face of some or other of these worthies looking upon us, and encouraging of us to patience and perseverance; and therefore to faint in our profession, whilst we are encompassed with such a cloud of witnesses, is a great aggravation of our sin. Learn hence, That it is a special honor which God puts upon his saints departed, especially such as suffered and died for the truth, that even after their death, they are witnesses to faith and obedience in all generations: "We are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses."

—Let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us,

2 Looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith;

Note here, 1. Christianity is a race, a race set before us by God, and it is our duty faithfully and perseveringly to run it. Note, 2 That in order to the running of this race, all impediments must be laid aside: "Let us lay aside every weight, and the sin that doth so easily beset us. By every weight is generally understood the world, its riches, honors, pleasures, preferments, which oftentimes are a peculiar obstruction to constancy and perseverance in the profession and practice of christianity: this dead weight must be laid aside, by mortifying our hearts and affections towards the world, for it is inordinate love to these things which gives them their weight and incumbrance; where this grace is in its due exercise, the world cannot influence the mind into any disorder, nor make it unready for its race. By "the sin which doth so easily beset us," some understand all sin in general, others a bosom beloved sin in special, others timorousness and fear in particular; all softness and tenderness, with respect to suffering. In the original word rendered easily beset us, some think there is an allusion to the long garments worn in the eastern countries: which, dangling about a man's heels, unfit him for running a race. As a man that has a burthen on his back, or a long garment hanging down to his heels, is altogether unfit to run a race, so unready are they for the spiritual race, who are entangled with the love of the world, or with any sinful compliances. Note, 3 That patience is a grace very necessary to enable a person to run the race of christianity which God has set before him. "Let us run with patience the race that is set before us." Such is the inevitableness and unavoidableness of the christian's trials; such the multiplicity and variety of them; such the long duration and continuance of them; that there can be no perseverance without patience. Note, 4. The way discovered, and the means declared, how, and by which we attain this grace and patience, namely, by looking unto Jesus. Learn hence, That looking unto, and beholding of Christ in his patience, is a notable mean to excite and stir us up to the practice and performance of our duty. Note, 5. The special title given here to Christ, he is styled the author and finisher of faith in his people; he is deservedly styled the author of our faith, because his holy doctrine is the foundation of our faith, because his holy ordinances are the special means of faith, and his holy Spirit the producer of faith in the souls of his people, and his precious blood the purchaser of faith, and all grace, for his people: And he is the finisher of our faith too, as well as the author of it, inasmuch as he has, by his promise, engaged to perfect what he has begun, Phil. i. 6. "Being confident of this very thing, that he that has begun a good work in you will perform it, &c." And inasmuch as he doth by his intercession plead with the Father for the believer's preservation in faith, and perseverance in holiness unto the end; "I have prayed that thy faith fail not." Luke xxii. 32.

—Who, for the joy that was set before him, endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right-hand of the throne of God.

3 For consider him that endured such contradiction of sinners against himself, lest ye be wearied and faint in your minds.

Observe here, 1. How our apostle having propounded the example of suffering saints before, to provoke them to patience and constancy under their tribulations, he propounds now the example of a suffering Saviour, and bids them consider him; Qualis sit, compare his sufferings with your own, consider who he was, and who you are; was not he the Son of God? had not he all glory and power in his hand? yet he endured, &c. consider him therefore. Learn hence, that the frequent consideration of Christ in his sufferings, is the best mean to keep up faith, and encourage patience under our own sufferings. Observe, 2. How our apostle particularly enumerates the sufferings which our Lord Jesus underwent, he endured the contradiction of sinners: that is, the great opposition made to his doctrine, the slander cast upon his miracles, the indignities offered to his person, the malicious and unwearied attempts against his life. Next he endured the pain of the cross, and despised the shame of the cross. Pain and shame are the two constituent parts of all outward sufferings, and they were both eminent in the death of the cross; no death more cruel and painful, no death more opprobrious and disgraceful, and never did these appear in any person's death to that degree of extremity, as in the death of Christ; yet he patiently endured them with an holy composure of soul, without reviling the villainous Jews, or threatening them with that vengeance and destruction which it was in his power to have brought upon them every moment. Lord! never any example of patient suffering like to thine, nor can any equal to it be given in human nature. Learn hence, that the manner of Christ's enduring sufferings, particularly pain and shame, ought to be continually before us, that God may in some measure be glorified by us, according therunto when we are called into a suffering condition. Observe, 3. What it was that carried Christ through his sufferings, it was the joy that was set before him: that is, say some, his glorious exaltation; rather the prospect of that glory which would redound to God and his church by his patient suffering. The glory of God, and the salvation of mankind, were now set before him, and he valued them above life, honor, reputation, and ease, and every thing that was dear unto him. Accordingly it was called his pleasure, Isa. liii. 10. Learn hence, that herein is Christ our great example, in that he was influenced and acted, in all that he did and suffered, by a constant respect to the glory of God, and the salvation of his people: "for the joy that was set before him, he endured the cross, &c." Note, 4. The reward of our Lord's patient sufferings declared, he is therefore set down at the right hand of the throne of God. God's throne implies his majesty and power, the right hand of his throne implies the highest honor, dignity and power, next to God. Christ's advancement above angels, and all creatures, is hereby intimated: this glorious estate was the great reward of his sufferings; he became obedient unto death, therefore God thus highly exalted him. Observe lastly, The advantage we shall reap and receive by eyeing Christ in, and imitating his patience under all our sufferings; it will prevent our being wearied and faint in our minds. Learn hence, That such sufferings may befall us in the way of our profession, as may cause us to faint and grow weary. 2. That when we do begin to faint and grow weary under sufferings, it is our duty to look unto Jesus, and consider him as an example of the greatest patience and constancy of mind; "look unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith, and consider him who endured—that ye be not weary nor faint."

4 Ye have not yet resisted unto blood, striving against sin.

Here the apostle subjoins another reason why the Hebrews should be reconciled to a suffering condition; because what they had already suffered was but a flea-bite, compared with what Christ and the forementioned cloud of witnesses suffered: he and they resisted unto blood, which you never yet did; "Ye have not yet resisted unto blood, &c." By blood is meant death and loss of life; though they had resisted bravely, and suffered manfully, yet their lives were safe. Learn hence, 1. That such as are engaged in the christian profession have no security, but that they may be called forth to the utmost sufferings, even to the sealing of it with their blood. Learn, 2. That whatever befalls us on this side blood, is to be looked upon as a fruit of divine tenderness and mercy towards us. Learn, 3. It is highly dishonorable to faint in the cause of Christ and the gospel, under lesser sufferings, when we know there are greater to be undergone by ourselves and others, on the same account. Learn, 4. That it is a noble struggle to resist even unto blood, in opposing sin, and striving against it, both in striving against the sin which others commit, and in striving against the sin which others, by promises or threatenings, would tempt us to commit. O how honorable a warfare is it to be engaged against such an enemy as sin is!—Striving against sin.

5 And ye have forgotten the exhortation which speaketh unto you as unto children,—

As if he had said, "By growing weary and faint in your minds, you will plainly show, and evidently declare, that you have forgotten that exhortation which God gives, Prov. iii." The want of a diligent consideration and due remembrance of God's promises, recorded in scripture for our encouragement unto duty, and support under difficulties, is very sinful, and of dangerous consequence unto our souls, "Ye have forgotten the exhortation, which speaketh unto you."

—My son, despise not thou the chastening of the Lord, nor faint when thou art rebuked of him:

Note here, 1. A sweet and endearing compellation, my son. Learn hence, that good men, when under the greatest trials and heaviest afflictions, are God's sons, he calls them sons, and he deals with them as with sons. Note, 2. The nature of the saints' afflictions declared; not judgments but chastisements, and fatherly rebukes; the original word signifies such a correction as a father gives his child for his instruction, and bringing him to a sense of his duty. Learn hence, That all the afflictions which God lays upon his children are not the effects of his vindictive anger, but the fruits and effects of his paternal love. Note, 3. A cautionary direction given against two very dangerous extremes in the time of affliction, namely, despising correction, and fainting under it. It is the duty, and ought to be the endeavour, of all the children of God, when under his fatherly hand, to take care that they neither despise his chastisements, nor faint under them. When God has taken away one of our comforts, to say, "Let him take all if he will; if my children must die, let them die; if my estate must go, let it go." This is to despise. God cannot bear it, to see us bear his hand thus lightly. The other extreme is fainting: if when goods are taken away, the heart is taken away, and when relations die, the spirit of a person dies with them. "Despise not thou the chastening of the Lord, nor faint, &c."

6 For whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth.

A reason is given in these words, why we should not faint under divine chastisements, because God chasteneth every one whom he loves. Here note, That love is antecedent unto chastening, and that chastening is consequential unto love. Note, 2. That divine love and fatherly chastisings are inseparable; whom he loveth, that is, whomsoever he loveth, he chasteneth, none goes free. Note, 3. That no person then has any reason to complain of his portion of fatherly chastisements, seeing it is the constant way and manner of God's dealing with his children. Note, 4. That in and under all our chastisements, the resignation of ourselves, to the sovereign pleasure, and infinite wisdom of God, is the only means to preserve us from fainting and weakness.

7 If ye endure chastening, God dealeth with you as with sons; for what son is he whom the father chasteneth not?

8 But if ye be without chastisement, whereof all are partakers, then are ye bastards, and not sons.

Observe, 1. He does not say, If ye be chastised, but, "If ye endure chastisements", God dealeth with you as with sons: if ye endure them with faith and patience, with submission and perseverance, so as not to faint under them. Learn hence, That a patient endurance of chastisements is of great price in the sight of God, as well as of singular use and advantage unto us. Afflictions and chastisements are no pledges or assurances of our adoption, but when and where they are endured with patience. Observe farther from those words, "What son is he whom the father chasteneth not?" 1. That every one of God's sons, more or less, stands in need of his fatherly chastisement. 2. That God is very careful, as a wise and tender father, to correct and chasten all his children. 3. That God in correcting of his children dealeth with them as with sons; he is the world's sovereign, but the believer's father: as he is the governor of the world he treats men righteously in his judgments; as he is the father of believers, he treats them graciously in afflictions. Observe again from those words, "If ye be without chastisement whereof all are partakers," (that is, all sons are partakers,) that all true children are under God's fatherly discipline; and all that are not under his discipline are not his children, then are ye bastards and not sons. Learn hence, 1. That God's family, or visible church in this world, has some bastards in it, sons that may have gifts and outward enjoyments, but are not heirs, and have no right to the heavenly inheritance. Learn, 2. That this is a great evidence of it, that they are not the genuine sons of God because they go unchastised; not that they are altogether without affliction, for they are in trouble like other men, but they are not sensible of divine chastisements in their afflictions, they do not receive them, bear them, and improve them as such, but are impaired by their afflictions, rather than improved by them; they come cankered out of the furnace, and leprous out of Jordan; afflictions that should refine them from their dross, and purify them from their filth, boil their scum and impurity more into them. Learn, lastly, That a joyous state of freedom from affliction, is such as we ought to watch over with great jealousy and fear, lest it should be a leaving us out of the discipline of the family of God; not that we may desire afflictions as such, much less exasperate and torment ourselves; but we may pray that we may not want any pledge of our adoption, leaving the order and disposal of all things to the will of God.

9 Furthermore, we have had fathers of our flesh, which corrected us, and we gave them reverence: shall we not much rather be in subjection unto the Father of spirits and live?

10 For they verily, for a few days chastened us after their own pleasure: but he for our profit, that we might be partakers of his holiness.

These words are a fresh argument to persuade christians to a patient enduring of divine chastisements; the argument is drawn from the less to the greater, thus: "If our earthly parents chastened us only a few days, and after their own pleasure, and yet we were subject to them, how much more ought we to be subject to God our heavenly Father, who chastens us for our profit, that we may be partakers of his holiness?" Note here, 1. Earthly parents do and may chastise the children of their flesh, and they ought to reverence them for so doing, and pay a reverential submission to their parental chastisements. Note, 2. That the motive of, and rule which parents too often follow in correcting of their children, is their own will and pleasure: they have frequently a greater regard to their own passions, than to their children's advantage, and correct often in humour than in reason, erring sometimes in the matter, sometimes in the manner, sometimes in the measure of their corrections. Note, 3. That great is the difference between divine and parental chastisements. 1. In their author, one is the father of our flesh, the other of our souls and spirits; they are the immediate product of his power, which is a fundamental reason for our patient submission to God in and under all afflictions. 2. In their end, the one for their own pleasure, the other for his children's profit, to make them partakers of his holiness, by renovation, sanctification, and mortification: the carrying on of these things in us, is that which God designs in all his chastisements. Learn, hence, That we can have no greater pledge, and assurance of divine love in afflictions than this, that God by them brings us nearer to himself, and makes us more like himself; if under divine chastisements we find no increase of holiness, they are utterly lost, and we have nothing but the trouble and sorrow of them. Note lastly, The duty we owe to God the Father of spirits, and that is subjection, together with the benefit and advantage of it: by being in subjection to the Father of spirits, we shall live. Now this subjection unto God, consists in an acquiescence in his right and sovereignty to do what he will with his own, in an acknowledgment of his wisdom and righteousness in all his dealings with us, in a mighty sense of his care and love, and in an entire resignation of ourselves to his holy will in all things. And behold the advantage and benefit of this subjection to God in our chastisements, we shall live a spiritual life on earth, and an eternal life in heaven. The rebellious son under the law, that refused subjection to his earthly parent was stoned to death; see Deut. xxi. 18. and died without mercy: but they who yield subjection to God in their chastisements shall live, and not die.

11 Now, no chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous: nevertheless, afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteousness unto them which are exercised thereby.

Our apostle, in these words, seems to obviate an objection against a compliance with his exhortation to bear divine chastenings with silence and submission; and this is taken from the trouble and sorrow wherewith chastisement is accompanied; this he takes for granted is so, but takes off the weight of the objection, by opposing the benefits of all affliction thereunto. Learn hence, 1. That all afflictions for the present are grievous to the flesh, and painful to human nature. Learn, 2. That though afflictions are grievous, yet their fruits are gracious to a believer; God in his sovereign wisdom doth so dispose and manage his people's afflictions, that he makes them end in a happy fruit, even in the fruits of holiness and sanctification; and after affliction has done its work, and wrought kindly, God comes in with comfort and joy; and cheering cordials follow bitter physic. Observe farther, How the benefit of chastisement is expressed in a threefold gradation. Affliction yieldeth fruit: it is no dead and dry thing, but this rod blossoms, and brings forth almonds. The fruit it yieldeth is the fruit of righteousness, namely, patience, submission to the will of God, weanedness from the world, mortification of sin, purity of heart, holiness of life, farther readiness and greater fitness for suffering: these are the sweet fruits which God enables his to gather from the sour tree of affliction. And this fruit of righteousness which affliction yields is peaceable fruit, because it is a pledge and evidence of our peace with God, and because it brings peace into our own minds. By these fruits of righteousness our hearts are quieted, our minds composed, all tumults allayed, and we enabled to possess our souls in patience. O happy fruit of affliction! blessed is the man whom thou chastisest. Observe lastly, Who they are that are blessed with these special benefits of affliction, only those that are exercised thereby. The original word is an allusion to those in the public games, who strip themselves naked, and put forth all their strength for mastery. To be exercised by chastisements, is to have all our spiritual strength put forth, all our faith and patience tried to the utmost. Learn hence, That a christian can never find any benefit in chastisements, unless he be exercised by them, that is, unless his graces be stirred up by them to an holy and constant exercise, for hereby alone do they yield the peaceable fruit of righteousness.

12 Wherefore lift up the hands which hang down; and the feeble knees;

13 And make straight paths for your feet, lest that which is lame be turned out of the way, but let it rather be healed.

As if our apostle had said, "Seeing so glorious fruits spring from sanctified afflictions, be not dejected in mind, nor suffer fear to seize upon you, which weakens the hands, and enfeebles the knees, and causes them to smite one against another; but be resolute for God, make straight paths in the way of christianity, not stepping once out of it to avoid persecution, lest they who are already lame and feeble, the weak and wavering christians, be disheartened and moved by your example to turn out of the way, but let them rather by your constancy be confirmed in their christian course." Learn hence, 1. That in the running of our spiritual race, we must put forth our utmost strength and activity; but where the course is long, and difficulties great, we are apt to grow weary and despond, our hands hang down, and our knees grow feeble. Learn, 2. That faintness and weariness in duty, dejection and despondency as to success, are great evils, and of fatal consequence unto others as well as ourselves, which therefore we must with all intention of mind watch against: "Lift up the hands that hang down, and the feeble knees." Learn, 3. That negligent and careless walking in time of prosperity, and pusillanimity and weakness in time of trial, is a great mean of turning aside those that are lame and weak out of the paths of visible holiness, lest that which is lame be turned out of the way. Learn, 4. That the sight and due consideration of a christian's courage and constancy, will tend very much to the healing of the lame and weak christians whilst they are in the way, whose recovery when quite turned out, will be very difficult, if not impossible. "Let it rather be healed."

14 Follow peace with all men, and holiness without which no man shall see the Lord.

Our apostle having now finished his exhortation unto patient perseverance in the profession of the gospel under all sufferings and afflictions, he now proceeds to a prescription of practical duties incumbent upon christians at all times in the daily course of their conversation, two of which are contained in this verse, namely, to follow peace and holiness; the former contains our duty to man, the latter our duty to God. Here observe, That both duties are enjoined in one and the same precept, and also with one and the same penalty; Without which, that is, without following of both, which, without pursuing and endeavouring after both, no man shall see the Lord. Indeed, if a person follow holiness though he cannot obtain peace, he may see God, provided he pursues peace, and the fault none of his that he doth not find it; but if he does not pursue peace, though he pretends never so much holiness, he cannot be happy; for a christian must be of a peaceable, as well as of a pious conversation: peace and holiness, peaceableness and purity, are here joined together, and he can neither be happy in this or the next world, that puts them asunder. Observe farther, the manner how peace and holiness must be followed, namely, with intense endeavours: the original word imports a vehement pursuit, a metaphor taken from huntsmen, who follow the chase, and pursue their game, though it flies before them: if peace may be had, though it be upon hard terms, we must endeavour to secure it, for it can never be bought too dear, if it be not purchased by sin and baseness. A frame and disposition of seeking peace with all, is eminently suited unto the doctrine and grace of the gospel. A froward spirit, ready for strife and contention, easily provoked, and retaining long a sense of injuries, is directly contrary to the spirit and temper of the gospel. Observe likewise, how that holiness towards God must be accompanied with peaceableness towards man. It is evangelical holiness, which is here required; which must be inward holiness, an universal holiness, a sincere and real holiness, an humble and self-denying holiness, a growing and progressive holiness, a constant and persevering holiness, and such a holiness towards God, as is always accompanied with righteousness towards man. Observe, lastly, the absolute necessity of holiness in order to eternal blessedness, without it no man shall see the Lord. The future sight of God in glory depends peremptorily on our present holiness, not as the meritorious cause of it, but as a necessary qualification as preparation for it, and as it is the indispensable condition of our obtaining of it. The soul is by holiness made meet and fit for the enjoyment of God in happiness, Col. i. 12. Lord! how miserably mistaken will they be, who expect to see God to their comfort hereafter, who have lived and died in an unholly state here!

15 Looking diligently, lest any man fail of the grace of God; lest any root of bitterness springing up, trouble you, and thereby many be defiled.

Our apostle having declared what our duty is with respect to ourselves in the foregoing verses, he acquaints us, how much it is to our duty to take care of, and watch over others, to do what in us lies, that none may fall short of the grace of God, that is, fall from the grace of God, and the profession of christianity; so that it is very plain, that apostasy is the sin here pointed at, their falling back from christianity to Judaism, for fear of persecution: this is deservedly called a root of bitterness springing up, according to Deut. xxix. 18. A root that beareth gall and wormwood. Learn hence, 1. That looking diligently unto the good of others, and to prevent their falling into sin, especially into the sin of apostasy, is a duty we are obliged to by the light of nature, and the royal law of love. Learn, 2. That the root of apostasy from God, and the profession of christianity, may abide invisibly in and among eminent professors of religion. It is here called a root, because at the beginning it is hidden in the hearts of men, and cannot be discovered until it springs up; and it is called a root of bitterness, because of its noxious and poisonous qualities, its bitter effects and fruits. Learn, 3. That there is no man professing the gospel who comes short of the grace of God, but it is by reason of himself and his own sin. Unbelief, negligence and sloth, are the true causes why such persons do fail of the grace of God: "looking diligently, lest any man fail of the grace of God."

16 Lest there be any fornicator, or profane person, as Esau, who for one morsel of meat sold his birthright.

17 For ye know how that afterward, when he would have inherited the blessing, he was rejected: for he found no place of repentance, though he sought it carefully with tears.

Our apostle proceeds in these verses to warn them against such sins as would occasion their apostasy and falling from the grace of God, and they are fornication and profaneness; "Lest there be any fornicator, or profane person." Where note. How the apostle puts fornication and profaneness together, because they usually go together; fornicators, such especially as are habitually so, do always grow profane, and profane persons do set light by fornication, and they are sins very seldom forsaken; few fornicators, and profane persons, do ever come to repentance. By fornication, understand all conjunction with women out of wedlock, be it with single or married persons. By profane persons, understand such as mock religion, who lightly regard its promises and threatenings, who despise or neglect its worship, who speak irreverently of its concerns. Note, 2. The instance which the apostle gives of a profane person, in the person of Esau: "lest there be any fornicator, or profane person, as Esau." The scripture makes no mention of his fornication; but the way whereby he manifested his profaneness is declared, namely, that for one morsel of meat he sold his birthright. Which birthright had many privileges belonging to it, as namely, a double portion of the paternal inheritance, a right of rule and government over the family, power and dominion, dignity and superiority belonging to him, but especially the honor of priesthood, all which did belong to the first-born. And to these the blessing which run from Abraham in the patriarchal line, and was communicated from father to son, containing an inclosure of all church privileges, and preservation of the promised seed. Now Esau, by selling his birthright, did virtually renounce his right unto this blessing, wherein the promised seed and the church-state were contained, and doing all this upon a slight consideration, for a mess of pottage or morsel of meat; and in a regardless manner, utterly unconcerned at what he had done. This was his profaneness; and accordingly the scripture says, thus Esau despised his birthright. Learn from hence, how much it concerns all persons not to glory in their outward privileges. Esau here was the first-born of Isaac, circumcised according to the law of God, and partaker in all the worship of God, yet he proved an outcast from the covenant, and promises thereof. Profane Esau! The 16th verse acquaints us with the fruitlessness of Esau's sorrow for parting with his birthright, and the unprofitableness of his endeavours in order to the recovery of it: when he would have inherited the blessing afterwards. This afterwards, say some, was not less than forty years, for he sold his birthright when he was young, and when he designed the recovery of the blessing, Isaac was old; thus long did he live in sin, without any sense of it, or repentance for it; but falling into distress, it fills him with perplexity, and he seeks the recovery of the blessing: and herein he was a type of all unbelievers, and obstinate refusers of the grace of Christ. Learn, from his example, that there is a time coming when the profanest sinners upon earth will be found upon their knees at God's door, seeking, and that earnestly, with strong cries and tears, for the obtaining of that blessing which they now sinfully undervalue, and scornfully despise. "Afterwards Esau would have inherited the blessing, and sought it carefully with tears." It follows, he was rejected; that is, by his father Isaac; and found no place with him for repentance. Isaac would not change his mind, nor recal the blessing, which as a prophet of God he had conferred on Jacob. Learn hence then, that such sinners as now neglect the seeking of the blessing in God's time, have great reason to fear that they shall not find it in their own time, though they seek it with tears saller than those of Esau. Profane contemners of the grace of God, ought to fear being excluded from the mercy of God; and as Isaac did not, God will not repent or alter his righteous sentence upon them. This sad event had the profaneness of Esau, and the like will they meet with who despise the grace of God.

18 For ye are not come unto the mount that might be touched, and burned with fire, nor unto blackness, and darkness, and tempest.

19 And the sound of a trumpet, and the voice of words; which voice they that heard intreated that the word should not be spoken to them any more:

20 For they could not endure that which was commanded, and if so much as a beast touch the mountain, it shall be stoned, or thrust through with a dart.

21 And so terrible was the sight, that Moses said, I exceedingly fear and quake.

Our apostle's design being to bring over the Hebrews fully from Judaism to christianity, he enters here upon a description of both states, showing the excellency of the one above the other. He describes first the legal state of the church under the Old Testament, and the manner of their forefathers entering into covenant with God at Mount Sinai. And then he sets forth the evangelical state, whereunto they were called, and into which they were entered. In the verses now before us, he sets forth the dread and terror of the Mosaic dispensation, and the way and manner how their forefathers under the Old Testament entered into their church-state; telling them, that they came to a mount that might be touched, that is, to Mount Sinai, in the desert of Arabia, a barren and fruitless place, full of bushes and brambles, but without water or food; intimating, that such as are under the law, in a state of sin, bring forth no acceptable fruit unto God; and as there was no water in the desert, but that which the people lived upon was brought out of the rock, and that rock was Christ; it intimates, that from Christ alone were all their and our refreshments: the law affords none, but thunders from its fiery mouth, wrath and a curse. Farther, this mount is said to be what might be touched; that is, a sensible, awful thing, exposed to feeling; intimating how low and inferior the giving of the law was in comparison of the promulgation of the gospel, which was from heaven. The law was given from a mount that might be touched by man or beast, though if either touched it they must die, to intimate the bondage and fear the people were then in, who might not so much as touch the mountain where were the signs of God's presence: but the gospel was promulgated from heaven, and the Son of God sent down on purpose from thence to plant and propagate it here in the world. The second thing which the apostle tells them they were come unto, was to fire that burned. This fire that burned on the mount was a token of God's presence, and a distinct mean of filling the people with dread and fear. This fire represented the purity and holiness of God's nature, his jealousy and severity against sin. Thus the law represents to us the holiness and severity of God, with his anger and displeasure against sin and sinners, but there leaves us consumed, without relief, by Jesus Christ. Unto fire the apostle adds blackness and darkness, and tempest; which blackness and darkness might be caused by thick clouds and smoke that covered the mount. The darkness was a type of that utter darkness of hell, which the transgressors of that law deserved; and the tempest and terrible storms were emblems and signs of God's fiery indignation and fearful vengeance on the wicked violaters of his holy law, and might also point out and signify the effects of the law then delivered; namely to bring the soul into darkness, that it can see no light either for its direction or consolation; and it raises a tempest in the mind, of disquieting, perplexing thoughts, without relieving or encouraging a sinner to look out after any relief, until Christ in his gospel says, Behold me, Behold me. It follows, ye are come to the sound of a trumpet: this was not a real trumpet, but the sound of a trumpet formed in the air by the ministry of angels waxing louder and louder, to signify the nearer approach of God; also as this trumpet did summon the people to appear before the Lord as a legislative trumpet, in like manner there shall be a judicial trumpet, to summon the world to appear before Christ at the great day. After the sound of the trumpet followed the voice of words; that is the voice of God in a terrible manner promulgating the law out of the midst of the fire, in a language understood by that people. As the sound of the trumpet so the voice of God was loud, majestic, terrible, and like thunder. Quest. But why was there such vast solemnity used at the giving of the law? Ans. To signify the majesty and authority of him who was the supreme lawgiver, even the Lord of heaven and earth; and that the greater the outward solemnity was, the greater the inward impression might be upon the minds of the people; and to signify, that if the promulgation of the law was so awful, the transgression of it would be fatal, and the transgressor's punishment very dreadful. Observe lastly, The event of this sight and hearing on the part of the people: fear made them desire that they might hear this voice no more: and God's design in all, was to cause them to long for, and look after that great prophet, Christ Jesus, by whom God would speak unto them more comfortably, and by whom they might have access to the throne of grace more freely. "They entreated that the word should not be spoken unto them any more," because it heightened their fear and dread to the utmost. Learn from hence, That the sight and voice of God will be very dreadful to us: and there will be no appearance for us before him with confidence and peace, unless we have an answer in readiness with us to all the words of the law, even all that the law requires of us: and such as trust to their own works and merits to answer for them, or to any thing whatsoever, besides the blood and sacrifice, the mediation and satisfaction, of Jesus Christ, the surety of the new covenant, will find themselves eternally deceived. The next evidence the apostle gives of the dreadful promulgation of the law, and consequently of the miserable state of them that are under its power, appears in this, that the people "could not endure that which was commanded;" that is, the severity of that command, that if a beast touched the mountain, "it should be stoned or thrust through with a dart." All this was to show the absolute inaccessibleness of God, in and by the law, and at what distance we ought to keep ourselves from every thing that falls under the curse of the law. It is added last of all, "that Moses himself did exceedingly fear and quake." From whence observe, How all persons concerned were brought to an utter loss and distress at the promulgation and giving of the law, from whence no relief is to be obtained, but by him alone who is "the end of the law for righteousness unto all them that believe."

22 But ye are come unto mount Sion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an innumerable company of angels;

23 To the general assembly and church of the first-born, which are written in heaven, and to God the Judge of all, and to the spirits of just men made perfect.

24 And to Jesus the mediator of the new covenant, and to the blood of sprinkling, that speaketh better things than that of Abel.

Our apostle having given an account, in the foregoing verses, of the state of the Jewish church under the law, comes now to declare that more excellent state whereinto believers are called in and by the gospel. The privileges here summed up, partly respect the church militant, and partly the church triumphant. Observe then, The glorious privileges of the gospel-state, and what believers are said to come to whilst militant here on earth. 1. They are said to come unto "mount Sion, the city of the living God, the new Jerusalem; not to mount Sinai, which was full of terror and discomfort, but to mount Sion, full of all spiritual blessings.

Where note, The gospel church is called the city of the living God. A city is a place of safety and a place of honor, a place of peace and rest. The souls of sinners can find no place of rest and safety under the law, but we have all these things by the gospel, rest in Christ, peace with God, safety in divine protection, &c. And as a king dwells in his city, so God dwells in the church of believers; "that is my rest for ever, here will I dwell," says God, "for I have a delight therein." Oh, what manner of persons ought they to be who are the denizens of the city of God! Alas! the great number who pretend highly to the church, and its privileges, are citizens of this world only, and altogether unfit for this holy society. 2. Believers are next said to come to an innumerable company of angels: to come to these, is to be of their society; they and we are one in Christ; the angels above, and believers below, make up but one corporation or family; they are our fellow-citizens, and our fellow-subjects. True, they are above us, and at a mighty distance from us, yet upon occasion very near us; and though we do not see them, yet they love us, have a special care of us, and are ministering to us, as heirs of the same salvation with themselves. 3. They are come to the general assembly and church of the first-born; that is, they are of the number of God's regenerate and adopted ones, of those that are born again, whose names are registered in heaven. As the first-born under the law had a right to the inheritance, to a double part of the inheritance; so they who are interested really in the gospel-church, have a right to all that God has provided, and Christ hath purchased, even to the whole inheritance of grace and glory. O glorious privilege, to be brought unto this blessed society, this general assembly of the first-born! Especially if we consider what company, what society, what assembly, we belong unto without it, which is no other than that of devils, and the seed of the wicked serpent. 4. They are come to God the judge of all; that is, they have access to God by Jesus Christ, access to his favor by justification, and access into his presence by prayer and supplication, yea, access to him as a judge, without terror or consternation, blessed privilege; believers have a comfortable access to God as the judge of all with all their causes and complaints, he will hear them, plead their cause, and judge for them, and make their oppressions unsafe to the greatest of the sons of men. 5. Believers are said to come to the spirits of just men made perfect. Come to them, though not in the same place with them, until death; yet we and they have the same God and Sovereign, the same Head and Saviour, the same expectation of a glorious resurrection. Note here, 1. There are spirits of men in a separate state and condition, capable of communion with God and the church. 2. That all the spirits of just men departed, are made perfect; their race is consummated, perfect deliverance from all sin and sorrow is completed, and a full reward enjoyed; their faith is heightened into sight, and all their graces elevated into glory. 3. That yet are they spirits still, and no more but spirits; and though perfected spirits, yet there is wanting the last finishing stroke from the hand of God to render the bodies as well as the spirits of just men for ever perfect in the morning of the resurrection. 4. Believers are here said to come to Jesus the mediator of the new covenant; as if the apostle had said, "Your fathers came to a mount of fire and smoke, of darkness, terror and death, where there was no Mediator to make their peace with God, no blood to cry for mercy, and to cleanse them from sin; but you by forsaking Judaism, and coming over to christianity fully, are come into that society where Christ is Mediator and priest; where the blood of Christ sprinkled upon your souls, cries aloud for mercy, and cleanses from all sin. "And to the blood of sprinkling, which speaketh better things than the blood of Abel." Intimating that Christ's blood solicits God with stronger cries for mercy, than did ever Abel's for revenge. Quest. But what are those better things which the blood of Christ speaks above and beyond the blood of Abel? Ans. 1. It speaks better things from God unto us, namely, that his justice is satisfied, his wrath appeased, the condemning guilt of sin expiated, and the majesty of God fully reconciled to all believers. 2. It speaks better things to God for us, namely, to be at peace with us, to rest in his love towards us, to furnish us with all grace here, and to fit us for glory hereafter. O blessed Jesus! thy blood never cried as Abel's did, for vengeance on them by whom it was shed, but pleaded for pardon, and obtained pardon on the behalf of many of them. Happy they! who by faith are made partakers of this typical blood of sprinkling, which speaks better things than the blood of Abel.

25 See that ye refuse not him that speaketh, for if they escaped not who refused him that spake on earth, much more shall not we escape, if we turn away from him that speaketh from heaven.

Our apostle having, in the foregoing verses, given a summary account of the two states of the law and the gospel, with the incomparable excellency of the latter above the former, he gives them an exhortation and cautionary direction to take heed that they did not turn a deaf ear to so excellent a person as Christ was, preaching to them by his doctrine: "see that ye refuse not him that speaketh. Here note, in general, that to refuse any who speak unto us in the name and authority of Christ, is to refuse Christ himself. This may be applied to all the faithful preachers of the gospel, however they may be despised in and by the world. But it is here the person of Christ that is particularly intended, to refuse him here, is either to reject his doctrine, and not to receive it, or having received it, to renounce it; so that this refusal includes both unbelief and apostasy, either of which are fatal and dangerous to the sons of men. Observe next, The reason drawn from the heinousness of the sin, and the grievousness of the punishment: "if they escaped not who refused him that spake on earth:" that is, Moses, who delivered his message here below; "much more shall not we escape, if we turn away from him that speaketh from heaven;" that is Jesus Christ his Son, sent down from heaven, personally to deliver his holy doctrine; and now speaking to us from heaven by his Holy Spirit, in his ministers and apostles. Note here. 1. That Christ did in former times speak unto his church by Moses and the prophets. 2. That in these latter times he vouchsafed to speak unto his church personally himself. 3. That after he personally disappeared and left the world, he vouchsafed still to speak unto his church by his Spirit in the ministry of the word. 4. That though to refuse Christ, when speaking here on earth, was a grievous sin, and deserved a fearful punishment; yet to refuse him now, speaking from heaven, is a more grievous sin, and deserves a greater punishment, considering who speaks, what he speaks, and from whence he speaks; the gospel was a mystery brought to us from the bosom of the Father, the clearest revelation of God's will, and the fullest manifestation of his love, and yet few regard it, most reject it, to their unutterable and inevitable condemnation.

26 Whose voice then shook the earth; but now he hath promised, saying, Yet once more I shake not the earth only, but also heaven:

27 And this word, yet once more, signifieth the removing of those things that are shaken, as of things that are made, that those things which cannot be shaken may remain.

As if the apostle had said, "the voice of God, at the promulgating of the law on mount Sinai, shook the earth: but he promised after this to shake all nations, and that Christ the expected Messiah, the desire of all nations, should come, which is now fulfilled." Quest. But what means our apostle by God's shaking not the earth only, but also heaven? Ans. He means thereby all the Mosaical worship, all the judaical state, those were shaken at the coming of Christ, in order to the introduction of the immovable gospel-state which was perpetually to remain. Learn hence, That the coming of the Messiah was to be the last dispensation of God for the salvation of mankind, and consequently was to be perpetual and unchangeable. The apostle argues from the words, once more, that the former dispensation should be removed, to make way for that which should perpetually remain. Several things are here asserted by our apostle. 1. That there were some things which were intended by God to be shaken, namely, the Levitical priesthood, and all the Jewish sacrifices and services; these things were to be shaken, moved, yea, altogether removed out of the way. 2. That there were things that could not be shaken or removed, but remain; these were the gospel state, the christian religion, which shall continue until time shall be no more. 3. That the former things were removed, that the latter might be introduced and established; the law and the gospel were inconsistent; the legal and evangelical administration could not stand in force together, therefore there was a necessity for the nulling of the one, in order to the establishing of the other. 4. That the removal of the law, to bring the more perfect administration of the gospel, doth prove the stability and immutability of the gospel, that it stands fast for ever, there shall be no more shaking, no farther alteration in matters of religion to the end of the world. For thus it follows:

28 Wherefore, we receiving a kingdom which cannot be moved, let us have grace, whereby we may serve God acceptably; with reverence and godly fear.

29 For our God is a consuming fire.

Observe here, 1. That the apostle calls the dispensation of the gospel, a kingdom that cannot be shaken, in opposition to the law, which was an imperfect and alterable dispensation: the gospel revelation is full and final, there is no need of any farther revelation after this, nor of any change of that religion which was brought from heaven by the Son of God, in regard of the perfection of it, and its admirable fitness to reform the world, and to recover mankind out of their lost estate and lapsed condition, and to bring them to eternal happiness; and this by the purity of its doctrine, and the power of its arguments, to work upon the minds of men by the clear discovery of the mighty rewards and punishments of another world; we have received now a kingdom that cannot be shaken. Observe, 2. The inference which the apostle draws from the perfection and perpetuity of this revelation which God has last of all made to the world by his Son, let us have grace to serve God acceptably; that is, let us live as becometh those to whom God hath made so clear and perfect a revelation of his mind and will; we have all the advantages of divine revelation which the world ever had, and the last and most perfect that the world ever shall have; we have not only Moses, but Jesus; not only the moral law, but the glorious gospel, which the Son of God came down on purpose from heaven to declare to the world. Observe, 3. The manner how God must be served, with reverence and godly fear. Reverence, in divine service, looks at God's glorious excellency and majesty, and at our own unworthiness, together with that infinite distance between him and us; and godly fear is a religious awe upon the soul in holy duties, from the consideration of the great danger of sinful miscarriages in his worship. Observe, 4. The reason making the foregoing duty necessary, For our God is a consuming fire. Our God, intimates a covenant relation. Note hence, That the believers' God is a consuming fire, but not to believers; or if so, not to consume their graces, but their corruptions only, or at most their corruptible comforts. Note, 2. That though God takes us near to himself, and in covenant with himself, yet he expects that we consider who he is, and what he is, even a consuming fire and a jealous God.

CHAPTER XIII.

Our apostle being now come to a conclusion of this most excellent epistle, closes it with an exhortation to the several evangelical and moral duties, thereby pointing out to the ministers of the gospel, the right order, and best method, of preaching, namely, first to unfold the mysteries of the gospel, with the grace of God therein, and then to improve it to practical holiness in the duties of obedience.—In the pressing of these duties here, because there was not room for all, he mentions only some, which were most necessary for the Hebrews to attend unto with diligence, in their present circumstances; and herein also ought our apostle to be our pattern in the work of the ministry. Circumstances may make it necessary oftentimes that some duties be more diligently pressed on our people than others, which in themselves are of no less importance than they. And finally, the divine wisdom and pious care of the apostle, is to be observed and followed by us, in that solemn and fervent prayer which he put to God for a blessing upon his exhortations. Thus did our Lord before him, having preached a most excellent sermon to his disciples, St. John. chap. xiv. xv. xvi. He concludes it with a suitable prayer, xvii. Doubtless herein, according to our ability, we ought to follow our blessed Lord's and his holy apostle's instructive examples.

LET brotherly love continue.

Love being the fountain and foundation of all moral duties, our apostle begins with it, and places it at the head of all the rest, as comprehending our whole duty towards our neighbour. Note here, The duty commanded is love; the special duty recommended is brotherly love, or that brotherly affection which every true christian chiefly bears to all his fellow members in Christ for grace's sake; and the manner of the injunction or command is that this brotherly affection do continue and constantly abide, not in the pretence and appearance of it only, but in the truth and reality of it, for there are innumerable occasions which will be ready to impair and weaken it, if it be not well grounded; alas! unsuitableness of natural temper, differences in judgment, and matters of opinion, inconsistent worldly interest, readiness to provocation, or to be provoked, pride on the one hand, or envy on the other, will sadly occasion the temporary decay, yea, at last the total loss of this noble grace, if it be not well grounded, and deeply rooted. Learn hence, That brotherly love is very apt to impair and decay, if we endeavour not continually its preservation and revival. Lord, how marvellous is it, that so many amongst us can persuade themselves that they are christians, and yet be not only strangers, but enemies to this grace and duty of love! How is the power and glory of christianity weakened through want of it! and verily, until this holy love be again revived amongst us, the interest of christianity will run very low, yea, the concerns of religion will more and more run to ruin.

2 Be not forgetful to entertain strangers: for thereby some have entertained angels unawares.

The second duty here exhorted to is hospitality, especially towards strangers, which consisted in receiving them into their houses, and furnishing them with all needful accommodations. In those eastern countries inns were not so ready as with us, and christians were generally poor, not able to bear their own charges in their travelling from place to place. Strangers, even amongst Heathens, were accounted sacred, and under the peculiar protection of God. And a punishment was appointed for those that were inhospitable towards them. Hospitality is a prescribed duty; but this part of it, to wit, the entertaining of the strangers which was so great a virtue in ancient times, is now driven out of the world by the wickedness of some, and the covetousness of others; few strangers are worthy to receive entertainment, and as few have hearts to give it. Observe farther, The manner of prescribing this duty. Be not forgetful to entertain strangers: no doubt a positive command is included in the prohibition, forget not; that is, remember to do it, be always in a readiness for the discharge of this duty; our hearts ought to be always in a gracious disposition toward such duties as are attended with difficulty or charge; the liberal mind deviseth liberal things. Observe, lastly, The reason enforcing the duty, hereby some have entertained angels unwares: so did Abraham and Lot entertain three angels, in the appearance of men, not knowing who or what they were. By receiving strangers, out of faith in Christ, and love to God, we may receive precious saints, and (which is more) some blessed angels sent to keep them, and (which is most of all) Jesus Christ, himself, who at present resents, and will hereafter acknowledge and reward, such kindness shown to his members as done to himself. Matt. xxv.

3 Remember them that are in bonds, as bound with them; and them which suffer adversity, as being yourselves also in the body.

Hospitality towards strangers was expressed in the foregoing verse; here compassion towards sufferers, such as are captive prisoners in bonds, either upon a religious or civil account. Here note, 1. That bodily bondage is a bitter bondage; captivity is a most grievous calamity. 2. That we are very prone to forget others' captivity, when we ourselves are in prosperity. 3. That such as are in bonds for Christ's sake especially, and his holy gospel, ought particularly to be remembered by us, they are and ought to be the peculiar objects of our compassion; although considering the cause in which they suffer: it is better, and more honorable, to be in bonds for Christ, than to be at liberty with a raging, persecuting world; for bonds and imprisonments for the truth, were consecrated to God, and made honorable by the bonds and imprisonment of Christ himself, and commended to the church in all ages, by the bonds and imprisonments of the apostles, and the primitive witnesses to christianity. Note farther, How we are to be mindful of them, and in what manner, by visiting of them, administering to them, sympathizing with them, praying for them, and all this as bound with them, which implies an act of union, as members of the same mystical body, and suffering in and for the same common cause; remember them that are in bonds, as bound with them; it follows, and those that suffer adversity, as being in the body. This implies, that there are many kinds of afflictions besides bonds; that we are prone to forget those who suffer lighter and lesser afflictions; if they be not in bonds, we are ready to forget them, though they suffer much adversity; but the command is more general to remember all that are in any kind of adversity, whether they suffer in body, name, or estate, by sickness, pain, losses, reproaches, or any kind of calamity; the professors of religion are exempted from no sorts of adversity, and under every kind of it we must remember them, and sympathize with them, because we ourselves are in the body with them; that is, say some, we are members of the same mystical body with them, and therefore when one member suffers, all the members are to suffer with it. Yourselves are in the body; that is, say others, in the same state of natural life, subject and obnoxious to the same sufferings, and within the reach of the same adversities. Learn hence, That a sense of our own being continually obnoxious unto sufferings during this life, ought to incline our minds to a diligent consideration of others in their sufferings, so as to discharge all duties of love and helpfulness towards them, as an evidence of our interest in the same mystical body with them, and as a ground of just expectation of the like relief and compassion from them; "Remember them which suffer adversity, as being yourselves also in the body."

4 Marriage is honorable in all, and the bed undefiled:

Our apostle having, in the former verses, directed christians to their duty one towards another, in this, and the following verses, he directs them to perform their duty towards themselves; and because the two radical comprehensive lusts of corrupted nature are uncleanness and covetousness, he therefore commends unto their care and practice those two great duties of chastity and contentation; the former in this, the latter in the next verse. Now here observe, That to prevent the former sin, the ravings of unbridled lust, our apostle prescribes the remedy which God appoints, marriage; that is, the conjunction of two individual persons that have freedom in choice and consent, and have power over themselves, not being within the degrees of affinity or consanguinity prohibited, between whom there results such an indissoluble union, that thereby they become one flesh, such marriage he affirms to be honorable, and to be so esteemed, in regard to its Author, God himself, Gen. ii. 18. in regard of the place, paradise; in regard of the time, in man's innocency; in regard of the end and usefulness of it, the continuation of the race of mankind; thus it is honorable, and ought to be had in honor. The apostle adds, that it is thus honorable in all; that is, amongst all orders, ranks and degrees of men, that are called thereunto: the remedy is equally provided by God for all; and therefore for the church of Rome to deny it to their clergy, is to usurp authority over the consciences of men, and to judge themselves too pure for an institution of their Maker, which our first parents in innocency did not think themselves too pure for. Learn hence, 1. That divine institution is sufficient to render any state or condition of life honorable, and consequently the state of marriage. 2. That which is honorable by divine institution, may be rendered abominable by the miscarriages of men. 3. That it is an horrid contempt of the authority of God, and a bold usurpation over the consciences of men, to forbid the state of marriage unto any, which God has made honorable among all. Next to the state of marriage, the apostle adds the duty of that state, the bed undefiled, in opposition to the defiled bed of whoremongers and adulterers, and the preservation of marriage duties within their due bounds.

—But whoremongers and adulterers God will judge.

Having exhorted to conjugal purity and chastity in the former part of the verse, he adds a very cogent reason and forcible motive to it in the latter words, because whoremongers and adulterers God will judge; that is, all persons who in a single state of life do know one another carnally, without a marriage-vow or covenant between them; if both parties be single, their filthiness is called fornication; if either of them be married, adultery; neither of them shall escape the judgment of God; that is, temporal punishment in this life, and eternal damnation in the next. Learn hence,

That whatever light thoughts men have of the sin of uncleanness, yet we are assured it doth in its own nature deserve eternal condemnation, and such as live and die impenitently in it, shall certainly perish for it; and if so, then all occasions of, and all temptations leading to those sins, are to be avoided as we love our souls; for all sinners, those who have habitually given up themselves to the lust of the flesh, are most rarely and difficultly brought to repentance.

5 Let your conversation be without covetousness; and be content with such things as ye have. For he hath said, I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee.

6 So that we may boldly say, The Lord is my helper, and I will not fear what man shall do unto me.

Observe here, A dehortation or negative precept, "Let your conversation be without covetousness." By conversation, we are first to understand the disposition of the mind, then the actions of the life, both ought to be free from all inordinate love to, and endeavours after, more of this world than God is pleased to give unto us. By covetousness we are not to understand, as if a provident and prudential care for the things of this life were forbidden, or as if all endeavours to maintain our right to what God has given us were unlawful; but by covetousness is meant an eager and unsatiable desire after, accompanied with restless and unwearied endeavours for, the things of this life, proceeding from an undue valuation of them, and an inordinate love unto them. Learn hence, That as all sin in general; so covetousness in particular, is inconsistent with a christian conversation, according to the gospel. No sin at this day doth more stain the glory of christianity than this doth. Alas! the profligate lives of debauched persons, their blasphemies, adulteries, drunkenness, and such like, do not half the mischief to religion which this sin doth, because the persons guilty of it pretend to religion, which the other concern not themselves with. Observe, 2. A positive injunction, "Be content with those things that you have." Contentment is a gracious disposition of mind, whereby the christian rests satisfied with that portion of the good things of this life which the wisdom of God assigns him, without complaining of the little which God gives to him, or envying the much which God bestows on others. Yet know, that contentment with what we have, is not consistent with, nor exclusive of, an industrious diligence, and an honest moderate care to increase what we have, for ourselves and families. Honest industry is the command of God, and he has given us six days in seven for the exercise of it; but it is utterly exclusive of all covetous desires, of all anxious cares, of all priding ourselves in, and boasting of what we have received, contemning and despising others, a vanity which men of weak minds are only guilty of. Observe, 3. The argument to enforce this duty; "For he has said, I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee." The words are a promise, a promise of God, a promise of his presence and providence to assure us of both, and that he will never leave us. He uses five negatives; I will not leave thee, I will not, I will not, I will not forsake thee. Where note; That the vehemency of the expression, by the multiplication of the negative particles, is both an effect of divine condescension, and gives the utmost security to the faith of believers, that God will be present with them, and comfortably provide for them; so that the words are a strong reason to dehort from covetousness, and to exhort to contentedness: for having God present with us, to take care of, and provide for, us, we have all things in him, and a promise from him, that we shall not want any thing that is good and needful for us; only we must allow God this liberty, and give him leave to judge what is needful, and when it is needful. Observe, 4. That though the foregoing promise is made to Joshua, yet the apostle applies it to all believers, and draws comfort from it; "We may boldly say, the Lord is my helper." Here note, That whatsoever promise is made in particular to any one believer, if there be not some special reason which confines and ties it to his person, every believer may apply it to himself. This promise, which God made particularly to Joshua for his support, under that great difficulty in conquering the land of Canaan, the apostle here applies to the case and state of particular believers: We may therefore boldly say, &c. Believers having the same grounds that he had, may use the same confidence that he did, though our circumstances and his are not the same. All the promises of God's gracious presence made to the prophets and apostles of old, all believers may apply to themselves in their suffering state: We may boldly say, &c.

7 Remember them which have the rule over you, who have spoken unto you the word of God: whose faith follow, considering the end of their conversation;

The best duty recommended to them, is respect to the spiritual guides, and ecclesiastical governors, whom God, by death, or persecution, at any time removes from them, and that is, to preserve their memory fresh amongst them as a precious treasure; "Remember them that have the rule over you." Secondly, To propound their holy conversation to their daily view, in a christian imitation of those evangelical graces and moral virtues, which were so orient and exemplary in their rulers' lives. Learn hence, 1. That it ought to be the care of the churches' guides to set before their people, and leave behind them, such an example of faith and holiness, as that it may be the duty of the church to remember them, and follow their example. Learn, 2. That it is the standing duty of that people whom God hath honored with the enjoyment of a spiritual guide and ruler, perseveringly to follow their faith in the soundness of it, and in the steadfastness of faith, and to imitate their conversation, by exemplifying those evangelical graces, and christian virtues, which did so orientally shine forth in the lives of their ministers.

8 Jesus Christ the same yesterday, and to-day, and for ever.

These words may be understood three ways; with respect to the person of Christ, to the office of Christ, and to the doctrine of Christ. 1. With respect to the person of Christ, he is eternal and immutable in every state of the church, and in every condition of believers he is the same, and always will be the same in his divine person; he is, ever was, and ever will be, all in all, unto his church. 2. He is "the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever;" not only in respect of his person, but in regard of his office. The virtue of the legal sacrifice expired with the offering, but the precious oblation of Christ hath an everlasting efficacy to obtain full pardon for believers; his blood is as powerful to propitiate God, as if it were this day shed upon the cross. 3. He is "the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever;" in regard of his doctrine, that remains unchangeable and irrevocable. The gospel is the last revelation of the mind of God, made known by Jesus Christ, that ever will be laid before the world: such, therefore, as reject him and his doctrine, reject the last remedy, the only remedy, and must needs perish, without any possibility of recovery. Learn from the whole, That our Lord Jesus Christ was, from the beginning of the world, the immutable object of his church's faith, and the consideration of Jesus Christ in his eternity, immutability, and indeficiency in his power, as he is always the same, is the great encouragement of believers in the profession of their faith, and a mighty support under all the difficulties they meet with upon the account thereof; "Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever."

9 Be not carried about with divers and strange doctrines:—

There is an inference in these words from what was asserted in the former, concerning the immutability of Christ, and his doctrine: namely, thus: seeing that the doctrine of Christ taught by the apostles is as Christ himself, "the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever," therefore the apostle exhorts them from being carried "about with divers and strange doctrines;" that is, in short, the doctrines of those that mingled Judaism and christianity together, by cleaving to the legal observation. Note here, The nature of the false doctrines, and what efficacy they have upon the minds of men; in themselves they are light and vain like the wind, tossing men up and down as the wind and the waves do the ship that wants ballast, turning them out of their course, and endangering their destruction; therefore, says the apostle, take heed that ye "be not carried about with divers and strange doctrines."

—For it is a good thing that the heart be established with grace, not with meats, which have not profited them that have been occupied therein.

By meats here, understand disputes and controversies about the difference of meats: by grace, understand the doctrine of the gospel, and sanctifying grace of the Holy Spirit which fixes and establishes the heart, and keeps the christian steady and steadfast. Learn hence, That it is far better to have the heart filled with divine grace, than the head with disputes and controversies in religion: "It is good that the heart be established with grace, and not with meats." The reason is added, "They have not profited them that are occupied therein;" that is, to observe the doctrine concerning a religious distinction of meats, since the gospel has been entertained, is altogether unprofitable and unavailable: yea, meats of themselves profited not those who observed them, even whilst the institutions concerning them were in force. Learn hence, That those who decline from the grace of God, as the only mean to establish their hearts in peace with him, do labor in that whereby they shall receive no advantage.

10 We have an altar, whereof they have no right to eat which serve the tabernacle.

These words are brought in as a farther reason why the christian Hebrews should not return to Judaism, or any other doctrine different from the gospel of Christ; We christians, says the apostle, have an altar; that is, a sacrifice, a priest offered upon and sanctified by, the altar of the cross. Note here, That the church of Christ under the New Testament has its altar, as well as the Old Testament dispensation had theirs. The altar which we have is Christ alone, and his sacrifice; for he was both priest, altar and sacrifice, all himself, and still continueth so to be. Note, 2 That this altar is every way sufficient in itself for the end of an altar; and therefore the introduction of any other sacrifice requiring a material altar, is derogatory to the sacrifice of Christ, and exclusive of him from being an altar. Observe next, The persons excluded from having any right unto, or expectation or benefit by this altar, namely, such as serve the tabernacle; that is, such as cleave still to the worship appointed for the Jewish tabernacle, and adhere to the Mosaic observations. They have no right to this altar by any divine institution, no right by virtue of their office, and relation to the tabernacle. Learn hence, That all privileges of what nature soever, without a participation of Christ, as the altar and sacrifice of his church, are of no advantage to them that enjoy them; "We have an altar, whereof they have no right to eat who serve the tabernacle."

11 For the bodies of those beasts, whose blood is brought into the sanctuary by the highpriest for sin, are burnt without the camp.

12 Wherefore Jesus also that he might sanctify the people with his own blood, suffered without the gate.

13 Let us go forth, therefore, unto him without the camp, bearing his reproach.

As if the apostle had said, "As the beasts slain for atonement, whose blood was brought into the sanctuary, were not to be eaten by the priest, but to be burnt without the bounds of the camp of Israel: in like manner, Christ, when he was to be offered up to sanctify the people with his own blood, went without the gates of Jerusalem to suffer; signifying that as they rejected him as unworthy to live with them, so he departed from them, and their political and legal state. Accordingly, "Let us go forth unto him without the camp;" that is, let us go unto him from the Jewish state and ceremonial law, bearing his reproach of the cross, which must be expected by us. Observe here, That Jesus Christ in his suffering did offer himself unto God: that the end of his offering was to sanctify the people: this he designed, and this he accomplished by his own blood, so called emphatically, partly in opposition to the sacrifice of the high-priest, which was the blood of bulls, and not their own; and partly to testify what our sanctification cost Christ, even his own blood. Observe farther, The circumstance of place where our Lord suffered it, it was without the gate of the city of Jerusalem; intimating, that he had now finally left the city and church of the Jews, and accordingly he denounced their destruction as he went out of the gate, Luke xxiii. 28, 29, 30. And by thus turning his back upon the temple, he plainly showed, that he had now put an end to all sacrificing in the temple, as unto divine acceptance; and by going out of the gate, he declared that his sacrifice and the benefits of it were not included in the church of the Jews, but equally extended unto the whole world: and by going out of the city as a malefactor, and dying an accursed death, he plainly declared that he died a sin-offering; that his death was a punishment for sin. Observe lastly, Our duty to go forth to him without the camp; this implies a relinquishing of all the privileges of the temple and city. 1. A turning our backs eternally upon all Jewish observations. 2. An acceptance of the merit of his sacrifice. 3. The owning of Christ under all that reproach and contempt that was cast upon him in his suffering without the gate, and not being ashamed of his cross. 4. In our conformity to him in self-denial and suffering: all which are comprised in this apostolical exhortation, "let us go forth to him without the camp, bearing his reproach." The sum is this, "That we must leave all to go forth to a crucified Saviour; and if we resolve so to do, we must expect and prepare to meet with all sorts of reproaches."

14 For here have we no continuing city, but we seek one to come.

These words may be considered either relatively or absolutely: consider them with relation to the context, and their sense is this; "how cheerfully ought believers, according to the advice of the foregoing verse, to go forth to Christ without the camp bearing his reproach, when they consider their present state and condition, but they have no city here below, that was now the seat of divine worship, whereunto it was confined as the Jews did at Jerusalem, before the abolishment of their ceremonial worship; but they seek one to come, even the heavenly Jerusalem, where they shall worship God in his holy temple day and night?" Consider the words absolutely in themselves, and two things seem to be intended and designed by them. 1. That our condition in this world is very uncertain and unsettled, we have no continuing city here. 2. It implies a tendency to a future settling, and the hopes and expectations we have of a happier condition, into which we shall enter when we go out of this world. Learn hence, 1. That the world never did, nor ever will, give a state of satisfactory rest unto all believers; it will not afford them a city of rest, hardly a place of refuge; they must therefore arise and depart, for this is not their rest. Learn, 2. That as God has prepared a city of rest for believers, so it is their duty to seek and secure it, and continually endeavour the attainment of it, in the way of his own appointment: we have not, but we seek.

15 By him, therefore, let us offer the sacrifice of praise to God continually that is, the fruit of our lips; giving thanks to his name.

16 But to do good, and to communicate, forget not: for with such sacrifices God is well pleased.

Our apostle having, at the tenth verse, declared, that we christians have an altar, to wit Jesus Christ; here we are directed to offer a sacrifice, without which an altar is of no use: "by him let us offer the sacrifice of praise to God continually." Where note, 1. Christians are to offer a sacrifice to God, and to none but God; no creature, angel, or saint, has any part in it: praise them we may, but offer a sacrifice of prayer or praise to them, we may not. Note 2. That the christian's sacrifice, which he presents to God, and none but him, is not propitiatory but gratulatory, a sacrifice of praise. We pretend to no expiation of sin, we owe that to a better sacrifice. What we offer is the fruit of our lips, not the fruit of our fields, or of our flocks, but of such lips as confess to his name. Note, 3. The time when, and the person by whom this sacrifice of praise is to be offered to God, and that is continually, constantly, morning and evening; not putting Almighty God off with less, under the gospel, than the Jews offered to him under the law, which was the morning and evening sacrifice; and all this by Christ; by him let us offer, by him who is our peace may we find access. It is his merit and mediation that crowns our sacrifice, and obtains acceptance for it. Note, 4. Another sacrifice especially recommended to our care, as exceeding acceptable and well-pleasing unto God, and that is the sacrifice of almsgiving, beneficence and bounty, doing all the good we can, and communicating to the relief of such as want; but to do good, &c. As if the apostle had said, "take heed you do not put God off with the fruit of your lips, the prayers and praises which cost you little, but now he calls for the labor of your hands, and for a part to be given to him in his poor members of what he has given to you; therefore be sure you forget not to do good and communicate, for with such sacrifices God is well pleased, with none better pleased than this, pleased with none without this; intimating, 1. That it is dangerous to the souls of men, when attendance unto one duty is abused, to countenance the neglect of others; when men give God daily a sacrifice of prayer and praise, but withhold from him in his members the sacrifice of almsgiving; they give him the fruit of their lips, which cost them nothing; but to do good and communicate, which will cost them something, this they forget. 2. That such works and duties as are peculiarly useful to men are peculiarly acceptable unto God? With such sacrifices God is well pleased.

17 Obey them that have the rule over you, and submit yourselves. For they watch for your souls, as they that must give account: that they may do it with joy, and not with grief; for that is unprofitable for you.

Two things are here observable: 1. The minister's duty towards his people. 2. The people's duty towards their ministers. In the former, note, 1. The duty required, to rule, to watch: God makes the bishops and pastors of his church here guiding rulers in church affairs; they rule not with rigor, but with lenity and benignity; they watch over them, that they may guide and lead them with rational guidance and conduct. Note, 2. The subject of this ruling power and authority, it is not over their estates, but their persons, particularly and principally their souls. They watch for your souls; as Jacob watched over Laban's, so do the ministers watch over Christ's flock, by day and night. Note, 3. The great engagement and obligation that lies upon them thus to rule, and thus to watch; they must give an account, that is, of their work and office, of their duty and discharge; there is a great shepherd, a chief shepherd, as Christ is called the prince of shepherds, to whom all inferior shepherds must give an account of their office, of their work, and of the flock committed to their charge. Note, 4. The different accounts that will be given by the ministers of God at the great day, some with joy, others with grief. It is matter of the greatest joy to us when we find any souls thriving under our ministry, and blessing God for the benefit they find by it: but on the other hand, the sadness of our hearts under the barrenness and unprofitableness of many under our ministerial labors, is not easily to be expressed. O God! with what sighing, with what groaning, with what inward heaviness and mourning, our accounts unto Christ are now given and accompanied, thou only knowest, and will make manifest at the great day. Observe, 2. The people's duty declared with reference to their spiritual guides and rulers, and that is, to obey them, and submit themselves; Obey them that rule over you, and submit yourselves: obey their doctrine, and submit to their discipline, but neither with a blind and implicit obedience: obey their doctrine, teaching you all things whatsoever Christ has commanded them; and submit to their rule whilst it is exercised in the name of Christ and according to his institution. Learn hence, 1. That the Lord Jesus Christ, as supreme Head of his church, has ordered and ordained that there shall be officers of his church, to guide and teach, to rule and watch over it to the end of the world. Learn, 2. That the due obedience of the church in all its members unto the rulers of it, in the discharge of their office and duty, is the best means of its edification, and an happy cause of order and peace in the whole body: Obey them, &c.

18 Pray for us. For we trust we have a good conscience, in all things willing to live honestly.

19 But I beseech you the rather to do this, that I may be restored to you the sooner.

In these words observe, 1. A request made by the apostle to these Hebrews for prayer; pray for us: the prayers of the meanest saints may be useful to the greatest apostles both with respect to their persons, and the discharge of their office. Observe, 2. The ground which gave him confidence to ask their prayers, and assurance that he should receive them; we trust we have a good conscience in all things. Behold here with what modesty and humility the apostle speaks of himself, even in things of which he had the highest and fullest assurance; we trust we have a good conscience in all things. Quest. What is a good conscience? Ans. A good conscience is a conscience enlightened by the word of God, a conscience awakened by the Spirit of God, a conscience purified and pacified by the blood of Christ, a conscience universally tender of all God's commands. Observe, 3. The testimony given of his having a good conscience, willing in all things to live honestly; a resolution and will, accompanied with constant endeavours to live honestly, is a fruit and evidence of a good conscience; the word willing denotes readiness, resolution, and endeavour. Observe, 4. How he presses for an interest in their prayers, with respect to his present circumstances, and his design of coming to them; I beseech you rather, &c.

20 Now the God of peace, that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that great Shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of the everlasting covenant.

21 Make you perfect in every good work to do his will, working in you that which is well-pleasing in his sight, through Jesus Christ: to whom be glory for ever and ever. Amen.

Our apostle having in the former verse desired their prayers for him, in this verse he adds thereunto his own prayer for them, a most glorious and excellent prayer, inclosing the whole mystery of divine grace in its original, and the way of its communication by Jesus Christ, a prayer evidently proceeding from a spirit full of faith and love. Observe here, 1. The title assigned and given to God. The God of peace. But why the God of peace, rather than the God of power, or the God of grace, or the God of glory? Because the divine power was not put forth in raising Christ from the dead until God was pacified: justice incensed exposed him to death; but justice appeared freed him from the dead. Observe, 2. The titles assigned and given to Christ, and they seem to express his threefold office; of a prophet, in that he styles him the great Shepherd of the sheep; of a priest, that he is said to be brought again from the dead, by the blood of the everlasting covenant; and of a king, in that he is styled our Lord Jesus Christ. Note, Christ is a shepherd, that great shepherd of the sheep; a shepherd, because as a shepherd he rules and governs his people, as a shepherd he leads them by his heavenly doctrine and instructive example, as a shepherd feeds them with his word, yea, with his precious body and blood; he is styled not the but that shepherd, namely, that was promised of old, the object and the hope of the church from the beginning; and that great shepherd, because great in his person, great in his power, great in his undertaking, great in his glory and exaltation, above the whole creation; and the great shepherd of his sheep, because they are his own, a little flock in the midst of wolves, which could never be preserved, were it not by the power and care of this great shepherd. Observe, 3. The work assigned to God, as a God of peace, he brought again from the dead, our Lord Jesus Christ: Christ is said to raise himself in regard of immediate efficiency, but God the Father is said to raise him in regard of sovereign authority. God the Father, to whose justice the debt was due, by letting Christ out of the prison of the grave, acknowledged himself satisfied; the God of peace, to evidence that peace was now perfectly made, brought Christ again from the dead. But how did he do this? It is answered by the blood of the everlasting covenant, that is, by the blood of Christ himself, which ratified and confirmed the covenant. Observe, 4. The things prayed for, 1. Perfection in every good work, to do the will of God; it is not an absolute perfection that is here intended, but a readiness to every good work or duty of obedience. 2. To work in them that which is well pleasing in his sight: by this understand the actual gracious performance of every known duty. Note, That the efficacy and actual efficiency of divine grace, in and unto every act of obedience and duty, is here prayed for, and relied upon. Observe, lastly, A doxology, or ascription of all glory to Christ, to whom be glory, &c. All grace is from him, and therefore all glory to be ascribed to him: the whole dispensation of grace will issue in the eternal glory of Jesus Christ.

22 And I beseech you, brethren, suffer the word of exhortation: for I have written a letter unto you in a few words.

23 Know ye, that our brother Timothy is set at liberty: with whom, if he come shortly, I will see you.

24 Salute all them, that have the rule over you, and all the saints. They of Italy salute you.

25 Grace be with you all. Amen.

Our apostle had shut up and closed his epistle before: he adds these verses by way of postscript: now he begs of them kindly to accept, and wisely to improve the exhortations given them in this epistle, wherein he had handled many weighty matters in a few words. He lets them know that Timothy was set at liberty, and probably gone forth to preach the gospel, with whom, if he returned shortly, he hoped to come unto them, being desirous to see them: and thus, with salutations to them all in general, and to church-governors in particular, both for himself and the christians in Italy, he wishes them an increase of all grace, and an abundant sense of the love and favor of God in Christ; saying, Grace be with you all. Amen.

S A I N T J A M E S .

The epistle of St. James, together with the six following epistles, have gone under the name of catholic epistles for many ages, because, say some, they were not written to a particular city or country, as most of St. Paul's epistles were, but to all the christian Jews abroad, dispersed into several countries throughout the world, whose suffering condition rendered the consolation which this epistle affords very needful and necessary, as being greatly supporting.

The author and penman of it was St. James, commonly called James the Less, and our Lord's brother the son of Alphaeus, styled also James the Just, and bishop of Jerusalem; consequently its authority cannot reasonably be questioned.

The design of the epistle is, first, to establish the christian Jews in a well ordered religious course of life, and to fortify them against suffering from the unbelieving Jews. Secondly, to correct a pernicious error about the sufficiency of a naked faith and empty profession, without practice, &c. which spring from a misunderstanding and abuse of the way of justification by faith: the design of St. Paul, in Ep. Rom. (of which we have the same in Acts iv. 12.) was to manifest that Christ was the only one, and christianity the only way, to set us criminals clear with God, so as to bring us to himself in glory. And St. James shows us, that it is not the bare belief and profession of the christian faith, but the power and practical improvement of it, that must make or render it saving to us.

CHAPTER I.

JAMES, a servant of God, and of the Lord Jesus Christ, to the twelve tribes which are scattered abroad, greeting.

Observe here, 1. The author and penman of this epistle described by his name. James; by his office, a servant of God, and of the Lord Jesus Christ; that is, by a special office, as a dispenser of his gospel. It is the highest honor that can be conferred upon the greatest person, to be the servant of Christ, especially in the quality of an ambassador. Note also, How St. James styles himself the servant of God, and of the Lord Jesus Christ. Some read the words conjoined, others, disjoined; conjoined thus, James, a servant of Jesus Christ, who is God and Lord; and thus the fathers urged this text against the Arians, to prove the Divinity and Godhead of Christ; others read the words disjoined, thus, James, a servant of God, and of our Lord Jesus Christ. This latter reading seems most natural, and less strained, and affords an argument for proving the Divinity of Christ no less weighty than the former; for as the Father is Lord as well as Jesus Christ, so Jesus Christ is God as well as the Father, and God will have all to honor the Son as they honor the Father. Observe, 2. The persons to whom this epistle is directed, to the twelve tribes scattered abroad; that is, to such and so many of the Jews as were converted to christianity, and were now dispersed and scattered into several countries and nations; to them is St. James excited and moved by God to write and direct this excellent epistle. Here note, by the way, these three things: 1. That God's own people in general may be dispersed and driven abroad from their own countries and habitations; it is no new thing to suffer in this kind, Heb. xi. 38. those, of whom the world was not worthy, wandered in deserts and mountains, woods and caves. Note, 2. The severity of God towards this people of the Jews, in particular; they were a sinning people, a sinful people, weary of God, sick of his worship, severe to his Son; and God grows sick and weary of them, and according to his threatening, Deut. xxviii. 64, scattered them from one end of the earth unto the other, among all people. Lord how dangerous and unsafe it is to rest upon, and glory in our outward privileges! None had more, none had greater privileges than the Jews, yet for their sins the land spewed them out and God dispersed them, yea, made them an hissing and a by-word among the nations. Note, 3. The tenderness of God's love and care towards the faithful amongst them in, and under this dispersion, he stirreth up St. James to write to the scattered tribes, and to apply seasonable comforts to them, and to all christians with them in a suffering state, which accordingly he does throughout this whole epistle.

2 My brethren; count it all joy when ye fall into divers temptations;

3 Knowing this, that the trying of your faith worketh patience.

4 But let patience have her perfect work, that ye may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing.—

Our apostle's design in this epistle being to support the believing Jews under their great sufferings for the cause of christianity, he first acquaints them with the nature of those sufferings which they might expect to fall under for the same; he calls them temptations, that is trials, they are correcting trials for sin, and they are experimental trials of the truth of grace, and of the strength of grace; the affliction of God's children are trials castigatory, probatory trials. Note, 2. The advice given in these trials to count it joy, all joy, when they fall into temptations, yea, into divers temptations; not that afflictions are in themselves joyous, the temptation or trial is not matter of joy, but of sorrow and heaviness considered in itself, but because of their good effects and sweet fruits, in proving our faith and increasing our patience, but mark; he says, when ye fall into temptations, not when ye run yourselves into them, or draw them upon yourselves; we lose the comfort of our sufferings, when, either by guilt or by imprudence, we bring them upon ourselves. Note here, That trials bow evil and afflictive so ever in themselves, and in their own nature, yet administer occasion of great joy to sincere christians, Rom. v. 3. We glory in tribulations; it denotes the highest joy, even to exultation and ravishment; there is joy resulting from the consideration of the glory that redounds to God, of the honor done to us, of the benefit done to the church, and to ourselves, by confirming the faith of others; evidencing the sincerity of grace to ourselves, preparing us for, and giving us a swifter passage to heaven. Note, 3. Our apostle's argument to press them to joy and rejoice under their afflictions; and this is taken, 1. From the nature of them, they are trials of faith. 2. From the effect and fruit of them, they beget or work patience. Learn hence, 1. That the afflictions which the people of God meet with, are trials of all their graces, but especially of their faith. This is a radical grace: we live by faith, we work by love; now if all grace, satan has a particular spite against the christian's faith, and God has a particular care for the preservation and perfection of it, knowing the trial of your faith worketh patience: that is, it administers matter and occasion for patience, and by the blessing of God upon it, it produces and increases patience; often trial puts us upon frequent exercises, and the frequent exercise of grace strengthens the habits of grace: consequently the more our trials are, the stronger will our patience be: knowing that the trial of your faith worketh patience: it follows, ver. 4.

—But let patience have her perfect work, that ye may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing.

That is, "Let your patience and perseverance under sufferings resolutely continue and hold out to the end;" this the apostle urges, because some persons bore out the first brunt and onset of persecution, but being exercised with diversity and length of trials, they fainted. Now, as if the apostle had said, "if we will be complete christians, our patience must run parallel with our sufferings: thus shall we be perfect, not with an absolute perfection, but with a perfection of duration and perseverance." Learn, That afflictions sanctified by God do tend exceedingly, not only to the increasing, but perfecting of a christian's patience.

Quest. But when has patience its perfect work, making the christian perfect and entire? Ans. When there is a strong faith, as the foundation of that patience; when there is a christian fortitude and courage, enabling us to sustain trials; when there is an exact knowledge of our duty to bear afflictions with a meek and quiet spirit, with a forbearing and forgiving spirit, yea, with a praying spirit, which includes the height of charity, under the highest provocations; in a word, when there is found with us an entire trust and dependency upon God's power and promise, and a cheerful submission, and quiet resignation of our wills to his most holy, wise, and righteous will, in and under the sharpest trials and heaviest afflictions that can befall us; then has patience had its perfect work, and the suffering christian, in a gospel qualified sense, may be said to be perfect and entire, wanting nothing.

5 If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him.

6 But let him ask in faith, nothing wavering: for he that wavereth is like a wave of the sea driven with the wind, and tossed.

7 For let not that man think that he shall receive any thing of the Lord.

Observe here, 1. A truth necessarily supposed, that every man, more or less, lacketh wisdom to enable him patiently to bear, and prudently to manage, the afflictions of this life; and that there is need of great wisdom to enable us to glorify God in a suffering hour. Observe, 2. The person directed to, in order to the obtaining of divine wisdom, for the patient bearing of afflictions; let him ask it of God. He that wants wisdom let him go to the fountain of wisdom, God gives not his blessings ordinarily without asking, and the best of blessings may be had for asking; of the two it is much better to ask and not receive, than to receive and not ask. Observe, 3. A great encouragement for all that lack wisdom to go unto God for it, drawn first from the bountiful manner of his giving, he giveth liberally, without upbraiding. Secondly, from the certainty of the gift, It shall be given him. God's liberality in giving what we ask, and many times more than we ask, yea, more than we can either ask or think, is a mighty encouragement to faith and fervency in prayer, to perseverance and importunity in praying; especially if we consider what is added, that as God giveth liberally, so he upbraideth not; that is, he neither upbraids them with their frequency and importunity in asking, nor yet with their great unworthiness of receiving; but instead thereof, subjoins an assurance of granting. It shall be given him. It is a mighty encouragement to pray, when we consider there is not only bounty in God, but bounty engaged by promise. Observe, 4. The condition required on our part must be observed and fulfilled, as well as the promise made on God's part: but let him ask in faith, nothing wavering. Quest. What is it to ask in faith? Ans. The person praying must be in a state of believing; the petitioner must be a believer; the thing asked for must be an object of faith, by being the subject-matter of some promise; a fervent prayer for that which God never promised is a foul sin. Again, the manner of asking must be faithful, with a pure intention of God's glory, with cheerful submission to God's will, with fiducial recumbency upon God's promise, with great fervency and warmth of spirit; he that will prevail with Jacob, must wrestle with Jacob for a blessing. Observe, 5. The evil and danger of wavering and doubting in the matter of prayer; and the evil of it is this, that it is perplexing and tormenting to the mind: he that wavereth is driven and tossed like a wave of the sea: an elegant similitude to set out the nature of doubting, when upon our knees in duty. And the danger of it is expressed, let not that man think that he shall receive any thing of the Lord.—Note, That doubtful and unbelieving persons when they pray, though they receive something, yet they can expect nothing. Let him not think to receive any thing; if he does, it is more than could be expected, because more than God has promised. Doubting in prayer is a provocation to God; and when a man's prayer is a provocation, how can he expect his prayer should be either heard or answered? Let not that man think that he shall receive any thing of the Lord.

8 A double-minded man is unstable in all his ways.

By a double-minded man, we are to understand one that is divided in his own thoughts between two different ways and opinions, as if he had two minds, or two souls; many such there were in the apostle's days, judaizing brethren, that sometimes would sort with the Jews, sometimes with the christians: many such there are in our days, divided betwixt God and the world, between holiness and sin: like a needle between two load-stones, always wavering to and again, pointing frequently to both, but never fixed to either: such a man, says our apostle, is unstable in all his ways; that is, in all his actions. Learn hence, That whilst men's minds are divided between God and their lusts, they must necessarily lead very anxious, uncertain, and unstable lives, always fluctuating in great anxiety and uncertainty; for he is always at odds with himself, and in perpetual variance with his own reason: where men's minds are double, their ways must necessarily be unstable.

9 Let the brother of low degree rejoice in that he is exalted;

10 But the rich; in that he is made low; because as the flower of the grass he shall pass away.

11 For the sun is no sooner risen with a burning heat, but it withereth the grass, and the flower thereof falleth, and the grace of the fashion of it perisheth: so also shall the rich man fade away in his ways:

Our apostle having finished his necessary digression concerning prayer, in the foregoing verses, returns now to his former argument, concerning bearing affliction with joy; and urges a strong reason here to enforce the duty, Let the brother of low degree: that is, such a christian as is brought low by persecution and sufferings for Christ, let him rejoice that God has exalted him, and made him rich in faith, and an heir of the kingdom: nothing is more certain, than that the greatest abuses and sufferings for Christ, are an honor and exaltation to us; he adds, But let the rich rejoice in that he is made low, that is, when he loses any thing for Christ; as if the apostle had said, "Let the poor christian rejoice, in that he is spiritually exalted, and the rich man rejoice, in that he is spiritually humbled; a rich man's humility is his glory." Observe next, The apostle rendereth a reason why the rich man should have a lowly mind, in the midst of his flourishing condition, because all the pomp and grandeur of riches fades like a flower; and he himself also is beautiful, but fading; fair, but vanishing: and he pursues this similitude of a flower in the eleventh verse, showing, that as the flower fadeth presently before the heat of the scorching sun, so the rich man fades, and all his riches are both transitory and passing. Learn hence, That it ought to comfort a christian that suffers loss for Christ by persecution, to consider, that the things which he loseth for the sake of Christ, are things of a fading nature, which could not have been kept long by him, had they not been rent from him; but that which he secures by his perseverance, is an everlasting treasure, reserved in the heavens for him; by parting with that which he could not keep, he makes sure of that which he can never lose; well therefore may the rich man rejoice in his humiliation; Let the brother of low degree rejoice in that he is exalted, and the rich that he is made low.

12 Blessed is the man that endureth temptation: for when he is tried, he shall receive the crown of life, which the Lord hath promised to them that love him.

In these words the apostle lays down a forcible argument, to persuade christians to bear sufferings and persecutions with invincible patience, drawn from the blessedness which attends such a condition: blessed is the man that endureth temptations, &c. Note here, 1. The character of the person whom God pronounceth blessed; namely, not the man that escapeth temptations and trials in this life, but he that bears them with courage and constancy, with patience and submission. Note, 2. A description of that ample reward which shall be conferred upon such sufferers; they shall receive the crown of life: where observe, the felicity of a future state is set forth by a crown to denote the transcendency and perfection of it; and by a crown of life, to denote the perpetuity and duration of it. Note, 3. Here is an intimation of the time when this transcendent reward shall be dispensed, namely, when the suffering christian has finished his course with patience and perseverance: when he is tried, he shall receive the crown of life. Learn from the whole, That a patient and constant enduring of trials and afflictions in this life, shall certainly be rewarded with a crown of blessedness and immortality in the life to come: blessed is the man that endureth temptations, &c.

13 Let no man say, when he is tempted, I am tempted of God: For God cannot be tempted with evil, neither tempteth he any man.

14 But every man is tempted, when he is drawn away of his own lust, and enticed.

15 Then when lust hath conceived, it bringeth forth sin; and sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death.

There are three sorts of temptations spoken of in scripture, temptations of seduction, temptations of suggestion, and temptations of affliction: the last were spoken of, in the former verses. Blessed is the man that endureth temptation: the second sort are spoken of in this verse, let no man say, when he is tempted to sin, I am tempted of God, for God cannot be tempted by it, neither tempteth he any man to it. Note here, 1. That God is not the author of sin, nor tempts any man to the commission of it; if he did, our evil actions could not be properly sins, nor justly punishable by God: for no man can be justly punishable for that which he cannot help, and no man can help that which he is compelled unto: and it is very unreasonable to suppose that the same person should both tempt and punish. To tempt unto sin, is contrary to the holiness of God: and after that to chastise for complying with the temptation, is contrary to the justice of God; God then is not the author of the sins of men. Note, 2. That men are very apt to charge their sins upon God, and to lay their faults at his door. Let no man say so; intimating, that men are very ready and apt to say so; and that it is not only a fault, but an impious assertion, to say that God tempts any man to sin. Let no man say; he speaks of it as a thing to be rejected with the utmost detestation, a thing so impious and dishonorable to God. Note, 3. The reason and argument, which the apostle brings against this impious suggestion, God cannot be tempted of evil, neither tempteth he any man; that is, he cannot be drawn to any thing that is evil himself, and therefore it cannot be imagined he should have any inclination or design to seduce others: he can have no temptation to sin from his own inclination, for he has a perfect antipathy against it; and there is no allurements in sin to stir up any inclination in God toward it, for it is nothing but crookedness and deformity: and how can he be supposed to entice men to that which his own nature does abominate and abhor? For none tempt others to be bad but those who are first so themselves. Inference, 1. No doctrine then ought to be asserted, or can be maintained, which is contrary to the natural notions which men have of God, as touching his holiness, justice, and goodness. Inference, 2. If God tempts not us, let us never tempt him: this we do, when we tempt his providence, expecting its protection in an unwarrantable way: as when we are negligent in our calling, and yet depend upon God's providence to provide for our families, which is to approve our sloth, and to countenance our sloth. Note, 4. The true account which our apostle gives of the prevalence and efficacy of temptation upon men, it is their own innate corruption, and vicious inclination, which doth reduce them to it. Every man is tempted, when he is drawn aside of his own lust and enticed. Mark, He does not ascribe it to the devil; he may and does present the object, and by his instruments may and does solicit for our compliance: his temptations have a moving and exciting power, but can have no prevailing efficacy but from our own voluntary consent; it is our own lusts closing with his temptations which produce the sin; for God's commanding us to resist the devil, supposes that his temptations are not irresistible. Learn hence, That man's worst enemy, and most dangerous tempter, is the corruption of his own heart and nature; because it is the inmost enemy, and because it is an enemy that is least suspected: a man's lust is himself, and nature teaches us not to mistrust ourselves; what reason have we then perpetually to pray, that God would not lead us into temptation, but keep us by his good providence out of the way of temptation, because we carry about us such lusts and inclinations as will betray us to sin when powerful temptations are presented to us: there is no such way then to disarm temptations, and take away the power of them, as by mortifying our lusts and subduing our vicious inclinations. Note, 5. The account which our apostle gives of the pedigree, birth, and growth of sin: when lust, that is, our corrupt inclinations, and vicious desires, have conceived, that is, gained the consent and approbation of the will, it bringeth forth and engageth the soul in sin: and sin when it is finished in the deliberate outward action, and especially when, by customary practice, it becomes habitual, bringeth forth death, the wages of sin; the first approaches of sin are usually modest, but afterwards it makes bolder attempts: our wisdom is to resist the first beginnings of sin, for then we have most strength, and sin least; to suppress sin in the thoughts, to mortify lust in the heart, before it break forth in the life, and at last is-ue and terminate in death: for when lust hath conceived, it bringeth forth sin; and sin when it is finished bringeth forth death.

16 Do not err, my beloved brethren.

17 Every good gift, and every perfect gift, is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning.

As if he had said, be not deceived about the causes of good and evil; sin and death are certainly from ourselves. Let us therefore never ascribe either our sins or our temptations unto God: but every good and perfecting gift is of God's free donation and grace, even from above, from the Father of lights, (both of the light of nature, and the light of grace,) with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning from good to evil; he is unchangeable in his nature and being, and in his attributes and properties." Learn hence, 1. That we are very prone to err in our notions and apprehensions, as touching the authors of good and evil; too ready to conclude either God or satan to be the author of the sin we commit, and ourselves the authors of the good we do: do not err, my beloved brethren, in this matter. Learn, 2. That as sin, which is nothing but evil and imperfection, is not from God, but wholly from ourselves, and our own corrupt hearts; so whatever is good, perfect, or praiseworthy, is wholly from God, and not from ourselves; we are neither by nature inclined to that which is good, nor are we able of ourselves to perform it; both inclination and ability are from God, who is the fountain of goodness and perfection, and can never cease to be so, for with him is no variableness nor shadow of turning. Learn, 3. That God being the infinite Father of lights, he hath no eclipses or decreases, no shadows or mixtures of darkness, but always shines with a settled and constant brightness, always is, and was, and to all eternity will be, immutably the same, and never undergo the least change, either of his essence and being, or of his properties and perfections: "with whom is no variableness, nor shadow of turning." As nothing argues greater imperfection than inconstancy and change, so the greater and more glorious the divine perfections are, the greater blemish and imperfection would mutability be; were God changeable, it would darken all his other perfections, and raise the foundation of all religion; for who could either fear or love, trust or serve that being who is fickle and inconstant! what security could there be in his promises? and who would regard the terror of his threatenings, were he not invariable, and without shadow of changing.

18 Of his own will begat he us with the word of truth, that we should be a kind of first-fruits of his creatures.

These words are very expressive of four things, namely, of the efficient cause, the impulsive cause, the instrumental and the final cause of our regeneration. Observe, 1. The author and efficient cause of regeneration; he that is the Father of lights, mentioned in the foregoing verse, begat us. Note, That God, and God alone, is the prime efficient cause of regeneration; it is objectively in the creature, it is efficiently from God: Christ appropriates this work to God, Matt. xi. 23. The scriptures appropriate it to God, Psalm xxxiv. 9. called his saints, and God himself appropriates it to himself, Ezek. xxxvi. 27. "I will put my spirit within them, &c." Observe, 2. The impelling, impulsive, and moving cause of regeneration, his own will: of his own will begat he us; by his mere motion, induced by no cause, but the goodness of his own breast, of his own will, and not naturally, as he begat his Son from eternity; of his own will, and not necessarily, by a necessity of nature, as the sun enlightens and calwens, but by an arbitrariness of grace; of his own will, and not by any obligation from the creature; by the will of God, and not for the merit and desert of man. Observe, 3. The instrumental cause of our regeneration, the word of truth, that is, the gospel, which is the great instrument in God's hand for producing the new birth in the souls of his people. Here note, the gospel is called truth by way of excellency, the word of truth, that is, the true word; and also by way of eminency, as containing an higher and more excellent truth than any other divine truth; the gospel declares the truth of all the Old Testament types. Observe, 4. The final cause of our new birth, that we should be a kind of first fruits of his creatures, that is, of his new creatures, the chief among his creatures: the first fruits were the best of every kind to be offered to God, and were given as God's peculiar right and portion; thus the new creature is God's peculiar portion taken out of mankind, which being consecrated to God by a new begetting, they ought to serve him with a new spirit, new thankfulness, as lying under the highest obligations unto new obedience.

19 Wherefore, my beloved brethren let every man be swift to hear, slow to speak, slow to wrath;

20 For the wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God.

As if the apostle had said, "Seeing God has put such an honor upon his word, the word of his truth, as by it to beget us to himself; therefore be swift to hear it, prize it highly, and wait upon the means of grace readily and diligently; but be slow to speak, that is to utter your judgments of it, much more slow in undertaking to be a teacher and dispenser of it; also slow to wrath, or to contentions about the words and points of divinity: wrath and passion hinders all profit by the word, either preached, read, or discoursed about; and a forcible reason is rendered why all wrath should be suppressed, because the wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God; that is, man's sinful anger will never put him upon doing those things that are just and righteous in God's account: or there is a figure in the words; more is intended than expressed; the meaning is, that the wrath of man is so far from working the righteousness of God, that it worketh all manner of evil." Learn hence, that man's anger is usually evil, and very unrighteous; anger justly moderated, is a duty, but such a duty as is very difficultly managed without sin; rash, causeless, and immoderate anger, gratifies the devil, dishonors God, discredits religion, wounds our own peace.

21 Wherefore, lay apart all filthiness, and superfluity of naughtiness, and receive with meekness the ingrafted word, which is able to save your souls:

22 But be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own-selves.

These words are a direction given for the right hearing of, and due profiting by the word of God. In order to the former, our apostle shows, 1. What we must lay aside, namely, all filthiness and superfluity of naughtiness; that is, all sensual lusts, and angry passions. And, 2. Receive with meekness, calmness, and submission, the ingrafted word; that is, the word planted and sown in our hearts by the hands of Christ's ministers; which is able to save our souls, that is, from hell and damnation; yet does not the word save of itself, but God by the word; the power of the word is not intrinsical, but extrinsical, derived from God, whose the word is. Learn hence, 1. That as all sin in general, so anger, wrath, and malice in particular, ought to be laid aside by us at all times, but then especially when we go forth to hear the word of God, Learn, 2. That the word must be received with all meekness of spirit, if we would hear it with profit and advantage; there must not be found with us either a wrathful fierceness, or a proud stubbornness, or a contentious wrangling, but humility and brokenness of spirit, docibility and tractableness of spirit, under the word, otherwise all our hearing will be an addition to our sin, and an aggravation of our condemnation. Learn, 3. That the word must not only be apprehended and received by us, but implanted and en-grafted in us, or it will never be able to save our souls; "receive the ingrafted word, which is able to save your souls."

Quest. But how may we know when the word is an ingrafted word? Ans. When it is a fruitful word, Col. i. 6. "the word of the truth of the gospel is come unto you, and bringeth forth fruit." Learn, 4. Though hearing of the word be a duty, yet it must not be rested in; be hearers, but not only hearers: alas! bare hearing of the word is the least part of christianity, and the lightest part of christianity; though we be intelligent hearers, though we be very diligent and attentive hearers, though we be affectionate hearers, yea, though we make great proficiency in knowledge by our hearing, yet all this will deceive us at last, if nothing farther be added to it. Therefore, learn, 5. That the doers of the word are the best hearers, yea, the only hearers in God's account: not to hear at all is atheistical, and produces no religion; to hear, and not to know and be affected with what we hear, is stoical, and breeds a blind religion; to know, and not to do, is Pharisaical, and breeds a lame religion; the practical hearer is the only approved hearer in the account of God: "a good understanding have they that do thy commandments," Psal. cxl. Lastly, without this, all our hearing is but self-deceiving; and this is the most shameful deceit, the most dangerous deceit, and, if timely care and endeavours prevent not, an irreparable and eternal deceit: "be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own-selves."

23 For if any be a hearer of the word, and not a doer, he is like unto a man beholding his natural face in a glass:

24 For he beholdeth himself, and goeth his way, and straightway forgetteth what manner of man he was.

In these words our apostle declares the vanity and unprofitableness of a bare hearing of the word, by a similitude taken from a man looking in a glass; though he sees in a glass his own natural face, which he was born with, whilst he is looking in it, yet no sooner is he gone from it, but he forgets the figure and fashion of his own countenance, having had only a slight and transient view of it; so, in like manner, the preaching of the word has not an awakening influence, and leaves not an abiding impression upon most hearers, who are willing to be deceived, and to deceive themselves, by a bare and naked hearing of divine truths. Learn hence, That the word of God is a glass, or as a glass, in which the soul's complexion may be seen: in this glass we may see both God and ourselves. Christ's beauty, and our own deformity, both our disease and our remedy. Learn, 2. That the glass of the word must not be carelessly and cursorily looked into, with a slight and superficial glance, but if we desire to have all the spots and blemishes of our souls thoroughly discovered, we must keep it before our eyes continually, and daily dress our souls by it.

23 But whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the word, this man shall be blessed in his deed.

Observe here, 1. The title given to the word of God, particularly the gospel, it is called liberty, a law of liberty, and a perfect law of liberty; partly because it calleth us to a state of liberty and freedom, and teacheth us the way to true liberty, and offers us the assistance of a spirit of liberty; partly because it spareth none, but dealeth with all persons freely, without respect of persons; the gospel or word of God, then is a law of liberty. Observe, 2. The duty here required with reference to this law of liberty, namely, to look into it, and continue therein, to look into it with an accurate and narrow inspection, as the disciples did into Christ's sepulchre, and as the angels look into the mysteries of salvation, 1 Pet. 4. 12. To look into the law of liberty implies, deepness of meditation, and liveliness of impression; and continuing therein, imports perseverance in the knowledge, faith and obedience of the gospel, in order to our fruitfulness in good works: "if ye abide in me, and my word abide in you, (says Christ) ye shall bring forth much fruit." John xv. 5. 7. Observe, 3. The reward promised and insured to such as look into the gospel, that law of liberty, that continue in it, and are doers of the work required by it, they are blessed in their deed: there is a blessedness annexed to the doing of that work which the word of God requires: yet mark the distinctness of scripture phrase; the apostle doth not say, that the doers of the word shall be blessed for their deed; but in the deed it is an evidence of our blessedness, not the ground of it, the way, though not the cause of blessedness.

26 If any man among you seem to be religious, and bridleth not his tongue, but deceiveth his own heart, this man's religion is vain.

Observe here, 1. That there have been, are, and ever will be, many professors of religion, who seem, and only seem to be religious. Observe, 2. That an unbridled and ungoverned tongue, is a certain sign and evidence of a man's being only seemingly religious; it seems there were many unbridled tongues in the apostle's days, amongst the professors of christianity, which put the apostle upon spending the whole third chapter about the government of the tongue: the grace and word of God are bridles, which we are to put on, to restrain us from sinful and excessive speaking. Observe, 3. That such a man as pretends to religion, and seems to be religious, without bridling and governing of his tongue, all his religion is but vain and self-deceiving: Vain, that is empty; in show and appearance only, nothing in truth and in reality. Or vain, that is, ineffectual; it doth not perform its office, it does not answer its end, their religion will do them no good, stand them in no stead; that faith, that hope, those prayers, which will consist with the reigning evils of the tongue, are vain and self-deceiving; that religion which cannot drive the devil out of the tongue will never prove Christ to be in the heart; that religion which cannot tame the tongue, will never save the soul; though some evils of the tongue may consist with grace, yet an unbridled tongue cannot consist with it; deceit in our lips is as bad as falsehood in our dealings, and violence in our tongue as bad as violence in our hands; and if thy religion be vain, all is vain to thee; thy hopes are vain, thy comforts are vain. The sum is, that an unbridled tongue, in a religious professor, is enough to prove that his religion is vain.

27 Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world.

Observe here, 1. That the apostle doth not set down the whole of religion, but an eminent part and instance of it only: pure religion is this, that is, this is the practice of religion, without which all religion is vain; this is an eminent fruit, which springs from the root of pure religion; if pure religion live in the heart the fruits of pious charity will appear in the life. Observe, 2. The acts of charity, when they flow from a religious principle, do commence acts of ἑσπράσια, worship; To visit the widow and fatherless, considered in itself, may be only an act of indifferency and civil courtesey; but when it is performed as an act of duty, in obedience to the command of God, or as an act of mercy and pity, for the supply of their wants by our purse, or for the comforting of their hearts by our counsel; being thus done out of conscience, it is as acceptable to God as an act of worship, to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction. Observe, 3. How the apostle joins charity and purity together: a pretence to the one without the other discovers the insincerity of both; the relieving of the afflicted, and a life unspotted must go together, or God accepts of neither: "pure religion is this, to visit the widow, and keep himself unspotted from the world;" that is, from the defilement and pollutions of the world by the lusts thereof; plainly intimating, 1. That the world is a filthy place, a dirty defiling thing, What company almost can you come into, generally speaking, that is not sooty and leprous? How hard is it to converse with them, and not be polluted and infected by them? even as hard as it is to touch pitch and not be defiled. 2. That it is our duty, and ought to be our daily endeavour, to keep ourselves as unstained by, and unspotted from, the world as we can: and that we may escape the pollutions which are in the world through lust, let us be instant in prayer, diligent in our watch, that if we cannot make the world better, that shall never make us worse. 3. That we should more and more grow weary of the world, and long for heaven, where there is nothing that defileth, where we shall have pure hearts, pure company, every thing agreeable, and this not for a few years, but for everlasting ages. Lord! when shall we ascend on high to live with thee in purity?

CHAPTER II.

Our apostle's design in this chapter is two-fold, namely, first, to admonish against that common sin of respecting persons in religious matters because of worldly advantages. Secondly, to caution and warn against that fatal opinion of the sufficiency of a bare and naked faith, in order to salvation, without the presence and testimony of works to recommend it to God's acceptance. As touching the former of these, our apostle thus speaks:

MY brethren, have not the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Lord of glory, with respect of persons.

2 For if there come unto your assembly a man with a gold ring, in goodly apparel, and there come in also a poor man in vile raiment;

3 And ye have respect to him that weareth the gay clothing, and say unto him, Sit thou here in a good place: and say to the poor, Stand thou there, or sit here under my footstool:

4 Are ye not then partial in yourselves, and are become judges of evil thoughts?

For the better understanding of these words, let us consider, 1. What the apostle doth not; 2. What he doth, condemn. 3. What is here not condemned, namely, 1. The paying of civil respect to all persons, according to their character, and a different respect to persons, according to their different qualities: honor is to be given to whom honor is due, and the rich are entitled to respect; and that they receive it from us is no ways displeasing unto God. 2. Much less does our apostle here speak against honoring magistrates, or paying respect to our ecclesiastical or civil rulers and governors in their courts of judicature: civility, yea, christianity calls for outward respect and reverence to them that are above us, especially if in authority over us. But positively, that which is here condemned, 1. In general, is partiality in our respect to persons in religious matters, for in the things of God all are equal; the rich and the poor stand upon the same terms of advantage; external relations and differences bear no weight at the gospel beam; therefore, to disesteem any of the poor members of Christ, as such, is to disesteem and undervalue Christ himself. Holiness is not less lovely to him, because clothed with rags, nor unholiness less loathsome because it goes in a gay coat with a gold ring. Wickedness is abominable to Christ, and ought to be so to us, though it sits upon a throne, and holiness shines in his eye, (and may it be in ours also,) though it lies upon a dunghill: 2. That which seems here to be condemned in particular, is the accepting of persons in judgment, upon the account of outward advantages, proceeding not according to the merits of the cause, in their ecclesiastical and civil judicatures, but according to external respects. Our apostle would by no means have them pay a deference to a rich man in judgment because of his riches, or gay attire: nor to pass over the poor saints in their assemblies, for want of the gold ring, and goodly apparel, seeing their faith clothed them with a greater and a more valuable glory, which renders them more honorable than any riches or gay clothing could do. And mark the apostle's vehement expostulation, which carries with it the force of a severe reprehension; "Are ye not partial, and become judges of evil thoughts?" As if he had said, Are ye not condemned in yourselves, and convinced in your own consciences that you do evil? Are ye not become judges of evil thoughts, that is, do you not pass judgment from your evil thoughts in thinking the rich worthy of respect in judgment for his gorgeous attire, and outward greatness, and the poor fit to be despised for his outward meanness? Is not this an evil, a very evil thought in you, to think him the best man that weareth the best clothes, and him a vile person that is in vile apparel? From the whole learn, 1. That men are very prone to honor worldly greatness in general, yea, to give too great a preference to it, even in matters of judgment. Man is very often swayed in judgment by the power, pomp, and splendour, of men; we are apt to think that they that are worth most are most worthy: thus men, good men, may misjudge of men; but thus to accept the persons of men, either in spiritual or civil judgment, is a provoking sin.

5 Harken, my beloved brethren, hath not God chosen the poor of this world rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which he hath promised to them that love him?

To prevent the growing evil condemned in the foregoing verse, of undervaluing those that are rich in grace, because poor in estate, the apostle in this verse declares how God himself gives countenance to the contrary practice; he confers a threefold dignity upon them; they are chosen by him, they are rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom of heaven now: as if the apostle said, "Are they fit to be despised by you, that are thus highly dignified and enriched by God?" And to stir up their attention to what he speaks, he ushers in his interrogation with this, "Harken my beloved brethren, hath not God chosen the poor of this world? &c." Learn hence, That such as are poor in this world, and disesteemed of men, may yet be chosen of God, rich in grace and heirs of glory. This he does to demonstrate the sovereignty and freeness of his grace, and the glory of his wisdom. The first choice that Christ made of persons to be his followers were poor men; and ever since, generally speaking, they are the poor that receive the gospel: God has more rent, and better paid him, from a smoky cottage than from many stately palaces, where men wallow in wealth, and forget God.

6 But ye have despised the poor. Do not rich men oppress you, and draw you before the judgment-seats?

7 Do not they blaspheme that worthy name by which ye are called?

Our apostle here charges them downright with that sin which he had been before condemning, namely, an undue respect of persons, despising the poor whom God himself had chosen and honored: But ye have despised the poor. Despising the poor, is a sin not only against the world, but against the works of God; it is against his word and express command, backed with a severe threatening, "enter not into the vineyard of the poor; that is, oppress them not, for his avenger is mighty and God will plead his cause for him." It is also against his works and his end in creation: for God never made any creature for contempt; he then that despiseth the poor reproacheth his Maker, that is, condemneth the wisdom of God: which is as much seen in making poor, as in making rich; in making valleys, as in making hills. Observe farther, The apostle shows them what futile reason and cause they had, as to vilify the poor, so to idolize and adore the rich; do not rich men oppress you by tyranny, and draw you before the judgment-seat, like the vilest malefactors? Do not they blaspheme the name of Christ? that worthy name from which you are called christians, and sit in the very face of your holy religion? Learn, 1. That wicked rich men are oftentimes oppressors, sometimes persecutors; they have frequently both will and power, both disposition and occasion to do both. 2. That oppressors and persecutors are generally blasphemers; they blaspheme the name of Christ, that worthy name which whosoever nameth ought to depart from all iniquity, 2 Tim. ii. 19.

8 If ye fulfil the royal law, according to the scripture, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself, ye do well;

9 But if ye have respect to persons, ye commit sin, and are convinced of the law as transgressors.

Observe here, 1. The honorable title put upon the law of God, a royal law: royal in its author, Jesus Christ, Heb. xii. 25. Christ's voice shook mount Sinai: royal in its precepts, the duty it requires of us is noble and excellent, nothing but what is our interest as men, our honor and happiness as christians, and what tends to the perfecting and ennobling of our natures; royal in its rewards: true our work can deserve no wages; however, our royal Master will not let us work for nothing. Satan, as a master, is bad, his work much worse; but his wages worst of all. Christ is a royal master, obedience to his law is royal service; and how royal is his reward, in making us kings and priests unto God on earth, and crowned kings and princes with God in heaven! Observe, 2. Our duty declared, with relation to this royal law, namely, to fulfil it; "If ye fulfil the royal law, according to the scriptures," that is, if ye pay a sincere respect to the whole duty of the law, if ye come up in your obedience to that universal love of God and your neighbour which the law requires, ye do well; where, by neighbour, we are to understand every one to whom we may be helpful; the command to love him as ourselves shows the manner, not the measure, of our love; the kind, not the degree; the purity and likeness, not the equality of proportion; we must mind the good of our neighbour as really and truly, though not so vehemently and earnestly, as our own. Observe, 3. How the apostle convicts them for walking contrary to this law, in honoring the rich and despising the poor, and in judging according to men's outward quality and condition: If ye have respect to persons in this manner, ye commit sin, and are convinced of the law as transgressors. How does the law convince? Not only by reproving, but by proving; it shows us a rule and faith, "There ye have departed from it; here is a line, and there ye have transgressed it; either gone over it, or gone beside it." Learn hence, That the rule of the word discovers wickedness fully to the conscience of the sinner, who winks hard, and is loth to lie under the conviction of it.

10 For whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all.

Here the apostle doth suppose a case which ought to make every person very conscientious in his obedience to the whole law of God, namely, that in case a man were careful to observe all the laws of God, except one, his living in the breach of that one shall be so far from being connived at upon the account of his obedience to all the rest, that he shall be liable to the punishment which is due to the transgression of the whole law; to the same punishment for kind, I say, not for degree; because the more and greater sins men are guilty of, the greater and severer shall be their punishment, which consists in being for ever banished from the presence of God, and in being imprisoned with devils and damned spirits, which is called eternal death. Learn hence, That whosoever allows himself in any one sin, be it either of omission or commission, willingly, constantly, and with allowance from conscience, and doth not convert and turn, from it unto God, he is certainly in a state of damnation because he affronts the sovereignty, and contemns the authority of that God that made and enacted the whole law, and also stands in a prepared readiness and disposition to break any other, yes, all other laws, in the grossest manner, whensoever any forcible temptation may assault him. Add to this, that living in the breach of any one law, will make a person unfit for the enjoyment of God as well as living in the breach of all.

11 For he that said, Do not commit adultery: said also, Do not kill. Now if thou commit no adultery, yet if thou kill, thou art become a transgressor of the law.

12 So speak ye, and so do, as they that shall be judged by the law of liberty,

As if the apostle had said, "He that threatened adultery with death, threatened also murder with death; it is the same lawgiver that forbids both, and his authority is as truly concerned in transgressing one as both these laws. Disobedience to God in any one law, is a virtual denying of his authority to prescribe any law to us, and lays a foundation for universal disobedience; for if Almighty God's sovereignty be disowned in any one instance, it may as well be so in all others; the same reason that leads to the observation or violation of one law, doth oblige us to keep or break all the rest, and that is the authority of the lawgiver. The whole law hath an equal obligation upon the conscience." From hence the apostle draws this inference, that persons should so speak and so do, so order their speeches and their actions, as they that shall be judged by the law of liberty. Note here, 1. That all we say and do, all our actions and expressions, do fall under the judgment and sentence of the law of God. 2. That the law of God, in the hand of Christ, is the law of liberty; we are freed from it as a covenant, freed from its condemnatory curse, freed from its rigorous exactions, bondage and terrors. The law to a believer is a law of liberty; and to others a law of bondage and death. 3. That it will be a great help to us in our christian course, to think often that all our words and actions must come into judgment; it is agreeable to the liberty of the gospel to believe and remember, that all we say and do must be judged by the law of liberty.

13 For he shall have judgment without mercy that hath showed no mercy; and mercy rejoiceth against judgement.

That is, He that whilst he lived showed no mercy, but had opportunity and ability to show it, shall have judgment without mercy; that is, shall be very severely handled by God in the great day, and the sentence that shall pass upon him will be insupportable; but mercy rejoiceth against judgment, or triumpheth over judgment; that is, mercy in some degree of exaltation; such a mercy as has covetousness, hard heartedness, and penuriousness, with all its enemies, under its feet; such mercy qualifies, strengthens, and enables the person in whom it is found, to be confidently secure that he shall receive no prejudice or hurt, by that judgment which God shall pass upon the world at the great day. Learn from hence, That merciful men, whose hearts and hands are much exercised in doing good, and showing mercy, by means of the consciousness of these God-like dispositions in themselves, are, or may be, full of a joyful and blessed security, that they shall stand in the great judgment of the world, and find favor and acceptance in the eye of the judge; when all unmerciful, covetous, and hard hearted persons shall fall under the sentence and be ground to powder by it; "He shall have judgment without mercy, that sheweth no mercy; but mercy rejoiceth against judgment."

14 ¶ What doth it profit, my brethren though a man say he hath faith, and have not works; can faith save him?

15 If a brother or sister be naked, and destitute of daily food;

16 And one of you say unto them, Depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled; notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful to the body; what doth it profit?

17 Even so faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone.

Our apostle here enters upon the second part of his discourse contained in this chapter, namely, to show the vanity of a fruitless faith; that such a faith as is not the parent and principle of obedience, and productive of good works, is altogether ineffectual and unprofitable. Faith of no kind, when it is alone, is justifying; as there can be no good works without faith; so where true faith is, it will be fruitful in good works, otherwise faith is no more faith; no believing without obedience will avail us; therefore St. Paul and St. James both agree to render to faith the things that are faith's, and not to take away from works the things that are works. "What doth it profit a man to say he hath faith? &c." As if our apostle had said, "Let not any person think his faith sufficient to justify and save him without the works of charity and mercy." Alas! a mere worldly profession is a poor unprofitable thing! What will professing christianity, and saying we believe, avail to salvation, if we obey not Christ, and live not according to the gospel? Will good works feed the hungry, or clothe the naked? Is it not like a mocking of them? Even so a notional knowledge, and a bare profession of faith, if it brings not forth the fruits of holiness and obedience towards God, of justice and righteousness, of love and mercy towards our neighbour, it is an effectual dead thing; like a dead corpse, without a quickening and enlivening soul; it is altogether dead as to our justification and salvation. Learn hence, 1. That a fruitless faith is certainly a dead faith. It is dead, because it does not unite us to Christ; it is lifeless, because there is no liveliness in such a person's performances; for though faith be not always alike lively, yet if sincere, it is always living, and enables the christian to live unto Christ, and to bear much fruit, John xv. 5. "He that abideth (that is, believeth) in me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit." Observe, 2. The comparison which St. James here makes between faith and charity; from whence he draws this conclusion, "If charity towards the poor, professed in words, but without works, be counterfeit, then faith in Christ, professed in like manner, without obedience, is also counterfeit and false: but charity towards the poor in words, and not in deeds, is a counterfeit charity; accordingly faith in Christ, without obedience to his commands, is a false faith; a dead faith, in regard to the effect; because it will never bring them, in whom it is, to life and salvation."

18 Yea, a man may say, Thou hast faith, and I have works; show me thy faith without thy works, and I will show thee my faith by my works.

St. James brings in these words by way of dialogue, between a sincere believer that has true faith, and a false-hearted hypocrite, that only pretends to it; thus, "Thou sayest thou hast true faith, though thou hast no works to evidence its truth; I say, I have true faith, because I have good works, which are the genuine effects and fruits of it. Come we now to the trial, and let it appear who saith truth, thou or I; if thou that hast no works sayest true, prove thy faith to be true some other way. Works thou hast none, show thy faith then by something else; but that is impossible, therefore thou vainly boastest of that which thou hast not; but, on the other side, says the sincere believer, I can make good what I say, proving the truth of my faith by the fruits of it in my works; this is a real demonstration that my faith is no vain ostentation as yours is." This way of arguing is very convincing; it gapes the conscience of the hypocrite, and covers him with shame and confusion of face. Learn hence, That good works are the evidences by which Christ will judge of our faith now, and according to which Christ will judge of us, and our faith at the great day. These two, faith and good works, ought to be as inseparable as light and the sun, as fire and heat. Obedience is the daughter of faith, and faith the parent and principle of obedience.

19 Thou believest that there is one God: thou doest well; the devils also believe, and tremble.

As if the apostle had said, "Be thou either Jew or christian, thou believest that there is a God, and assentest to the articles of religion: herein thou doest well, but this is no more than what the devils do; for they also believe and tremble; and if thou hast no better faith, and no better fruits of thy faith than they, thou hast the same reason to tremble which they have." Observe here, 1. That a bare and naked assent to the truths of the gospel, yea, to the fundamental truths and articles of religion, is not faith that will justify and save. The devils have it, yet have no hopes of salvation with it; they believe that there is a God, and a Christ that died for others, though not for them, so that an atheist, that does not believe a God, is worse than a devil; for he believes that there is a God, whose being the atheist denies. Observe, 2. That horror is the fruit and effect of the devil's faith; the more they know of God, the more they dread him; the more they think of him, the more they tremble at him. O God! All knowledge of thee out of Christ is uncomfortable; thine attributes, which are in themselves dreadful and terrible, being beheld by us in thy Son, do yield comfort and sweetness to us; the devils believe, but tremble.

20 But wilt thou know, O vain man, that faith without works is dead?

21 Was not Abraham our father justified by works, when he had offered Isaac his son upon the altar?

22 Seest thou how faith wrought with his works, and by works was faith made perfect?

23 And the scripture was fulfilled which saith, Abraham believed God, and it was imputed unto him for righteousness; and he was called The Friend of God

24 Ye see, then, how that by works a man is justified, and not by faith only.

Our apostle here goes on to prove, that a person is justified by works, that is, by working faith, from the example of Abraham; and the argument lies thus; "if Abraham of old was justified by a working faith, then we cannot be justified without it at this day; but Abraham, the father of the faithful, and the friend of God, was justified by a working faith, therefore faith without works will justify no man. As Abraham was justified, so must we and all others be justified; because the means and method of justification were ever one and the same, and ever will be uniform and alike. But Abraham was justified by a working faith, his faith was full of life, efficacy, and power, in bringing forth obedience unto God; witness his ready compliance with that hard and difficult command, the offering up his son Isaac. "Seest thou how faith wrought with his works?" that is, how his faith did both direct and assist him in that work. Heb. xi. "By faith Abraham offered up Isaac, and by works was his faith made perfect," that is, declared to be perfect; for Abraham was justified five and twenty years before he offered up his son, but his conquering the difficulties of that work, showed the perfection of his faith: as the goodness of the fruit declares the excellency of the tree, so the fruit of obedience evidenced the sincerity of Abraham's faith." From hence then it may and must be concluded that a barren and empty faith is a dead faith; dead, because it may be found in and with a person dead in trespasses and sins; dead, because it receives not the quickening influences of the Spirit of God; dead, because it wants operation, which is the effect of life; dead, because unavailable to eternal life. Observe farther, The honorable character and noble testimony here given of Abraham, for and upon the account of his faith and obedience; he was called the friend of God. All true believers are God's friends, as friends they are reconciled to him; as friends they enjoy communion with him, and communications from him; as friends there is a conformity of wills and affections between them, they like and love, they will and choose the same things; as friends they desire and long for the complete fruition and enjoyment of each other. Observe lastly, The inference which St. James draws from this instance of Abraham, "ye see then how that by works a man is justified, and not by faith." By faith only, he means faith that is alone, solitary, and by itself, without works.

Quest. But does not St. James, by affirming, that by works a man is justified, and not by faith only, contradict St. Paul, who says, by the deeds of the law shall no flesh be justified in God's sight? Rom. iii. 20. Ans. Not at all, 1. Because they do not speak, ad idem, to the same thing; St. Paul speaks of justification before God, St. James of justification before men: St. Paul speaks of the justification of our person, St. James of the justification of our faith. 2. They do not speak idem to the same persons: St. Paul had to do with false apostles, and Judaizing christians, who sought to substitute the works of the law, and a righteousness of their own, instead of, or at least in conjunction with, the grace of God; but St. James had to do with hypocritical professors, who abused St. Paul's doctrine of free grace, and took encouragement to sin, affirming, that if they believed, it was sufficient, no matter how they lived; therefore St. James urges the necessity of good works, as evidences of the sincerity of our faith. The sum of the matter is this, what God has joined none must divide, and what God has divided none must join; he has separated faith and works in the business of justification, according to St. Paul, and none must join them in it; and he has joined them in the lives of justified persons, as St. James spake, and there we must not separate them. St. Paul assures us, That works have not a co-efficacy in justification itself; but St. James assures us, that they may and ought to have a co-existence in them that are justified.

25 Likewise, also, was not Rahab the harlot justified by works, when she had received the messengers, and had sent them out another way?

Here the apostle declares, that Rahab was justified by a working faith, as Abraham was before her, which appeared in her entertaining the spies, lodging them in her house, and dismissing them with all possible privacy, which was a notable evidence of her faith in the God of Israel, her faith being accompanied with great self-denial, and exposing her to a mighty hazard. Indeed, Rahab's faith was mixed with great infirmity, she told a lie; but that is overlooked by God, and her faith only recorded, not her failing divulged. Rahab's lie, Sarah's laughter, Job's patience, are not mentioned: we discover corruption in the very exercise of our graces; but Oh! how good a master do we serve, that pardons our infirmities, and accepts our sincerity! Learn hence, That the duties and services of believers, though blemished with many defects, do find acceptance with God, and shall not fail to be rewarded by him. Rahab's faith was seen in receiving the spies, her weakness and infirmity appeared in her lying; God pitied and pardoned the one, and accepted and rewarded the other.

26 For as the body without the spirit is dead, so faith without works is dead also.

In this verse the apostle sums up the whole matter, by comparing a dead faith to a dead corpse; as that is imperfect, wanting its best and noblest part: so faith without works wants that which dignifies and completes it. Faith, without holiness to enliven it, is a dead body, without the spirit to quicken it. Again, as a dead corpse is useless as well as imperfect; though it has eyes, it sees not; feet, it walks not; mouth, but speaks not; thus it is with a dead faith, being unaccompanied with a good life; no believing, without obedience, will avail us; for though there is no merit in our obedience that we should be saved for it, yet is there such a necessity of obedience, that we shall never be saved without it. Again, as a dead corpse is noisome to us, so is a profession of faith without obedience loathsome to God: he says to all the workers of iniquity, Depart, from me, I know you not, I approve you not. As the body without the spirit is dead, that is, as the body is known to be dead, if we perceive no vital actions flowing from the soul, so is faith dead, if we see it not demonstrated by effectual operation: as it is necessary to the being of a living body that it be united to the soul, so it is necessary to the being of a living christian's faith, that it bring forth works of obedience in the christian's life; "for as the body without the spirit is dead, so faith without works is dead also."

CHAPTER III.

Our apostle had, at the latter end of the first chapter, discoursed concerning the evil of the tongue, showing that man's religion to be vain, which doth not teach him to bridle and govern that unruly member, and keep it within the bounds of reason and religion: in this chapter he returns to the same argument, and shows the great necessity we lie under to watch over our words, and to avoid the sins of the tongue, and this both as an argument of our sincerity, and as an ornament of our profession. Accordingly thus he speaks:

MY brethren, be not many masters, knowing that we shall receive the greater condemnation.

For the clearer understanding of these words, let us consider, 1. What the apostle does not forbid, namely, private and brotherly admonition, which proceeds from christian love one towards another, much less does he condemn public and authorized reproof: God has made it the duty of all to admonish and reprove each other charitably; he has made it the duty of others to admonish and censure evil-doers, authoritatively; this, therefore, is not forbidden. Observe, 2. What it is that is here forbidden, namely, such a reproving of others as is supercilious and masterly, managed with sharpness and severity, rashly and rigidly. As if the apostle had said, "be not magisterial and censorious towards your brethren, as if every one of you had many masters in them:" censuring of others is an arrogation of mastership over others, and the assuming of a power over them which God never gave us, it is a bold usurpation of God's authority; we may admonish, reprove, and warn; but it must not be in a lordly manner, in a masterly way, which is reviling rather than reproving; we must consider what may stand with charity, as well as what will consist with truth; every evil must not be divulged, but some must be covered with a cloak of love; there may be, and oftentimes is, a great deal of malice in reporting truth. Observe next, The remedy prescribed against censuring others, namely, the considering ourselves that we shall thereby receive the greater damnation; sharp reprovers in judging others, pronounce a doom upon themselves; such as reprove either out of office, or out of charity, ought to look to themselves, lest in reproving others they condemn themselves.

2 For in many things we offend all. If any man offend not in word, the same is a perfect man, and able also to bridle the whole body.

As if the apostle had said, "We had need be very candid in censuring others, for we all of us offend in many things ourselves, especially with and by our tongue, which is an engine of more mischief, both to ourselves and others, than any other member of the body; and accordingly he is called here, not a gracious man, but a perfect man, one that has attained to the fullest measures, and highest degrees of grace, that can bridle his tongue: to be able to bridle the tongue is an argument of considerable growth, and happy progress in grace; he that can bridle his tongue, can bridle his whole body, that is, govern all the other actions of his life; he is a very extraordinary christian."

3 Behold, we put bits in the horses' mouths, that they may obey us: and we turn about their whole body.

As we rule the whole body of an horse by a bridle in its mouth, so by bridling our tongues, we shall rule and govern all the actions of our lives. Note, That as hot and hard mouthed horses, so the tongue of man is apt to run out unless well bridled; nor is any bridle strong enough to hold it in, but the bridle of grace; nay, not that at all times. The grace of God is both spur and bridle to the tongue of man: grace like a spur, provokes to speak for God, and for the good of others; and grace, like a bridle, stops us from speaking what may grieve the Spirit of God, and justly offend others. None rule their tongues well without grace and every one that has grace doth not rule them well; it is a great part of perfection not to offend in word.

4 Behold also the ships, which, though they be so great, and are driven of fierce winds, yet are they turned about with a very small helm, whithersoever the governor listeth.

5 Even so the tongue is a little member, and boasteth great things. Behold how great a matter a little fire kindleth!

6 And the tongue is a fire, a world of iniquity: so is the tongue among our members, that it defileth the whole body, and setteth on fire the course of nature; and it is set on fire of hell.

The design of our apostle, by this and the former similitude, is to show, that little things well governed can govern great bodies; as the rider by a small bit can govern the horse at pleasure; and the pilot, by a small rudder, can manage the ship with ease; so the government of that little member the tongue, is a special mean for governing the whole man. Next he compares the tongue to fire, in regard to the danger that attends it: will a spark of fire set on house, a town, a city in a flame, and lay it in ashes? In like manner will a fiery tongue inflame a family, a society, a church, a kingdom: yea, the whole world, by strife and contention, putting all into combustion; such a tongue being set on work by the devil, and kindled by that fire which came from hell; but verily, a tongue set on fire from hell, shall, without repentance, be set on fire in hell. Learn hence, That a wicked tongue is of an hellish original, the fire of such a tongue is blown up by the breath of hell; let us abhor contentions, revilings, and reproaches as we would hell itself.

7 For every kind of beasts, and of birds, and of serpents, and things in the sea, is tamed, and hath been tamed of mankind:

8 But the tongue can no man tame: it is an unruly evil, full of deadly poison.

Our apostle here goes on in showing how difficult it is to govern the tongue; it is wilder than the wildest beasts, they are more tractable, and may be sooner tamed than a tongue be governed: it is an unruly evil, that will not be held in. Nature has set a double guard about the tongue; namely, the teeth and the lips, and grace has laid many restraints upon it, and yet it breaks out full of deadly poison, intimating, that the tongue is as deadly as a venomous beast. In the wild desert there are lions, bears and tygers, but they assault us but now and then, and can only rend the skin, but a contentious tongue is always troublesome to the soul and spirit:

man tameth the beast, and God tameth man: and the apostle's calling the tongue an unruly evil, full of deadly poison, plainly imports, that a wicked tongue is venomous and hurtful; a slanderous tongue is a deadly poison, nothing can secure against it but innocency and a good conscience; if we fall by it, let this comfort us, that there will be a resurrection of our names, as well as our persons, let us always, then, keep in the way of our duty, and commit our good name to God's care and keeping.

9 Therewith bless we God, even the Father; and therewith curse we men, which are made after the similitude of God.

10 Out of the same mouth proceedeth blessing and cursing. My brethren, these things ought not so to be.

11 Doth a fountain send forth at the same place sweet water and bitter?

12 Can the fig-tree, my brethren, bear olive-berries? either a vine, figs? so can no fountain both yield salt water and fresh.

Observe here, 1. Our apostle informs us what is the proper use of the tongue: namely to bless and praise God; speech being the most excellent faculty, is to be consecrated to divine uses: it is both a good man's work and his recreation to bless and praise God. Observe, 2. The sinful use which some men put the tongue unto, and that is, to curse with it, to curse men that have the natural image of God upon them, yea, holy and good men, that have the divine image of God instamped upon them; this is the abuse of some men's tongues, their mouth is full of cursing and bitterness. Observe, 3. The same tongue cannot, should not bless God and curse men; to pray and brawl with the same tongue is shameful hypocrisy; to go from worshipping to railing and reviling, to speak to the God of heaven with a tongue set on fire of hell, is a monstrous impiety. Observe, 4. How the apostle discovers the mighty absurdity of blessing and cursing with one and the same tongue, and of putting the best member to the worst use; the good aggravates the evil, and the evil disparageth, yea, disproveth the good; to suppose that the same tongue should acceptably bless God, and at the same time sinfully curse men, is as irrational and absurd, as to imagine that the same fountain should send forth salt water and fresh, sweet water and bitter; and, as if a fig-tree should bring forth olives, or a vine bear figs: our apostle argues and reasons from what is impossible in nature, to what is absurd in manners; contrary effects from the same cause are against the order of nature; in like manner grace is uniform and always acts like itself: to bless and curse, to pray and revile, is wholly inconsistent with grace: nature always abhors contradictions, and so does the grace of God: though a christian has a double principle in him, the flesh and the spirit, yet he has not a double heart; his spirit is single and sincere in what he does, in all he does both for God and man.

13 Who is a wise man, and endued with knowledge amongst you? let him show, out of a good conversation, his works with meekness of wisdom.

As if our apostle had said, "If any among you desire to approve yourselves more knowing than others, wiser and better than others, as you would be thought when you censure and despise others, show it to the world by a better conversation, by your abounding fruitfulness in good works and by such meekness of spirit as will be an evidence of true wisdom." Hence we learn, That the wise man is a meek and patient man; as pride and folly, so wisdom and meekness, are companions; the more wisdom a man has, the more he can check himself, and curb his passion; Moses is renowned in scripture for his wisdom, and for meekness; we all affect the reputation of wisdom, let us discover it by humility, in being lowly within ourselves: and by our meekness in bearing with and forbearing one another; yet must our meekness be a wise meekness, it must be a meekness of wisdom; our meekness must be opposite to fierceness, but not to zeal; Moses was very meek in his own cause, but as hot as fire in the cause of God; meekness and zeal are consistent, let us then "show out of good conversation our works and meekness of wisdom."

14 But if ye have bitter envying and strife in your hearts, glory not, and lie not against the truth.

16 For where envying and strife is, there is confusion, and every evil work.

Observe here, 1. How the apostle points at the root of all tongue evils; we pretend zeal and justice, zeal for God, and doing right to ourselves; but the true cause is envy, called bitter envying, as being bitter in its root, bitter in its fruit, bitter to others, bitter to ourselves; this is a painful evil, an unprofitable evil, a foolish, sinful evil; it makes another's good our grief. But why so! The good of another is no hurt to us; we have not the less because another has more; Leah's fruitfulness was no cause of Rachel's barrenness; why then should it be the occasion of Rachel's envy? Thy portion is not impaired because thy brother's is increased. Observe, 2. How envy and strife are here joined together; if you have envying and strife in your hearts; when envy is found in the heart, strife will soon be found in the tongue, for envy is the mother of strife; natural corruption doth most of all bewray itself by envy; it has an early spring, and a late autumn; we have it as soon as we come into the world, and it is an hard matter to leave it before we go out of it again; children suck it in with their milk, and the old man buries it in his coffin. Observe, 3. What are the bitter effects and fruits of envy and strife, namely, confusion, and every evil work; an envious spirit is an unquiet and wicked spirit; the devil worketh by no instruments, more than by envious, discontented, and malicious persons: pride and envy were the two first sins that crept into the world; the first man was ruined by pride, the second destroyed by envy, the whole world could not hold two brothers when the one was envied by the other; Cain's envy tasted blood; and verily the sinner's envy thirsts after it;

well, therefore, may the apostle say, "Where envying and strife is, there is confusion, and every evil work; this wisdom descendeth not from above, but is earthly, sensual, devilish."

17 But the wisdom that is from above is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, and easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality, and without hypocrisy.

Our apostle here enters upon a comparison between earthly wisdom, and spiritual heavenly wisdom; between wisdom that is not, and wisdom that is from above. Observe, 1. That wisdom that is not from above characterised and described. 1. It is earthly; it is suited to earthly minds, and it is employed about earthly things; earthly wisdom is mere folly; it is said to be wise only for this world, and to have such an unsavory spirit as will relish nothing but what is earthly. 2. Sensual; such wisdom as tendeth only to gratify the senses, and is conversant about outward pleasures, which are the pleasures of the beast, and not of the man: such sensual satisfactions do only please the sensitive appetite, which is the highest rational pleasures to mortify and subdue. 3. Devilish; because it is such wisdom as is found in the devil; he is only wise to do mischief. As a man has a fleshly part in common with the beast, so there are some sins which the scripture calls fleshly and beastly lusts, as uncleanness, riot, excess, and the like; but as man has somewhat in common with the angels, namely, his spirit and soul, so there are some sins which are called satan's lusts, John viii. 44. His lusts he will do: Thus envy, pride, wrath, revenge, malice, slander, these sins make a man devilish, like unto satan; hence is St. Paul's exhortation, 2 Cor. vii. 1. "To cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of flesh and spirit." Lord, pity the deplorable ruins of mankind, compassionate fallen man, who hath not only somewhat of the beast, but also somewhat of the devil in him by nature! O deplorable degradation! And should he sacrifice himself, he could not save himself without a sanctifier; he must be restored to the divine likeness here, or never enjoy his Maker hereafter. Observe, 2. He next describes spiritual wisdom to us, and that, first by its original, it is from above: all wisdom is known by its descent; carnal wisdom is of the earth earthly; spiritual wisdom is from above, and has a heavenly Author, and its original and descent is heavenly: the wisdom that is from above. Secondly, He describes spiritual wisdom by its effects and fruits, by its properties and qualities, and reckons up eight of them. 1. True wisdom is pure and holy wisdom, and sinless craftiness: the heart of such a person is clean, though not wholly free from sin, and his way is undefiled: this pure wisdom will not brook the filthiness either of error in judgment, or sin in practice: error is a blot as well as sin, and is as damnable as sin; the one is an open road, the other a secret path to hell and destruction; he that is wise, and has a due care of his soul's salvation, will be as much afraid of erroneous principles, as he is of debauched practices. 2. Peaceable: true wisdom teaches to avoid all strife and contention: there is a sweet connection between wisdom and peace; the wisest are the meekest men; they are peaceable and peace-makers; not ready to provoke others, nor easily provoked themselves: such as see most need of pardon from God, are most ready to pardon others, to live peaceably with all: yet note, Though wisdom be pure and peaceable, yet it is first pure, then peaceable: as God is the first and best of Beings, so purity is the first and best of blessings; the chief care then must be for purity and truth; but next to purity we must regard peace; truth must be preferred, but peace must not be neglected; we must treat with God by prayer, and treat with man by condescension, as far as a good conscience will suffer, for obtaining and preserving peace: "The wisdom from above is first pure, then peaceable." 3. True wisdom is gentle, in opposition to strife and contention; the word also signifies moderate and patient, Phil. iv. 6. 1 Tim. iii. 3. Such a christian is moderate in doubtful opinions, moderate in his judging of others, moderate and patient in his whole conversation, receding sometimes from his own right for peace sake. 4. Easy to be entreated; not inflexible, but persuadable: he that has an inflexible will, had need have an infallible judgment. Indeed there may be a flexibility and easiness to a fault; some good natures (as they are called) are easily drawn away to sin by evil company, and wicked counsel; in such a case, to turn a deaf ear to all entreaties is not obstinacy, but religious resolution. 5. Full of mercy: this has a double object, such as want, and such as offend: and so there is mercy in giving and in forgiving: it is the glory of a man to pass by a transgression, and the honor of a christian to put on bowels of mercy: without this garment we shall appear naked at the bar of God. 6. Full of good works. Religion is not a dry rod, but it blossoms and brings forth fruit; fruits of humanity and civil courtesy, as well as fruits of piety and pious charity: when we begin to be religious, we must not leave off to be kind and courteous: Be pitiful, be courteous, 1 Pet. iii. 8. 7. Without partiality; that is, without making any difference between person and person, because of outward respects, which is an high point of wisdom; folly discovers itself in nothing more than by doting upon outward splendor. Fools, like children, account nothing good but what is gay; but wisdom teaches us to value and put an estimate upon persons and things, according to their intrinsic worth, and doth nothing by partiality. 8. Without hypocrisy: in true wisdom there is no prevailing guile, but a true simplicity, and godly sincerity found with it, and this is the highest piece of wisdom; the hypocrite is the greatest fool; the sincere christian is the truly wise, and the only wise man. "The wisdom from above is pure and peaceable, without partiality, and without hypocrisy."

18 And the fruit of righteousness is sown in peace of them that make peace.

Our apostle here concludes his discourse, by showing the happiness of those who are possessed of that wisdom from above which is pure and peaceable, &c. They sow a seed which will yield them present fruit, and bring sheaves of joy and comfort into their bosoms, and also entitle them to an everlasting reward in that kingdom wherein dwelleth righteousness. Learn hence, 1. That all the actions of this life are as seed sown for the life to come; and every one's harvest hereafter will be according to his seed-time here; our rewards shall be according to our works. Learn, 2. That the rewards of righteousness and peaceableness are reaped and received here initially, and shall be ere long enjoyed perfectly: "The fruit of righteousness is sown in peace of them that love peace." Learn 3. That true lovers of righteousness ought to be lovers of peace, and peaceable persons lovers of righteousness; mercy and truth must meet together, righteousness and peace must kiss each other: peace without righteousness is but a sordid compliance; righteousness without peace is but a rough austerity; our duty is to couple a sweet goodness with a severe righteousness.

CHAPTER IV.

Our apostle having showed in the foregoing chapter the exceeding evil of strife and contention, he comes in this chapter to discover the root from whence all this proceeds, namely, from men's carnal lusts and corrupt affections; accordingly thus he speaks:

FROM whence come wars and fightings among you? come they not hence, even of your lusts that war in your members?

The Jews, to whom St. James directed this epistle, had at that time great wars and fightings, not only with their neighbours, but even among themselves: in every city there were wars and fightings among them. Now, the apostle here puts it to their consciences to tell and declare whence these animosities and contentions, those wars and fightings, did proceed; come they not hence even from your lusts? Plainly intimating, that the cause of all civil dissensions are men's corruptions; war stirs first within, before it breaks forth without; were there not a fight in ourselves, there would be no fighting with others; lust within is the make-bait in all societies and communities without: pride and covetousness, envy and ambition, making men injurious to one another; worldly and sensual lusts first war in ourselves, before they disturb the common peace.

2 Ye lust, and have not: ye kill, and desire to have, and cannot obtain: ye fight and war, yet ye have not, because ye ask not,

3 Ye ask, and receive not, because ye ask amiss, that ye may consume it upon your lusts.

The Jews, at the writing of this epistle to them, did vehemently lust after liberty, and freedom from the Roman yoke, and for dominion and government over other nations; believing that their Messiah was to be a temporal prince, who should enable them to lord it over the heathen world; "Now, says our apostle, though you lust for liberty and dominion, yet you have it not: and though, in an eager pursuit after these things, ye kill and slay, yet you do but lose your blood and labor, for ye cannot obtain what you thus inordinately seek, and irregularly covet; you should go to God in prayer for what you desire: but if at any time you do pray, it is not in a right manner, with a right intention and for a right end. It is to consume it upon your lusts; namely, that having the liberty you desire, you may possess the good things of this world you lust after, and may lord it over the heathen world." Learn hence, That we pray amiss, when our aims and ends are not right in prayer. Learn, 2. That then our aims and ends are not right in prayer, when we ask blessings for the use and encouragement of our lusts. Learn, 3. That prayers so framed are usually successful; what we ask amiss we are sure to miss, if the Almighty has any kindness for us. In prayer we must consider three things, the object, the manner, and the end: We must not only guard our affections, but secure our intentions; for prayers that want of a good aim, do also want a good issue: "Ye ask, and receive not, because ye ask amiss."

4 ¶ Ye adulterers, and adulteresses, now ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity with God? Whosoever, therefore, will be a friend of the world, is the enemy of God.

It is spiritual, not corporal adultery, which these words take notice of: the inordinate love of this world is called spiritual adultery; because it draws away the love of the soul from God, and dissolves the spiritual marriage between God and the soul; "Ye adulterers and adulteresses, know ye not that the friendship of the world," which stands in competition with, and indisposes you for doing of God's will, is enmity with God? and that whosoever will be thus a friend of the world, is the enemy of God? To love the world as God's competitor, is enmity to God, and he is God's enemy that loveth it predominantly. Learn we to love every creature with a creature love: for God reckons we love him not at all, if we love him not above all.

5 ¶ Do ye think that the scripture saith in-vain, The spirit that dwelleth in us lusteth to envy,

Some by the Spirit here understand the holy Spirit of God, and make the words run in the form of an interrogation, thus, "The Spirit, that dwelleth in us christians, lusteth to envy as yours doth? Nay, rather is he not the Spirit of love and goodness?" Others understand our own spirit; our corrupt nature is mightily carried forth this way, even to envy the good of others; it is usual in scripture to call the bent and propensions of the soul, either to good or evil, by the name of a Spirit. Note hence, that God's own people have much, too much, of a spirit of envy remaining in them, unmortified and unsubdued by them; "the spirit that is in us lusteth to envy."

6 But he giveth more grace, wherefore he saith, God resisteth the proud, but giveth grace unto the humble.

The sin of envy being censured before, our apostle next condemns the sin of pride; he uses a military term when he tells us, that God resisteth the proud; it signifies, that he sets himself as in battle array against the proud, in a direct opposition to him; there are no sort of sinners whom God sets himself so much against to punish and plague as proud sinners: such are wholly out of his favor; he beholdeth them afar off, and they are the subjects of his high displeasure, like naked men in an army, they stand exposed to his wrath they have no shelter, nothing to keep off the threatening from them; for there can be no shelter from divine wrath, but in divine love. There are two eminent works of divine providence in the world, the one is to lift up and exalt the humble, the other is to abase and pull down the proud; some pride themselves in their natural parts, others in their acquired parts; some in their moral virtues and evangelical graces, others in their holy duties and spiritual performances; we seldom do well, but we think too well of ourselves. Learn hence, That pride is a common sin and provoking; yea, a very provoking sin, and so must needs be, because it is an usurpation of the place and power of God, and sets itself against all the commands and threatenings of God: "God resisteth the proud, but he giveth grace to the humble:" grace; that is, 1. Favor; the humble shall have his favor, and the proud his frowns. 2. God giveth grace, that is, more grace, farther measures of grace; to the humble; as we lay up our richest wines in the lowest cellars, so does God lodge his choicest graces in humble and lowly hearts; he giveth not only grace, but more grace, to the humble; such as are low in their own eyes, are under the special protection and direction of the Most High God.

7 Submit yourselves, therefore, to God, Resist the devil, and he will flee from you.

That is, "Submit to his government and authority, to his preceptive and commanding will, and to his providential and disposing will: submit yourselves to the guidance of his word, to the direction of his Spirit, to the conduct of his providence; submit your whole selves to the whole law and will of God; let all your thoughts, affections, words, and actions, be guided according to the strict rules of the word of God; but resist the devil, by no means do not submit and yield an inch to him: the only way to overcome satan is, not by yielding to him, but by resisting and opposing of him; satan is both a conquered enemy and a cowardly enemy, though he has a bold face, yet a faint heart; resist him, and he will flee from you." Observe here, 1. The devil's active enmity and continual hostility against man, implied and supposed: satan is continually busy with us, that is, the apostate spirit, and the spirit of apostasy lodged in our natures: wherever we see malice, revenge, envy, hatred, pride, and self-love, there is that evil spirit which is so inimical and injurious to us, that is, Venum serpentis diabolici, "The sting and poison, the very soul and spirit of the apostate nature." Observe, 2. The christian's duty discovered, and that is, not to yield but resist and oppose; we must either resist him, or be taken captive by him; if we do not resist him, we shall never get rid of him; if once we parley and treat with him, we must expect to be triumphed over, and trampled upon by him. Observe, 3. The certainty of success declared, he will flee from you; every denial is a discouragement to satan, the strength of his temptations lie in our treachery and falseness; we are false within ourselves, otherwise all his power and malice could not hurt us; however, if we continue our resistance, the holy Spirit will come in with his assistance, he will be our second in the field, and we shall find, that stronger is he that is in us, than he that is in the world; the God of peace will bruise satan under our feet shortly.

8 Draw nigh to God, and he will draw nigh to you.—

Observe here, 1. Man by nature, since his fall, is afar off from God, not barely by a natural distance as a creature, but also by a moral distance as a sinner; God made man near him, but when man sinned, he departed from him; now we draw nigh to God by conversion, and in all the actings of repentance; there is a first and a second conversion; a first conversion from a sinful state, a second conversion from sinful acts, by both we draw nigh to God; but the drawing nigh to God here principally intended, is by approaching to him in prayer, and in the use of every holy ordinance: and humbling of the soul before God, is a drawing nigh unto him; hence it is that good men delight so much in prayer, and other holy duties; they meet with God in them, and draw near to God by them; and they that meet with God, meet with all delights. Observe, 2. As the duty required, draw near to God, so the encouragement annexed, he will draw nigh to you: God will certainly draw nigh to that christian, in a way of mercy, who prepareth his heart to approach and draw near to him in a way of duty; the Lord is nigh to all them that call upon him; nigh to comfort, nigh to quicken, nigh to guide, nigh to support.

—Cleanse your hands, ye sinners: and purify your hearts, ye double-minded.

Mark! to signify to us our deep pollution, and universal pollution; we are called upon both to cleanse and to purify, and that both our hands and our hearts. Quest. But why is cleansing of the hands set before purifying the heart? must we sweeten the streams before the fountain? Ans. It is not unusual in scripture to put that first which is visible first, as calling before election, 2 Pet. i. 10. And because grace (having once entered the heart) discovers itself by an immediate cleansing of the hands; so that if we would have an holy life, we must get a clean heart. Learn, 1. That unclean persons can have no communion with God. 2. That they who draw nigh to God, must cleanse their hands; because the sins of our hands do keep us at a distance from God, and God at a distance from us. Commerce with God in an ordinance is one thing, and communion with him is another; a man may have a commerce or trade with an enemy for profit sake, whilst he refuses to hold communion with him in a way of friendship and intimacy of acquaintance. Learn, 3. That double-minded men have corrupt hearts: double-mindedness is a dividing of the heart between God and something else: whereas God calls for the whole heart, the whole mind, the whole soul, the whole strength. Learn, 4. That this double-mindedness hinders both our drawing nigh to God, and God's drawing nigh to us; an heart divided between God and the world, between conscience and lust, between religion and self-interest, will hinder all intercourse and sweet communion betwixt God and us in the duty of prayer. "Cleanse therefore your hands, ye sinners; and purify your hearts, ye double-minded."

9 Be afflicted, and mourn, and weep;

let your laughter be turned to mourning, and your joy to heaviness.

10 Humble yourselves in the sight of the Lord, and he shall lift you up.

The next duty we are exhorted to by the apostle, is a deep humiliation, and a voluntary afflicting of our souls before God for sin, and upon the account of any calamity, either on ourselves or others. Learn hence, That as the afflicting hand of God does increase upon a person, a family, or a people, so ought the humiliation and mourning of that person, family, or people, to increase; we ought not only to be humbled when God afflicts, but also to be humbled in proportion to what God inflicts: great afflictions call for great humiliations; woe to that person, that family, or that people, who will not be afflicted when God afflicts them, nor humble themselves, when God humbles them; who, when God casts them down, will hold up their heads in mirth and jollity; God loves to see us bear our cross, but he cannot endure to see us make sport with it, or slight of it. If God once perceives us driving away our sorrow with harp and viol, or drowning it with wine, he can quickly turn our wine into water, and our laughter into the voice of weeping. Now is it not better to turn our mirth into mourning, than to have God turn it into mourning? they who turn their mirth into mourning, shall find comfort after their mourning; but they shall know nothing but mourning, whose mirth God turns into mourning; be afflicted: therefore, and mourn and weep. Quest. But how comes the apostle to make use of so many words, to one purpose, be afflicted, mourn, weep, humble yourselves, &c. Ans. All these heaps of expressions do import and imply, 1. The necessity of the duty. 2. The difficulty of the duty. 3. The continuance of the duty, and accordingly much enforcement is necessary; flesh and blood loves pleasure, but declines sorrow and heaviness; nature loves no bitter draughts, though bitter things are sometimes the best things; therefore the apostle's call to afflict our souls, and humble ourselves in the sight of God, is repeated; and mark the encouragement given thus to do, "humble yourselves in the sight of God, and he shall lift you up:" submission and humility is the true way to exaltation and glory: the way to rise is to fall: "he that humbleth himself shall be exalted," Luke xiv. 11. "He shall lift thee up in due time," 1 Pet. v. 6. Wait God's leisure, and the promise shall surely be fulfilled; the world looketh upon humility as the way to contempt, but God pronounces it the way to honor; before honor is humility.

11 ¶ Speak not evil one of another, brethren. He that speaketh evil of his brother, and judgeth his brother, speaketh evil of the law, and judgeth the law; but if thou judge the law, thou art not a doer of the law, but a judge.

12 There is one Lawgiver, who is able to save, and to destroy. Who art thou that judgest another?

These words; as generally delivered by our apostle, are dissuasive from the sin of detraction, or speaking evil of one another, either by secret whispering, or open backbiting; a very common but most unbecoming sin amongst christians. What pleasure do some persons take in divulging the faults of others, in aggravating their faults, and defrauding them of their necessary excuse and mitigation, though at the same time they are conscious of it, by lessening their good actions through the supposition of their false aims and ends! it is an injurious and unworthy jealousy, when a person's actions are fair, to suspect his intentions, by mentioning his failings, but suppressing his worth and excellencies: it becomes christians neither to give way to this growing evil themselves, nor give ear to it in others. But there seems to be something special and particular in these words which respects the Jews, to whom this epistle is directed; as if the apostle had said, "give over your reproach and censoriousness against the Gentile christians, who do not observe your ceremonial law, your feasts, your sabbath, your circumcision; for both the law of Christ, and the law of Moses, which you profess to own, do bind you to love your neighbour as yourself, and forbids such uncharitable censures: so that by condemning your brethren, you condemn the law, and set yourselves above it; and all this in contempt of the law, and the lawgiver, who is one, and is able both to save and to destroy." There are some that are neither able to save or destroy; there are others able to destroy but cannot save. Satan is a destroyer, but he cannot save any, nor can he destroy all; if he could, none should be saved. But there is a lawgiver, who can save and destroy, who can give life, and take it away, and both as often as he will: he can save those that obey his laws, and destroy all those that transgress them: therefore, seeing Christ, and none but Christ, has authority to give laws, it is not for you to impose ceremonial observances upon your brethren, and to censure and judge them for not observing them, when Christ has set them at liberty from the observation of them.

13 Go to know, ye that say, To-day or to-morrow we will go into such a city, and continue there a year, and buy, and sell, and get gain.

14 Whereas ye know not what shall be on the morrow. For what is your life? It is even a vapor that appeareth for a little time, and then vanisheth away.

15 For that ye ought to say, If the Lord will, we shall live, and do this, or that.

16 But now ye rejoice in your boasting. All such rejoicing is evil.

For the clear understanding of these words, consider, 1. What is not here forbidden or condemned by our apostle; namely, prudential resolutions for a right management of human affairs: it is lawful for men to take up a purpose to go to such a place, and follow their trade there, to buy, and sell, and get gain in an honest way; but no man must be peremptory in this, because we know not what shall be on the morrow, such determinations must be made with submission to divine providence: "if the Lord will, we shall do this, or that," referring all to his pleasure, who alone doth whatsoever pleaseth him. Consider, 2. What is hereby intimated to us, and what is the duty incumbent upon us, namely, 1. That we have no assurance of our lives, nor any of the comforts of our lives, for one day, and therefore ought to refer all our actions, our enterprises, and undertakings, to the will of God. "What is your life? It is but a vapor; therefore ye ought to say, if the Lord will, we shall do this, or that." 2. That in regard of the great frailty of our lives, and the great uncertainty of issues and events, it is the height of presumption to promise ourselves great things, without the leave of God's providence; as our times are in God's hand, so are our actions also in God's power, both as to the performance of them, and as to the success of them: "say not then, To-day, or To-morrow, we will go into such a city; for that ye ought to say, If the Lord will, we shall do this, or that."

17 Therefore to him that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin.

Observe here, 1. That sins of ignorance are sins, and render men greatly culpable, though ignorance will in some degree lessen their punishment. Observe here, 2. That to sin against light and knowledge is a very heinous aggravation of sin; because the knowledge of our duty lays as under the greatest obligation to do it. 3. That the greater advantages and opportunities any man has of knowing his duty; and the more knowledge he sins against in not doing of it, the greater is his sin, and the more grievous will be his condemnation.

CHAPTER V.

GO to now, ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you.

2 Your riches are corrupted, and your garments are moth-eaten.

3 Your gold and silver is cankered; and the rust of them shall be a witness against you, and shall eat your flesh as it were fire. Ye have heaped treasure together for the last days.

These words may be considered either relatively or absolutely. Consider them, 1. With relation to the Jews, to whom they were written immediately, and they are a prediction or denunciation of that judgment which was coming upon the rich men in the Jewish nation; which prediction, Josephus assures us, was fulfilled by the slaughter and spoiling of the rich Jews throughout Galilee and Judea, the zealous sparing none but the poor and low. Thus did the vengeance of God, and does to this day, pursue and follow that wicked people, who killed the Lord of life, and their own prophets, who brought judgment on themselves to the uttermost. Consider the words absolutely in themselves, and they are a severe and cutting reprehension to covetous rich men, for their sordid sparing of that wealth which God had given them for public service. And the apostle gives us, 1. A description of their sin. A declaration of their punishment. Observe, 1. A description of the sin of the covetous rich worldings, they choose rather to have their goods to be corrupted and spoiled, than to be employed to good uses; their victuals might have refreshed the bowels of the hungry, but they rather suffered them to putrefy and stink; the garments which lay useless in their wardrobes, might have clothed the backs of their naked brethren, but they had rather let them be moth-eaten; their gold and silver might have been applied to many good uses, but they had rather it should be cankered, and rust in their chests. Observe, 2. The punishment denounced against them for this their sin, the rust of their gold and silver shall witness against them; that is, their consciences shall at once convince them of their base covetousness, and torment them for it; and this corroding of their consciences shall have an impression upon their bodies, it shall eat their flesh as it were fire; and all their treasure which, with wrong to others, and violation of their own consciences, they had heaped together, was but heaped up for the spoiler, and the violence of the last days. Learn from the whole, 1. That it is hard to possess riches without sin; an hard matter to have them, and not be hindered from heaven by them. Learn, 2. That a covetous hoarding, and sordid sparing of wealth, which our suffering brethren want, brings a curse both upon our persons and estates. 3. That more miseries and dreadful judgments, shall come upon wicked rich men, which, if believably apprehended, would cause them now to weep and howl. We do no hurt with our wealth, say some; aye, but what good do you do with it? where are the poor members of Christ, whom ye have relieved with the superfluities of your table? but can many say, truly, they have done no harm with their estates? Lord! what carelessness in religion, what contempt of God, what riot and excess is found among many that abound in wealth, who expend more upon a lust in one day, than would maintain a poor family many years. Learn, 4. That in the day of judgment, not only our actions, but all the circumstances of our actions, shall be brought forth and produced as arguments of conviction; the rusty iron, the cankered silver, the moth-eaten clothes, shall be produced; the stones of the wall built by oppression, shall cry, "Lord, we were built by oppression and violence;" and the beam out of the timber shall answer it, True Lord, even so it is, Hab. ii. 11. The circumstances of men's sins at the great day, will be as so many memorials to put them in mind of guilt, and God in mind of vengeance; "Your gold and silver is cankered, and the rust of it shall witness against you."

4 Behold the hire of the laborers which have reaped down your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth: and the cries of them, which have reaped, are entered into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth.

The next sin which our apostle convicts the rich of, and condemns them for, is the sin of oppression. and that of the worst sort, even of laborers and servants: their covetousness was the cause of this oppression. There is no sin so heinous and base but covetousness may be a mother or a nurse to it: what more sordid than for the rich master to detain the wages of the poor laborer? Yea, Behold the hire of the laborers crieth: though they did not, durst not complain, yet their hire kept back did complain. Learn hence, That as all oppression is very sinful, so especially the detaining of the laborers' wages when their hire is delayed or denied, both are exceeding sinful; and accordingly we find oppressors in scripture joined with the vilest of sinners, even with sorcerers, adulterers, and false swearers. And to testify that God cannot want witnesses against oppressors, he tells us, their hire shall cry as well as the poor themselves: "the beam, and the stone out of the wall shall cry," Hab. ii. Remember we then that secret wrongs are known to God; the poor may not always know who wrong them, but the Lord fully knows, and their wrongs and oppressions will cry against us, when they know not against whom to cry. And note, The person gloriously described, who is the poor's avenger; he is the Lord of Sabaoth, or the Lord of hosts, who has all power in his hand, and all creatures at his command. How bold and daring then is the oppressor to afflict the poor who have the Lord of hosts for their avenger? "their cry is entered into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth."

5 Ye have lived in pleasure on the earth, and been wanton; ye have nourished your hearts, as in a day of slaughter.

The next sin he charges upon them, is sensuality, luxury, lasciviousness, their eating and drinking to excess in their feasts, pampering themselves for the slaughter and the shambles. These are sins very natural to corrupt nature, but chiefly incident to the rich. Pride, idleness, fulness of bread, and living in pleasure, are too frequently sins that do abound in rich men's houses: though their abundance is no excuse, but rather an aggravation of their sin. God allows us to use pleasure, but not to live in pleasure; and by calling it pleasure upon earth, he intimates, 1. That sensual delights are only enjoyed here in this world: 2. That their desires ran after these earthly pleasures only: the pleasures of the beast only pleased them; whereas the delights of sense are so far from being the chief pleasure for which God designed us, that, on the contrary, he intended we should take our chief pleasure, not in gratifying but in restraining our sensual appetite, in reducing that rebellious power under the government and dominion of reason and religion.

6 Ye have condemned and killed the just; and he doth not resist you.

By the just may be understood Jesus Christ, that just One whom the nation of the Jews condemned and killed; and also such of his members, orthodox christians, whom the judaizing christians persecuted. By their condemning the just, understand how they proceeded against them under a pretence and color of law; before they would actually kill, they pretended legally to condemn. Learn thence, That God takes notice not only of the open violences offered to his people, but also of all the injuries done unto them under the form of a legal procedure; it is a mighty provocation when public authority, which is the defence of innocence, is made the pretence of oppression: it follows, Ye have killed the just: This is added, to let us know that oppression will proceed as far as death. Wickedness knoweth no bounds: good men are oftentimes arraigned, condemned and killed; they fall a sacrifice to the rage of their persecutors and oppressors. It is added, He doth not resist you; which if applied to Christ, points at his meekness; he was slain without resistance: he came to suffer, therefore would not resist. If applied to the suffering christians, it points at their weakness and inability to make resistance, as well as at their meekness and patience under sufferings: "Ye have condemned and killed the just, and he doth not resist you."

7 ¶ Be patient, therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord, Behold, the husbandman waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth, and bath long patience for it, until he receive the early and the latter rain.

8 Be ye also patient; stablish your hearts; for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh.

Observe here, 1. The duty exhorted to, patience: Be patient brethren. Patience is a sense of afflictions without murmuring, and of injuries without revenge. It is the duty of christians to be patient under their sufferings, though they be long and sharp. Observe, 2. The argument to enforce this duty, The coming of the Lord draweth nigh. This may be understood of Christ's particular coming to judge his murderers at Jerusalem, which was then at hand, or of his general coming to judge the world at the last day. As if our apostle had said; "Have a little patience, and when your Lord cometh he will put a period to all your afflictions; with desire long for his coming, and yet with patience wait for it. Observe 3. A pattern of patience propounded in the husbandman, he waiteth, and waiteth long for the time of harvest; and in order thereunto, for the former and latter rain, to prepare the corn for the day of a joyful harvest. Now, in imitation of the husbandman, the patient christian thus argues with himself; "If the husbandman waits with patience for the coming of the harvest, shall not I wait with perseverance for the coming of my Lord? The approach of harvest is precious to him, and shall not the appearance of Christ be so to me? Shall he endure so much for a little corn, and not I much more for an heavenly kingdom? Observe, 4. The direction given, in order to the obtaining of this patience and long-suffering, stablish your hearts: that is, in a firm expectation of Christ's coming, believe that he will come certainly, and may come suddenly, and sooner perhaps than you may apprehend. Learn hence, That it is the duty of christians, in and under their afflictions, to stablish their hearts in a firm belief of the coming and appearance of Christ, to put a final period to all their sufferings, and to reward their victorious faith and patience: "Be ye also patient, stablish your hearts, for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh."

9 Grudge not one against another, brethren, lest ye be condemned: behold, the Judge standeth before the door.

Observe here, 1. A prohibition, Grudge not one against another; that is, do not murmur or repine, groan, or grieve, as impatient men use to do under their pressure; complain not of God, because the time of your deliverance is delayed: thirst not after revenge against your persecutors, and envy not those who are exercised with fewer troubles than yourselves; grudge not. Observe, 2. The enforcement of this prohibition from the danger of the fact, lest ye be condemned. As if he had said, "Impatience and discontent, envy and distrust, will expose you to greater miseries than you complain of: your sufferings here are but for your probation, but your grudging and repining will be your condemnation." Observe, 3. The anticipation or forestalling of an objection, which some might make. What! must we suffer, and may we not complain! Must we, by tamely hearing many affronts, invite more, and revenge none?" Yes, says the apostle, be patient, and commit your cause to him that judgeth righteously; for, Behold, the Judge standeth before the door. Where note, 1. A Judge, the supreme and universal Judge, Jesus Christ, who was here judged by his creatures, but now is coming to judge his judges. 2. His posture, He standeth, which is the Judge's posture when he executes judgment. St. Stephen saw Christ standing, Acts vii. 55, at God's right hand; not as an advocate to plead his cause, (Christ is said to sit at God's right hand when he does that); but he stood now as a judge, to take speedy vengeance on St. Stephen's murderers for that bloody act. Note, 3. The place where the judge standeth, before the door; that is, he is coming to judgment, and he is just at hand; he has put on his robes, and is ascending his tribunal. Observe lastly, The note of attention, Behold! this ushers in the whole, Behold, the Judge standeth at the door. Learn hence, That the consideration of Christ's near approach to judgment should awe the consciences of men, and mould their conversation into a dutiful compliance with divine commands.

10 Take, my brethren, the prophets, who have spoken in the name of the Lord, for an example of suffering affliction, and of patience.

Here the apostle exhorts suffering christians to patience, by the example of the Old Testament saints, who were exceeding dear to God, employed in special services for God, yet exercised with long and sharp afflictions from him. Now, their nature was as tender and as frail as ours, and we have the same blessed Spirit to comfort and assist us with them. Note thence, 1. That the examples of excellent persons who have gone in the thorny path of affliction before us, and beaten it for us, are of excellent use to suppress our fears, to support our spirits under all our conflicts, and to rouse our courage in all our encounters. Note, 2. That it is our great duty to eye the encouraging examples of those that have trod the path of sufferings before us, and strive to imitate and follow such worthy patterns. The first sufferers had the hardest task; strange and untried torments are most terrible: they knew not the strength of their enemy which they were to engage, but we fight with an enemy that has been often beaten and triumphed over by our brethren that went before us; certainly we that live in these last times have the best helps that ever any had to subdue their fears: Take we then the prophets, and primitive saints, for an example, both of grievous sufferings, and of great patience.

11 Behold, we count them happy which endure.—

That is, All persons do judge and pronounce those that have suffered death, for righteousness' sake, to be in a very happy condition; though they live persecuted, yet they die sainted. Living saints are an eye sore; by the strictness of their lives, and the severity of their reproofs, they torment a wicked world; but dead saints do not stand in the way of their lusts, they will therefore have a good word for the dead saints, whilst they hate and persecute the living; Behold, we count them happy which endure.

—Ye have heard of the patience of Job, and have seen the end of the Lord; that the Lord is very pitiful, and of tender mercy.

That is, "Ye have heard how eminent Job was, both for his sufferings and his patience, and you have seen (it is set before your eyes in his story) what an end the Lord made with him, giving him double in this world for what he lost; therefore, though you may be losers for God, yet fear not that you shall be losers by him." Learn hence, 1. That it is good and useful in our afflictions, to propound Job's pattern and example to our own imitation. He was famous for his suffering, and as famous for his patience; do you suffer various kinds of affliction? Do you suffer in your body, in your spirit, in your nearest relations, in your dearest earthly comforts? And under all these do you suffer the heaviest censures for hypocrisy? It is but Job's portion, and if you compare notes, not half of his condition neither: so for his patience, let us propound that for our pattern too, and take this encouragement to do it, namely, that though Job discovered much impatience, cursing the day of his birth, &c. yet that is not here mentioned, but mercifully pitied, and pardoned, and graciously overlooked. Where the heart is upright with God, infirmities are not mentioned by him. Learn, 2. That our afflictions ought not so much to be considered in their nature and beginning as in their issue and end. You have seen the end of the Lord. God gives always a gracious end and a glorious end, to the afflictions of his people, and sometimes a temporal end also. Job had all these: let us, under the rod, wait upon God with Job's patience, and he will give us Job's end. Learn, 3. What an affectionate regard God bears to his children, in and under all their heavy sufferings; he is full of bowels, as the word signifies, truly compassionate, very pitiful and of tender mercy. As he has pardon for their sins, so he has pity for their afflictions; he is pitiful as well as merciful, yea, very pitiful, and of tender mercy. Observe, lastly, that the book of Job is a real history not a parable. There was such a man as Job, how else could his patience be propounded as a pattern? And whence is it that we find him numbered with Noah and Daniel? Ezek. xiv. 14. As they were real persons, and truly prevalent in prayer, so was he, Job xlii. 10.

12 ¶ But above all things, my brethren, swear not; neither by heaven, neither by the earth, neither by any other oath; but let your yea be yea; and your nay, nay; lest ye fall into condemnation.

Observe, That an oath here is not absolutely forbidden, but restrained: Above all things, my brethren, Note, with what vehemency and earnestness the apostle speaks, Swear not, that is, swear not vainly and rashly, swear not lightly and profanely, swear not unduly, by any of the creatures, (but by the Creator only,) which was a sin that the Jews were differently guilty of: But let your yea be yea; and your nay, nay; accustom yourselves to a true simplicity and plainness of speech, in affirming or denying, letting oaths alone, lest ye fall into condemnation; that is, plainly, into the condemnation of hell. Learn hence, 1. That rash and vain swearing, or profane oaths, are an high abuse of the dreadful name of God, and a mighty provocation to him; verily there is no sin that doth more weary the patience of God, because there is no sin that doth more banish the fear of God out of our hearts. Learn, 2. That the great end of speech being to communicate the sense of our minds to each other, we ought to use such plainness and simplicity in speaking, that we may believe one another without oaths, or more solemn religious asseverations. But yet, 3. To take an oath upon a solemn occasion, when lawfully called thereunto, is a christian and necessary duty.

13 ¶ Is any among you afflicted? let him pray.—

Here Observe, 1. That affliction is a praying season. Prayer is a duty never out of season, but never more in season than in and under affliction. Observe, 2. That though the time of affliction be a special time when a saint prayeth, yet it is not the only time, he prays at all times, because he loves to pray; he prays then, because he especially stands then in need of prayer. A carnal heart has no mind to the duty; he visits not God unless God visits him; but a good man prays continually, prays without ceasing, in health and sickness, in poverty and want; when the candle of the Lord shines about his tabernacle, as well as when he walketh through darkness.

—Is any merry? let him sing psalms?

He that prays makes music in the ears of God; he that sings psalms, performs a duty suitable to his condition. Several conditions require several duties, and all duties are to be performed suitably to our several conditions. Singing is proper to a prosperous state; both to sing God's praises, and to sing to his praise: prayer is proper to an afflicted condition; it is our best remedy, because it leads us to God our best refuge: therefore if any be afflicted, let him pray to God to alleviate and sanctify his affliction. Is any merry? let him sing psalms of praise to that God who hath given him this cheerfulness of spirit.

14 Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him.—

Some observe, 1. That St. James doth not say, "Is any man sick? let him pray;" but let him send for others to pray with him, and for him; plainly supposing, that the sick man is very unfit to pray himself, or to pray for himself; in other afflictions let him pray, but in sickness let others pray for him, he having enough to do to grapple with his grief, and to conflict with his affliction: a diseased body unfits the mind for holy duties. Yet observe, 2. It is one thing to want an heart in sickness to pray for ourselves, and another thing to want ability to pray for ourselves. Many desire the prayers of others in sickness, who wanted hearts to pray for themselves in health. This is a sad symptom that the soul is as sick, yea, more dangerously sick than the body. Add to this, that the prayers of others are very rarely beneficial to us, unless we pray, or have a desire to pray, for ourselves. Observe, 3. This sick man's duty, not only to desire prayer, but to send to the elders of the church to pray for him, and with him. Quest. But if the sick neglect to send, may the minister neglect to go, if he knows of the sickness? Doubtless we ought to go, if we know of it, whether they send or not, for they want our prayers and help most when they desire it least: and by refusing to go, we may lose the last, and perhaps the best opportunity of doing good unto them. If our people through stupidity and insensibleness, omit their duty in sending for us, God forbid, that either through pride or sluggishness, we should neglect our duty in going to them; too, too often we never hear our people are sick, till the bell tells us they are dead: if therefore by any means we gain the knowledge of their condition, let us apply ourselves with all our might to their condition, lest God be more angry with us for not going to them, than with them for not sending to us, imitating our Lord, who was found of them that sought him not.

—Anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord.

Some make this anointing with oil to be medicinal practice among the Jews, and that they administered it physically: but why then must the elders administer it? The physician might have done it as well as they. True, but the elders are sent for, that they, applying this corporeal remedy, might join with it spiritual physic of prayer, good admonition and comfort. As if a sick person should send for the minister at his taking of physic, that he might then pray with him, counsel and comfort him. Others make this anointing with oil a religious act. Christ empowered his apostles to work miracles, and amongst others, they had the gift of healing the sick, whom they anointed in the name of the Lord, or by the authority of the Lord; but the gospel being sufficiently confirmed, this gift of healing is ceased and therewith the right of anointing; therefore the church of Rome keep up an idle ceremony in anointing the sick, unless they had a miraculous power to heal the sick: to keep up the rite, unless they could produce the effect; to pretend to the anointing, without the power of healing, is a mere piece of pageantry; besides they anoint those that are given over for dead, and the apostle's anointing was for the benefit of the living, as appears by the following verse.

15 And the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up;—

Here our apostle shows the good effects of this anointing and praying; yet note, that he ascribes the sick man's recovery, not to the oil, but to the prayer; the prayer of faith shall save the sick. The moral means is taken notice of before the ritual and ceremonial: the prayer of faith shall save the sick. There was required to the miracle faith, both in the elder, and in the sick person, to save, that is, to recover the sick; yet mark, it is said, The Lord shall raise him up, to note, that the efficacy of faith lies in the object of faith; it is not faith properly, but God called upon in faith, that saveth the sick: the efficacy of faith is not from its own merit, but from God's power and grace.

—And if he have committed sins, they shall be forgiven him.

If he have committed sins: why, is there any question to be made of that? No; but if he has committed such sins as brought this sickness upon him, they shall be forgiven him, upon this prayer of faith; if any special or particular sin has drawn down this disease upon him, it shall be remitted, and the disease removed; where the sickness is by way of chastisement, the healing is a testimony of God's forgiveness. Learn hence, How absurd is the popish sacrament of Extreme Unction: how can they gather a perpetual ordinance from an action that was extraordinary and miraculous, and long since ceased? Or apply a sacrament to dying persons, from a rite used upon persons who were not to die, but to be raised from sickness? Or how can they promise to him forgiveness of sins, to whom they cannot promise that recovery which was the token of it?

16 Confess your faults one to another, and pray one for another, that ye may be healed.—

Note here, 1. That there is a time and season when it is our duty to confess our sins, not only to God, but to one another, to a pious and prudent minister, to an injured and wronged neighbour, to those that have been tempted by us, and have consented with us in sinning. Note, 2. How absurdly the papists ground their practice of auricular confession upon this text, here is not one word spoken of a priest, nor of our confessing to him; and if so, the text proves it the priest's duty to confess to the people, as much as the people's to confess to the priest, for the duty required is mutual, confess one to another; accordingly the words are generally understood of confessing private injuries one to another; that the sick person must reconcile himself to his neighbour as well as to God, that he may recover; for so it follows, pray for one another that ye may be healed; intimating, that it is the duty of christians to confess their miscarriages and private injuries one to another, and by their prayers, to succour, help, and relieve each other; it is the duty of the strong to pray for the weak, and the strong may be strengthened by the prayers of the weak.

—The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much,

Observe here, 1. The qualifications of that prayer, which at that time was effectual for the recovery of the sick person in a miraculous manner, it may be rendered an inspired prayer; as they that were actuated by the evil spirits, so such as were moved by the impulses of the Holy Spirit, were called Ενεργούμενοι, in a good sense, the phrase properly signifies a prayer inwardly wrought and excited, and implies the efficacious influence of the Holy Spirit, and the force and vehemency of a christian's spirit and affection exerted and put forth in the duty; in-wrought prayer, or prayer that works in and upon our own hearts, has a mighty prevalency with God. Observe, 2. The qualification of the person praying, a righteous man, not legally righteous, one in a state of sinless perfection, but a person justified by faith, and whose faith is fruitful in good works. Observe, 3. The prevalency and efficacy of such a person's prayer; it availeth much: he doth not say how much, that is better experienced than expressed; it availeth much for ourselves, sometimes more for others than for ourselves. Note, That the fervent prayers and intercessions of the righteous have a mighty prevalency with God, both for themselves and others.

17 Elias was a man subject to like passions as we are, and he prayed earnestly that it might not rain: and it rained not on the earth by the space of three years and six months.

18 And he prayed again, and the heavens gave rain, and the earth brought forth her fruit.

Our apostle in these words proves the general proposition he had laid down, that the fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much, by a particular instance, the example of Elias: who seemed to carry the keys of heaven at his girdle, to shut and open the heavens at his pleasure, 1 Kings xvii. 1. "As the Lord liveth, there shall not be dew nor rain, but according to my word:" the apostle here tells us what word this was, namely, a word of prayer, and not a word of command; Elias prayed, and the heavens gave rain; he prayed in prayer, so the original; that is, he prayed with faith and fervency, according to the will of God revealed to him; though he was a man subject to the common infirmities of human nature with ourselves, yet his passions did not hinder the prevalency of his prayers; nothing has wrought such wonderful effects in the world as prayer; it made the sun stand still in heaven, it brought fire out of heaven, 1. Kings i 10. and here it shut up the windows of heaven, that it rained not for the space of three years and six months: it has a divine kind of omnipotency in it.

19 Brethren, if any of you do err from the truth, and one convert him;

20 Let him know, that he which converteth the sinner from the error of his way, shall save a soul from death, and shall hide a multitude of sins.

Our apostle concludes his epistle with an exhortation to the duty of fraternal correction and christian admonition: "If, says he, any one among you, who hath made an outward profession of christianity, shall, for fear of persecution, or otherwise turn aside from the rule of the gospel, whether in matters of faith or practice, such a person, either minister or private christian, as shall be instrumental, by prayer, reproof, or counsel, to recover him out of that wandering and backsliding condition, shall have the honor to save a soul from death, and shall hide a multitude of sins; that is, he shall be a means of bringing him to a sight of his sins, and to seek a pardon of them, which is the only true and happy way of hiding and covering of them." Learn hence, 1. It is not sufficient that every one takes care of his own soul, but he must also watch over the souls of others; there is no brother so mean in the christian church, but the care of his salvation belongeth to all in christian communion. Learn, 2. What great honor God puts upon the creature, in calling him a Saviour to a restored and converted brother, he shall save a soul from death; but when God puts the glory of his own work upon the head of the creature, what cause has he to lay the crown of his excellency at the foot of God? When the honor of the supreme cause is put upon the instrument, the instrument ought to ascribe all the efficacy and efficiency to the first cause, saying, Not unto us, O Lord, not unto us, but to thy name be the praise. Amen.

SAINT PETER.

The writer of this and the following epistle was St. Peter, who styles himself an Apostle of Jesus Christ, not the Universal bishop and head of the church; no where do we find this holy and humble apostle assuming, though we often find the apostate church of Rome giving him an uncontrollable monarchy, and sovereign dominion, over the whole church of Christ, and over the apostles themselves, and their successors: and accordingly to interpret those words of our Saviour to St. Peter, St. John xxi. Pasce oves, Feed my sheep, in such a rampant sense as they have done, could never with any confidence have been offered to the reason of mankind, had not these men subdued their reason to their interest, and subjected both to an implicit faith and blind obedience. Saint Peter, being the apostle of the circumcision, writes this epistle to the believing Jews, and proselyted Gentiles, who were of the dispersion, scattered abroad in divers countries, of whom he had an especial charge, and of whose conversion he had been a principal instrument.

The design of the epistle was to confirm them in the Christian religion, to encourage them to constancy under the sharpest persecutions and fiery trials for the same, and to excite them to the practice of particular duties incumbent upon them in every capacity and relation in which they stood, beautifying and adorning their holy profession by an holy and becoming conversation. And accordingly thus he writes unto them:

CHAPTER I.

PETER, an apostle of Jesus Christ to the strangers scattered throughout Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia, and Bithynia.

2 Elect according to the foreknowledge of God the father, through sanctification of the spirit, unto obedience, and sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ:

Grace unto you, and peace be multiplied.

Observe here, 1. The penman of this epistle described by his name, Peter; by his office, an apostle; by the author of his office, Jesus Christ. This name Peter was given by him our Saviour, and signifieth a stone, a rock, probably for his confession and acknowledgment of Christ, the Rock upon whom the christian church was built; his call to the office, first of a disciple, and then of an apostle, was from Christ himself. It is a singular support to the ministers of the gospel of Christ, under all their discouragements, to consider whose officers they are, and from whom they have both their mission and their message; their authority and their abilities for the sacred function; Peter, an apostle of Jesus Christ. Observe 2. The persons to whom the epistle is directed, to the strangers scattered abroad in Pontus, Galatia, &c. that is, to such of the converted Jews and proselyted Gentiles as were dispersed into several countries exiled and banished from house and home, for the sake of Christ and his holy religion, which they make a faithful profession of. Learn hence, That a state of exile and banishment from outward comforts and privileges, has been, and may be, the lot and portion of a people that are exceeding dear to Almighty God; "To the strangers scattered throughout Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia, and Bithynia." Observe, 3. How he comforts them in this their persecuted condition, by declaring to them the great things which God has done for them in their election, vocation, and sanctification; assuring them that God had chosen them out of the world according to his foreknowledge and unsearchable counsel, and effectually called them to the participation of his grace, sanctifying them by his Spirit, that they should obey the truth, and by faith be sprinkled with the blood of Christ, and thereby be brought into a state of perfect peace and reconciliation with God. Learn hence, 1. That God has certainly chosen some to eternal salvation, 2. That such as are chosen to happiness as the end, are also chosen to holiness as the mean; "Elect through sanctification of the spirit unto obedience." Sanctification is the fruit of our election, and obedience the end of our sanctification. Learn, 3. That sanctification and justification always accompany one another; here is sanctification and sprinkling with the blood of Christ, joined together; where note, Christ, as Mediator, has blood; his blood was shed, his blood that was shed must be sprinkled, and by faith applied; and we can never discern our interest in the blood of Christ, till we are sanctified by the Spirit of Christ, and our hearts and lives wrought unto obedience. Justification and sanctification, though distinct in their nature, yet are inseparable in their subject. Observe, lastly, The salutation here sent to these dispersed saints, Grace and peace be multiplied. Where note, 1. The connection, grace and peace. 2. The order, first grace, and then peace. 3. The option, be multiplied. The blessings prayed for, are the choicest, the sweetest, and the best of blessings; grace and peace; together with the augmentation, and abundant increase of both. Grace and peace be multiplied. Learn, That there is nothing that the ministers of Christ do more passionately desire, and more earnestly endeavour, than to see their people brought into, and preserved in a state of favor and peace with God, and enjoying a multiplied increase of all spiritual and temporal blessings from him.

3 Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again unto a lively hope, by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead,

4 To an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you.

Observe here, 1. How our apostle breaks forth into gratitude and thankfulness to God, for those special blessings, which by his ministry, were conferred upon these converted christians, Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ. Blessing and praise are due to God for the least mercies received from God, because we are less than the least, much more for spiritual and eternal blessings, which are the greatest mercies that either God can give, or we receive. Observe, 2. The special mercy which he thus solemnly blesses and gives thanks to God for, namely, their regeneration; "For begetting them to a lively hope, by the resurrection of Christ, to an inheritance incorruptible, &c. according to his abundant mercy." Where note, 1. The benefit declared, they were begotten again to a hope of salvation; by means of sin, all influences of grace were suspended, and all hopes of salvation were cut off. Christ's interposition for us makes our condition hopeful, and the fallen angels hopeless. Note, 2. The qualification of that hope which christians are begotten to, it is a lively hope in opposition to a dead hope, and to a languid and languishing hope; the christian's hope is an effectual hope, which proceeds from faith, and promotes holiness. A lively hope is a hope that makes us lively, joyful and comfortable in our lives: a hope that puts life into us. Note, 3. The means whereby we are begotten to this hope, and that is, by the resurrection of Christ from the dead; not by the bare act of his resurrection, but by the virtue and power of it, we are raised to a spiritual life by it, and our hopes of eternal life are thereby strengthened and confirmed. The justification of our persons, the regeneration of our natures, the resurrection of our bodies, the glorification of our souls and bodies, are singular fruits and benefits of Christ's resurrection. Well might the apostle then say, that we are begotten to a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead. Note, 4. The moving and impulsive cause from which regeneration, and all other spiritual blessings, do proceed and flow: the mercy and goodness of God. "According to his abundant mercy he has begotten us again." In the matters of salvation nothing is owing to our merit: for demerit cannot merit, but all is due to divine goodness, and undeserved mercy; this is the fountal cause of all our favors. Note, 5. The nature of that happiness which believers are begotten to a lively hope and expectation of; it is here styled an inheritance. Heaven is an inheritance, and as such it is given to children, to all God's children, to none but his children; it is an inheritance dearly purchased, yet freely given: Christ is the sole purchaser of it; no joint purchasers with him: the saints are called joint-heirs with Christ, but never joint purchasers; yet remember, that though we cannot purchase this inheritance in a way of merit, we may forfeit it by our demerit, and provoke our heavenly Father to disinherit us. Note, 6. The properties and excellencies of this inheritance which believers are raised by Christ to the expectation of; it is an inheritance incorruptible; an enduring possession; not subject to decay, having nothing in it that can corrupt it, or corrupt us in the enjoyment of it. Undefiled, heaven is an holy habitation: the holiness of heaven is the most considerable part of its happiness. Sinners, therefore, that despise holiness, despise the richest jewel in the crown of glory. It fadeth not away, it withereth not; glory is a flower which will eternally retain its freshness and verdure. Reserved in the heavens for us: heaven is a country where the saints' inheritance lies: here it is reserved or laid up safe, by the purpose and pleasure of God, by the purchase, possession, and intercession of Christ; and to be able to say [for us,] and be particularly assured of heaven, is a special comfort.

5 Who are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the last time.

Here the apostle seems to pre-occupate and prevent a objection. Some might say, "Though the saints' inheritance be safe in heaven yet are they in danger here on earth;" be it so, as if our apostle had said, yet they are and shall be kept by God's power and their own faith to eternal salvation. Note here, 1. We are kept; it implies, we are in danger, in great danger of missing salvation, by reason of the number, power and policy of our spiritual enemies, corruption and sin within, the devil and the world without; but we are kept as in a garrison; so the word signifies: saints are preserved like walled cities; the general whom they fight under, and hold out for, preserves them, by sending in fresh recruits, supplies from the Holy Spirit, and by cutting off such succours as our lust and spiritual enemies would send forth against us, so that they starve, and shall not vanquish us, but we them, We are kept; eternal thanks for such a keeper! Note, 2. What it is believers are kept and preserved to, namely, salvation: he does not say they are or shall be kept from trouble and affliction; that their fingers shall not ache in this world; he has made no such promise, and we must expect no such preservation, but the contrary; in the world ye shall have tribulation, says Christ, the captain of our salvation, John xvi. But safety and rest, happiness and ease, shall be our portion in the coming world. Note, 3. The means by which we are thus kept unto salvation. 1. On God's part, almighty power. If left one moment to ourselves, we become a prey to every temptation. How did the devil baffle and befool Adam in innocency, when he had his wits about him, by being left in the hand of his own counsels? Lord, in a worse hand thou canst not leave us than our own. 2. On our part we are kept through faith. Our own endeavour must accompany God's power, in order to our preservation. We are kept by the power of God through faith; by both jointly, by neither singly, God's power will not keep us without our care, neither can our care secure us without the help of his power. We and our faith must be kept by the power of God; what God does for us, he does by us: he requires the use of our faculties, and the concurrence of our own endeavours in order to our salvation. Note, 4. The time when the saints' complete salvation shall be revealed to them, and they have the full and final fruition of that;—Ready to be revealed in the last day. Mark, The saints' salvation in heaven is a mystery, an hidden mystery, not yet revealed; revealed only to saints on earth by faith, to saints in heaven by sight; but the full revelation is not to be expected and enjoyed by glorified saints before the day of judgment, called here the last time; ready to be revealed in the last time. Our apostle told us, ver. 4. it was reserved in heaven for us, kept safe for us, but kept close in heaven; it is an inestimably rich treasure; they that are heirs of it on earth, yea, they that are possessed of it in heaven, do not as yet fully understand and know the transcendency of it, but it shall be revealed to them at the last day.

6 Wherein ye greatly rejoice, though now for a season, (if need be) ye are in heaviness through manifold temptations:

7 That the trial of your faith being much more precious than of gold that perisheth, though it be tried with fire, might be found unto praise, and honor, and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ.

Wherein ye greatly rejoice; That is, in the belief and expectations of which glorious and incorruptible inheritance in heaven, ye now joy and rejoice here on earth: plainly intimating, that a believer may be assured of his title to the glorious inheritance above, and both may and ought to rejoice in it abundantly below. Observe farther, by what way and method God brings his people to heaven, it is by heaviness, by afflictions, yea, by manifold afflictions. As if he had said, "you that are the present candidates for heaven, the heirs of salvation, must not think yourselves past the rod and the ferula; and that you are to expect nothing but comfort, and to do nothing but rejoice in the hopes of your salvation. But I tell you, you may have need of heaviness before you get to heaven, and of manifold temptations for the mortifying your corruptions, before you enter upon an inheritance incorruptible." Observe, 3. The supposition made concerning the necessity of a believer's afflictions, If need be, intimating, 1. That we should never feel any affliction from the hand of God, never be in heaviness, if there were not need. And, 2. That there is need that the holiest in this world should sometimes be made heavy, and that heaviness should be upon them for a season. We should always have calms and fair weather, never any storms or tempests from God, did not our needs call for it. As we need our daily bread, so verily do we need a daily rod: both the rod of God's mouth to admonish and reprove us, and the rod of his hand to chasten and correct us: "Ye are in heaviness for a season, if need be, through manifold temptations." Hence learn, That the trials and afflictions which God exercises his children with, are many, yet they never feel them but when they need them, and then only for a season. As the coldness of the winter kills the weeds in our grounds, so the cold blasts of affliction (under the mortifying influences of the Holy Spirit) kill our corruptions in our souls. Perpetual shinings, and fair seasons, are reserved for heaven; cold blasts, and nipping frosts, are needful and useful here on earth; Ye are in heaviness for a season if needs be. Learn farther, That as God doth not afflict us but when there is need, so he will not afflict us more than there is need. Ye are in heaviness for a season: we shall not be afflicted an hour longer, nor shall our cross be a drachm or a grain heavier than God thinks needful. Observe, 4. The happy effect and fruit of the saints' manifold temptations: they all work for their advantage; they receive good, and not hurt by them; no more hurt than the gold receives by the fire; That the trial of your faith; that is, that your tried faith, being more precious than gold, faith is more precious than gold, because more pure, more durable, especially when purified in the furnace of affliction. A good man is no loser, but a great gainer by being tried. He, who before had much dross in him, comes out of the furnace as gold, without losing any thing either of its weight or worth; nothing is consumed but the dross and rubbish of his corruptions. O happy consumption! grace is not only grace still, but more gracious, yea, glorious after trial, "That the trial of your faith being much more precious than that of gold which perisheth." Observe lastly, That faith must be tried on earth, before it be crowned in heaven; and after it is tried, it shall certainly be crowned, and found unto praise, honor, and glory, at the appearing of Jesus Christ. Learn hence, That the trial of a christian's faith in their manifold afflictions and temptations now, will bring abundance of honor and glory to God in the day of Christ; yea, not only to God, but to ourselves. "Our light afflictions which are but for a moment now, will work for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory then."

8 Whom, having not seen, ye love; in whom, though now ye see him not, yet believing, ye rejoice with joy unspeakable, and full of glory :

In these words our apostle commendeth the faith and love of those Jews to whom he wrote: that although they had never seen Christ in the flesh, as others did, yet they did truly love him, and their faith caused them to triumph and rejoice in him. Learn hence, That it is the property and practice of a believer to love an unseen Saviour, and to rejoice in him, and in the hopes of eternal life by him. Inference, If such as never saw Christ but with a believing eye, do yet love him superlatively, and rejoice in him unspeakably, how will they love him and rejoice in him, who shall see him with a glorified eye, and behold him face to face.

9 Receiving the end of your faith, even the salvation of your souls.

10 ¶ Of which salvation the prophets have enquired and searched diligently, who prophesied of the grace that should come unto you :

11 Searching what, or what manner of time, the Spirit of Christ which was in them did signify, when it testified beforehand the sufferings of Christ, and the glory that should follow.

12 Unto whom it was revealed, that not unto themselves, but unto us, they did minister the things which are now reported unto you by them that have preached the gospel unto you with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven; which things the angels desire to look into.

Observe here, 1. The end, that is, the reward of a christian's faith, it is the salvation of his soul; of his soul eminently, but not exclusively of body and soul both. The complete salvation of soul and body both with Christ in heaven, shall be the end and reward of the believer's faith. Observe, 2. The diligent search into, and enquiry after the nature of this salvation, which was made by the prophets of the Old Testament. "Of which salvation the prophets have enquired, and searched diligently:" that is, by prayer, meditation, and study, they searched after the farther and clearer knowledge of this great salvation, and the kingdom of the Messiah, when should be the time of his sufferings and humiliation, which were to precede his glory and exaltation. Observe, 3. The success of this their enquiry and search, they were answered by God, and received this revelation from him, that they themselves were not the men that should see the Messiah, and his special kingdom; and that the things which they prophesied of, were not to be fulfilled in their own times, but in after times; and accordingly the things foretold by the prophets, he assures them, were clearly manifested to them by the apostles, which were endued with an extraordinary measure of the Holy Spirit, sent down upon them at the day of Pentecost: "Unto whom it was revealed, that not unto themselves, but unto us they did minister the things now reported unto you." Observe lastly, The sublimity, and transcendent excellency of those gospel mysteries which are now revealed; they are so ravishing and transporting, that the holy angels desire to pry into them, Which things the angels desire to look into. Learn thence, That the glorious mystery of man's redemption and salvation by the incarnation of our Lord Jesus Christ, is an object worthy of the admiration and contemplation of the adoring angels. They admire the person of the Redeemer, they admire the author and contriver of the work of redemption, they admire the subjects redeemed, they admire the manner and method of our redemption, they admire the finally glorious state which the redeemed are brought into, and possessed of, and they pry into these things, as the cherubims looked upon the ark, with a curious and accurate inspection, with an earnest and affectionate inspection; they holily admire the wisdom of this glorious contrivance, though even their raised and enlarged capacities can never be able fully to comprehend it.

13 ¶ Wherefore gird up the loins of your mind, be sober, and hope to the end, for grace that is to be brought unto you at the revelation of Jesus Christ.

Our apostle, having laid before them their high and glorious privileges in the foregoing verses, comes now to excite them to the practice of several needful and important duties in this and the following verses: The first of which is vigilance and watchfulness; preparation and readiness of mind; Gird up the loins of your mind; an allusion both to runners and waiters; to such as run in a race, and to such as wait upon their master who both gird up their clothes (which in those eastern countries they wore down to their heels) that they might not hinder or trouble them either in running or waiting. Next, to be sober, and keep up their hope steadfastly and perseveringly to the end, for that grace and salvation, for that perfection in holiness and glory, which God will certainly give us at the glorious appearing of Jesus Christ. Here note, 1. The grace and duty which they are exhorted to be found in the exercise of, and that is hope, to persevere in hope unto the end: That is a divine grace, and necessary duty, whereby a believer for Christ's sake expects and waits for all the great and good things which God has promised; but the christian at present not received. Note, 2. The direction given in order to the exercise of this grace and duty of hope, Gird up the loins of your mind. Habits of grace are altogether unprofitable to us, without they be excited by us, and stirred up in us. When we pray, when we hear, we must gird up our loins in praying, and hearing; or, in the prophet's phrase, Stir up yourselves to take hold on God. A man upon his sick bed must gird up the loins of his mind to bear his affliction, else he will never profit by it, nor answer the end of God in it. No grace can be exercised, no duty can be performed by a soul ungirded; Gird up the loins of your mind, that ye may hope, &c.

14 As obedient children, not fashioning yourselves according to the former lusts in your ignorance;

15 But as he which hath called you is holy, so be ye holy in all manner of conversation;

16 Because it is written, Be ye holy; for I am holy.

The next duty he exhorts them to, is to answer the engagements which their adoption laid them under; they were now the children of God, and as such must, 1. Be obedient to their heavenly Father, walking in the path of his commandments, and no longer according to the former lust, which they were captivated by, and enslaved unto, in the time of their ignorance, when they knew not God. And, 2. They must imitate their heavenly Father in the love and practice of universal holiness: "As he which hath called you is holy, so be ye holy." Observe, 1. Christians must make God the pattern of their holiness, and be holy as God is holy, though not as holy as God is; the command obliges to a conformity, not to an equality; as God is really holy, positively holy, strictly and exactly holy, universally holy, unchangeably holy, so must we labor to be holy both towards God and man, which is to be holy in all manner of conversation. Observe, 2. Christians are here required not only to make God the pattern of their holiness, but the motive of their holiness; be ye holy, for I am holy. Seeing our God is an holy God, therefore we that are his people must be holy also. Our apostle here represents the holiness of God both as a rule and as a motive of that holiness which should be acted by us. And whereas the apostle says, It is written be ye holy; It plainly intimates, that God has in all former ages obliged all persons, who pretend any relation to him as his children, to be holy as he is holy: though not as to equality, yet as to imitation; though not in measure and degree, yet in quality and kind. God is the original of all holiness, and the first man he created was after his own likeness; and every one that is renewed, is said to be created after God in righteousness and true holiness. What is godliness but God-likeness? And what is holiness but the conformity of our natures to the holy nature of God, and the conformity of our lives to the will of God?

17 And if ye call on the Father, who without respect of persons judgeth according to every man's work, pass the time of your sojourning here in fear;

If ye call on the Father, that is, if ye call God your Father, and call upon him by worshipping and owning of him, who without any respect of persons, or any regard had to nations, Jew or Gentile, judgeth of every man now, and will judge every man according to his works hereafter, see that you pass the time of your pilgrimage and sojourning in this world in holy and obedient fear. Learn, 1. That such as call God Father, ought to walk in obedience before him as his sons: If ye call on the Father. Learn, 2. That he whom we call Father, is, and will be our Judge, not a short-sighted, but a sharp-sighted Judge, impartial in judgment, judging all persons according to their works, and judging all works as they really are, and not as they outwardly appear to be. Learn, 3. That christians here in this world are but strangers, and their life upon earth a pilgrimage, which they are daily passing. Learn, 4. That the whole time of a christian's pilgrimage ought to be passed in an holy, cautious, reverential, and obedient fear of God. "Pass the time of your sojourning here in fear."

18 Forasmuch as ye know that ye were not redeemed with corruptible things, as silver and gold, from your vain conversation received by tradition from your fathers:

19 But with the precious blood of Christ, as a lamb without blemish and without spot.

20 Who verily was fore-ordained before the foundation of the world, but was manifest in these last times for you:

21 Who by him do believe in God that raised him up from the dead, and gave him glory, that your faith and hope might be in God.

Still our apostle is pressing christians to the love and practice of holiness, and a reverential fear of God, by fresh arguments and motives, particularly from their redemption; saying, that they could not but be sensible that they were redeemed with very costly price, not with silver and gold, which yet would ransom kings, but by the precious blood of Christ, whom the paschal lamb typified, and who was from eternity fore-ordained to the office of a Mediator, though he was not manifested in the flesh till these last days, for the good and benefit of those who by him do believe in God that raised Christ from the dead, and gloriously exalted him at his right hand, upon which account their faith and hope may safely and comfortably rest in God. Note here, 1. That thralldom, bondage, and slavery of our sinful state, before we were redeemed. Note, 2. The impotency and inability of all outward things, be they never so rich, precious, and costly, to redeem and ransom an enslaved sinner, 'Ye were not redeemed with corruptible things as silver and gold.' All the gold and silver in the world was no ransom for one soul, nay, the blood of all the creatures in the world offered up in sacrifice to the justice of God could have been no sufficient compensation. Note, 3. That the redemption of every soul cost no less than the precious blood of the Son of God, that spotless Lamb, who, by the sacrifice of his death, atoned divine displeasure. Note, 4. That God the Father fore ordained Jesus Christ his Son to this blessed office of a Redeemer before the foundation of the world, though he was not manifest in the flesh till these last times. Note, 5. That by Christ the Redeemer we are taught to know God, and to believe in him who raised Christ from the dead. Here observe, How the Socinians wreat and misapply this text, where we are said by Christ to believe in God. Thus they argue, "He by whom we believe in God, is not that God in whom we believe, because the means of faith can never be the object of faith: but Christ is he: The apostle says here by whom we believe in God, therefore Christ is not God." Ans. Christ considered in his human nature, in which he died, and was raised for us, is he by whom we believe in God, that is, own him to be able to raise us from the dead, but this hinders not his being God according to his divine nature, by which he did actually raise himself from the dead, John x. 18.

22 Seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth through the Spirit, unto unfeigned love of the brethren; see that ye love one another with a pure heart fervently;

23 Being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth for ever.

The next duty which our apostle exhorts these christians to, is the duty of brotherly love, to a gracious propensity of heart which a christian bears for Christ's sake to his neighbour, whereby he wills, and to his power procures all good for him, a brotherly affection which every true christian chiefly bears to all his fellow-members in Christ for grace sake. This duty of brotherly love is often urged and enforced by Christ and his apostles. St. Peter here tells them, that seeing by the power of Christ's Spirit, and the obedience of the gospel, they had purified themselves in some measure from self love, they should now labor to grow in the fervency and sincerity of their love one towards another. And the argument he uses to persuade them to love one another, is drawn from their relation to each other; they are all born again, and born alike; not brethren by corruptible generation only, but begotten of incorruptible seed, the word of God; therefore should they live in love together, as children of the same Father. Note here, The commendation given to the word of God, not to any inward word infused, but to the outward word preached, it is styled incorruptible seed; from whence it follows, that the ministry of the word is the ordinary mean of the new birth, and the instrumental cause of our regeneration: "Being born again not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, the word of God." Note farther, That such as are born of this incorruptible seed, ought to bear an incorruptible love to each other, as an evidence of their incorruptible and gracious nature; "See that you love one another with a pure heart fervently."

24 For all flesh is as grass, and all the glory of man as the flower of grass. The grass withereth and the flower thereof falleth away:

Our apostle closes the chapter, by setting before them the excellency of their spiritual regenerate state compared with all other excellencies and endowments whatsoever: all flesh, that is, flesh with all its glory, is a fading, dying, perishing thing; it flags like the grass, and fades like the flower. There are three excellencies in a flower; sweetness, which affects the smell; beauty, that affects the eye; softness and smoothness, which affects the touch: all these our apostle passes over, and speaks of the flower, not as flourishing, but as withering: not as springing up, but as fading away; "The grass withereth, the flower falleth away." Learn hence, That man when most flourishing, with all the ornaments of wit and wealth, beauty and honor, is fading, and near to withering. Thus David describes him, Psal. ciii; 15, 16 As for man his days are as grass; as the flower of the field, so he flourisheth; the wind passes over it, and it is gone. Though the flower be neither cut nor cropt, yet a breath of wind blasts it, and blows away the beauty of it: "All flesh is as grass, and all the glory of man as the flower of grass."

25 But the word of the Lord endureth for ever. And this is the word which by the gospel is preached unto you.

That is, the word of God, the mind of Christ, contained in, and revealed by the gospel, that abide and last for ever, and never be abrogated; the word of God is everlasting truth; it is so in its nature, and also in its effects upon the regenerate, it abideth for ever, and so doth their estate who are begotten again by it: The word of God is the incorruptible seed, or principle of regeneration; it is called the word of eternal life, because it brings those that love and obey it to eternal life, John vi. 68. Observe lastly, That the same word of God is now preached unto us, which was so highly commended by the prophets, apostles, and by Christ himself: This is that word, the same word, which by the gospel is preached unto you.

CHAPTER II.

Our apostle having, in the former chapter, made mention of their regeneration, or new birth, and taken notice of the instrumental cause of it, namely, the word of God, he comes, in the beginning of this chapter, to give several directions for our profitable hearing and receiving of the same; which having compared to milk, he shows how, and after what manner, it should be desired, tasted, and digested by us, that we may grow thereby. And accordingly he thus bespeaks us:

WHEREFORE, laying aside all malice, and all guile, and hypocrisies, and envies, and all evil-speakingings;

Here we are first directed what to lay aside, in order to our fruitful and profitable entertainment of the word of God, namely, these five sins, malice, guile, hypocrisy, envy, and evil-speaking. Whence not in general, That an sin, much more if many sins, be kept close, and lie dormant within us, they will certainly hinder the efficacy of the word upon us. As the foulness of the stomach hinders the natural digestion, till it be purged out nothing can nourish within: In like manner, our apostle here advises to purge out these pestilent lusts of malice and guile, of hypocrisy and envy, &c. before we hear the word of God, as ever we expect to be nourished with it, and grow thereby. As sin hinders good from coming to us, so it hinders the word from working good in us, particularly malice, or inveterate anger harboured in the heart; guile, or deceit in words or actions; hypocrisy, or an appearance of friendship, when the heart is otherwise affected: envy, or grieving at another's good; and evil-speaking of all kinds, by lying, by slandering, by back-biting, by detracting, all which are contrary to the great command of love, and obstructive of the word of truth, by which we are born again, but it is observable, particularly, concerning malice, and guile, and evil-speaking, that our apostle puts the note of universality to them, lay aside all malice, and all guile, and all evil-speaking; importing, that though some other sins will stick close unto us, yet not a jot of malice or guile should be found in us, at least prevailing in us, of any kind, or in any degree or measure, for one drop of this deadly poison may destroy us; therefore lay aside all malice and all guile, and all evil-speakingings, &c.

2 As new-born babes desire the sincere milk of the word, that ye may grow thereby.

St. Peter having directed us, in our preparation before we come to hear the word, and shewn the necessity of laying aside an evil frame of spirit, he now directs us what we are to do when under the word, namely, that there be found with us a spiritual appetite to it, and that we have the same longing desires after it, that the child has after the breast; As new born babes desire the sincere milk, so desire you the incorrupted word of God, that you may grow thereby. Quest. How does the new-born infant desire its natural nourishment, its mother's milk? Ans. These four ways: First, It covets it with vehement and impatient desire, nothing will so well satisfy and please it as the breast, this will quiet it when nothing else will; thus the new-born christian hungers after the word with a vehement desire, nothing will content and satisfy him, neither gold nor silver, in the absence of the word of God. Secondly, The new-born infant desires the milk from a deep sense of its inward wants, it is pinched with hunger and parched with thirst, and therefore cries for the breast; so is the christian sensible of his wants, of his want of knowledge, want of grace; "It is little, says he, that I know of myself, less of God, least of Jesus Christ! Oh! that by conversing with his word, I might know him more, and serve him better." Thirdly, The infant desires its mother's milk unmixed, as nature has prepared it without any artificial sweetening of it. Some little regard the wholesomeness of the food, but only admire the dexterity of the cook: They applaud the part of the preacher, when the word flows from the golden mouth of a celebrated orator; but the new-born christian desires the sincere milk of the word, without any composition of error, and without any such mixture of wit and eloquence as is inconsistent with the gravity and simplicity of the word they hear. Plain truths without art or varnish, may be conveyed with more warmth and vigour to the conscience, than all the charms of human eloquence from the most fluent and popular tongue, yet always remembering, that though the ministers of God must come in plainness, yet not in rudeness of speech. Fourthly, This desire of the babe after the sincere, unmixed and uncompounded milk, is always accompanied with endeavour, it hunts for the breast, and is not satisfied that the breast is in its eye, but is impatient till it sucks and draws, that nourishment may be conveyed and it grow thereby: Thus active and operative are the desires and endeavours of a sincere christian after the word of God; that which was seed to beget they find food to strengthen, they can never be satisfied without it, they cannot be satisfied with a little of it.

3 If so be ye have tasted that the Lord is gracious.

In these words our apostle declares the condition whereon our profiting, growing, and thriving by the word doth depend, namely, upon our tasting and experiencing its power, as it is the great instrumental cause both of our spiritual birth and growth. This taste is a spiritual sense of the goodness, power, and efficacy of the word, in conveying the grace of God unto our souls; in a taste there is sweetness and refreshment, but not fulness and satisfaction. Learn hence, 1. That God doth graciously sweeten the word to such a soul as doth desire sincerely to taste the sweetness of it. 2. That is but a taste of the sweetness of God and his word, which a christian partakes of in this life, satiety and satisfaction is reserved for another state.

4 To whom coming, as unto a living stone, disallowed indeed of men, but chosen of God, and precious,

5 Ye also, as lively stones, are built up a spiritual house, an holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ.

6 Wherefore also it is contained in the scripture, Behold, I lay in Sion a chief corner-stone, elect, precious: and he that believeth on him shall not be confounded.

Observe here, 1. The denomination, or title given to Christ, he is styled a living stone, and the chief corner-stone. 1. A living stone, that is, a lively stone, no dead foundation: and a life-giving stone, having not only life in himself essentially, but communicatively, imparting spiritual life to the whole building. Christ is not only a Head of authority, but a Head of vital influence to all his members; because he lives, they shall live also. 2. He is styled also the chief corner-stone, but in regard of sustentation, the corner-stone supports the whole building, the church's grace, the church's peace, the church's consolation, the church's salvation, are all upheld and maintained by him; and in regard of union, the corner-stone unites, ties, and knits the other stones together, that they should not drop out of the building. Christ alone unites the several stones of the spiritual building to himself, and one to another. And this corner-stone is of God's own immediate laying, Behold, I lay in Zion a corner-stone. Christ was first manifested and offered to the church of the Jews, and then to the rest of the world. Observe, 2. The titles given to believers. 1. They of lively stones are built a spiritual house. Believers are God's temple, dedicated to, and set apart for his special service, and also enjoying his gracious and special presence. "This is my rest for ever, says God, concerning the believer's heart; here will I dwell, for I have a delight therein." 2. They are an holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable through Christ. Learn, hence, That every christian in this life is a priest, and ought to offer up himself as a spiritual sacrifice or oblation unto God. In a sacrifice, there was a separation of the thing sacrificed from common use; the beast was separated from the rest of the flock, so must the christian be set apart from the rest of the world. There was an addition or dedication, or solemn consecration of the thing set apart to some holy and special use and purpose. Thus the christian that presents himself a living sacrifice unto God, does not only separate himself from sin, the world, and the flesh, but does addict and devote himself to God, to serve and please him, to honor and glorify him. Observe, 3. The application which believers make to Christ, in order to their being his spiritual temple, and a royal priesthood. To whom coming as unto a living stone; the particle denotes a continual motion, by which the soul gains ground, and gets nearer and nearer to Christ, they are daily coming by faith to him, and gradually advancing in the knowledge of him, and love unto him. Observe, lastly, The sweet fruit and blessed effect of their faith, whosoever believeth in him shall not be confounded; that is, not ashamed, as a person who is disappointed of his hopes and expectations, he shall not be ashamed of his choice, he shall not be ashamed of his profession, he shall never be ashamed of the cause and interest of Christ, which he has espoused, and at all times appeared for; nor of the work and service of Christ; nor of the time and pains expended in that work and service; nor shall he ever be ashamed hereafter that he never was ashamed here.

7 Unto you, therefore, which believe, he is precious :—

To you belongs the honor of being built a spiritual house upon Christ, the chief corner-stone, which renders him deservedly precious to you, and of very high estimation with you: whatever mean, low and undervaluing thoughts the wicked world have of Jesus Christ, yet he is highly esteemed by, and deservedly precious to, every believing soul; he is precious in the several relations he stands in to them, precious in regard of the great things he has done for them, precious in the rich supplies of grace he bestows upon them, and will be eternally precious to them, upon the account of those glorious mansions he has purchased and prepared for them.

—But unto them which be disobedient, the stone which the builders disallowed, the same is made the head of the corner.

8 And a stone of stumbling, and a rock of offence even to them which stumbled at the word, being disobedient: whereunto also they were appointed.

These words discover the great sin and danger of those who slight and neglect our Lord Jesus Christ, who stumble and take offence at him, either at the meanness of his person, or at the ignominy of his cross, or at the holiness and strictness of his doctrine, or at the freeness of his grace; whatever the occasion of their contempt may be, Christ will prove to them a burthensome stone, a rock against which they will split to their utter confusion; they will, in the close, bring ruin upon themselves, as a mad man do that dashes himself against a stone. Observe, next, How this contempt of Christ has prevailed in the world ever since his first coming into the world; how did the Jewish rulers, called here the builders, set him at naught; the stone which the builders disallowed and stumbled at; that is, the high rulers, whose office and duty it was to build up the church, having power in their hand to do it, but instead of building upon this corner-stone, they stumbled and took offence at him, and accordingly Christ is called a stone of stumbling, and a rock of offence; yet this does not imply that Christ was the cause of their stumbling, but only the occasion of it, the object at which they stumbled without any cause but their own wickedness; for though it be said in the next words that they were appointed thereunto, the meaning is not, that God ordained them to disobedience, for then their obedience had been impossible, and their disobedience had been no sin; but God, in his just decree, appointed that destruction and eternal perdition should be the punishment of such obstinate and disobedient persons. Learn hence, that christians have no reason to be offended at the great number of unbelievers that are in the world, and at the sight of Christ's being rejected by multitudes in the world, it having been long ago foretold in scripture that thus it would be, and consequently it ought to be no occasion of offence that thus it is, Matt. xxi. 42. Did ye never read in the scriptures, The stone which the builders rejected, is become the head of the corner?

9 But ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people; that ye should show forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvellous light.

10 Which in time past were not a people, but are now the people of God: which had not obtained mercy, but now have obtained mercy.

In these words our apostle acquaints these believing Jews, who were built upon Christ, the foundation-stone, that the same titles did now belong to them in a more excellent manner as christians, which were formerly given to their ancestors of the Jewish nation by God himself, Deut. viii. 6, 7. As the Jews of old were a chosen generation, a kingdom of priests, an holy nation, a peculiar people; that is, they were a people chosen by God, before all other people whatsoever, to bear his name, and to bear witness to his truth; they were a people in covenant with him, and so inexpressibly dear unto him, that he that hurt them touched the apple of God's eye; in like manner these Jews, and proselyted Gentiles of the dispersion who were converted to christianity, have all the forecited titles belonging to them. A chosen generation, by effectual vocation separated from the world to the service of Christ, whose name they bear. A royal priesthood, that is, kings and priests: kings to reign with him, and priests to offer spiritual sacrifices to him. An holy nation: so are all the professors of christianity federally holy, and for that reason all the christian churches called out of the world, and dedicated to the service of Christ, are styled saints in all St. Paul's epistles. A peculiar people, in covenant with God, purchased by the blood of Christ. Next the apostle declares the end of all these distinguished favors being granted to them; namely, that they might show forth the virtues, that is, publish and proclaim the wisdom, power, goodness, and mercy, the righteousness and truth of God, who hath called them out of the darkness of sin, ignorance and misery, into the marvellous light of knowledge, faith, holiness, and comfort. Lastly, To enhance their thankfulness for all these distinguishing favors, he puts them in mind of what they were before their conversion to christianity; in times past they were not a people, that is, not a people beloved of God, and in covenant with him; the Lord having given the Jews a bill of divorce, and said to them, Loammi, Ye are not my people, Hos. i 9. but now, upon their believing in Christ, they were restored to all their church-privileges, by the special mercy and grace of God. Learn hence, that till persons subject themselves to the government of Christ, and become obedient to the gospel, they are all in God's account no people; to live without Christ in the world is a life worse than death. Learn, 2. That when a people are brought near to God by Jesus Christ, and partake of all the rich and invaluable blessings and privileges of the gospel, they are exceedingly indebted for all to the rich mercy and free grace of God. Which had not obtained mercy, but now have obtained mercy.

11 ¶ Dearly beloved, I beseech you as strangers and pilgrims, abstain from fleshly lusts, which war against the soul;

Observe here, 1. A dehortation, Abstain from fleshly lusts. Quest. What is here meant by lusts? Ans. Lust is either habitual or actual; habitual or original lust is the corruption and depravation of the faculties of the soul, an aversion to every thing that is good, and a proneness to evil: actual lust is original sin put in motion; by fleshly lusts understand in particular those lusts which are conversant about sensual and fleshly objects. Quest. But what is it to abstain from fleshly lusts? Ans. It implies a total forbearance of all wilful sins: and at all times there is great difference between temperance and abstinence; the temperate man eats little, the abstinent nothing at all; every one then that would be accounted a christian, is to account it his great duty and interest to abstain from all fleshly lusts. Observe 2. The arguments which our apostle here makes use of to persuade christians to abstain from all fleshly lusts: the first is implied or included in the compellation. Dearly beloved, not of the apostle only, or chiefly, but of God, Ἀγαπητοί, the same word that Almighty God makes use of in expressing his love to his dear Son: as if he had said, "You that are so dearly beloved of God, look you to it that you abstain from what you know will be displeasure to him." The second argument is drawn from their present state and condition in the world; ye are strangers and pilgrims in the world, and therefore should act as strangers, who are not wont to be over much affected with objects that they see abroad, in their travels, no more should you. The third argument is taken from the peril and danger of these fleshly lusts to our precious souls, they war against the soul; that is, they war against the purity of the soul; they war against the dignity of the soul; against the peace of the soul; against the liberty of the soul; yea, against the life of the soul.

12 Having your conversation honest among the Gentiles; that whereas they speak against you as evil-doers, they may by your good works which they shall behold, glorify God in the day of visitation.

From the apostle's dehortation in the former verse, he comes to an exhortation in this, and the duty exhorted to is strict godliness, or holiness in all manner of conversation, Having your conversation honest; it is not a single action, but our general course and conversation, that denotes us either good or bad; and the word translated honest, signifies fair and amiable, beautiful and adorning, the doing nothing that is unseemly, or a blemish either to our person or profession; christians should not only live free from evil, but as much as may be from the very suspicion of evil. It is added, among the Gentiles, that is, amongst the idolatrous nations and people, who had not received the christian faith: great care must be always taken by the professors of christianity, that they do nothing which may increase the prejudices of the wicked world against religion and the ways of godliness, but remember that they are our watchful observers and bold censurers, and accordingly, endeavour that by a regular piety, a strict sobriety, a diffusive and extensive charity, we may render religion venerable to the world, and stop the mouth of slander as much as in us lies, by cutting off occasion from them that seek occasion. Observe farther, The apostle exhorts them to have their conversation honest among the Gentiles: he doth not say religious, though that be included, but outwardly square, strictly just and honest: this is that which the world judges us by; vain are all our pretences to piety, if we fail in honesty; we must make conscience of the duties of the second table, as an argument of our sincerity, and as an ornament to our profession. Observe next, What was then, and is now the lot and portion of good men, namely, to be evil spoken of as evil-doers: Whereas they speak evil of you as evil-doers: Christ himself did not escape the scourge of the tongue, he was charged with gluttony, blasphemy, imposture, with having a devil, and with working miracles by the power of the devil; and it is sufficient for the disciple to be as his master was; yet mark, they speak evil of you, says the apostle, as evil-doers: to be an evil-doer is miserable, but not to be spoken of as an evil-doer, Nemo miser sensu alieno, no man is miserable in another man's evil opinion of him: a bad report, much less a bad opinion, makes no body a bad man; if it be enough to censure and accuse, who can be innocent? Observe again, The apostle exhorts these believing Jews to a conspicuous fruitfulness in good works, that they may by your good works, which they shall behold: implying that christianity sets men to work; (though we shall never be saved for our works, yet without working we can never be saved) and that good works may and ought to be so done, that men may behold them; though we must not do good works to be seen of men, yet we ought to do good works that we may be seen of men, Mat. v. 16. how else can men be patterns of good works, as they are required, Tit. ii. 7. if their good works be not conspicuous, and exposed to the world? Observe lastly, The blessed fruit and effect of good works, they cause such as behold them to glorify God in the day of visitation. This may be understood two ways, 1. With respect to believers, your good works will cause the wicked world to glorify God in the day of your visitation, that is, in the day of your persecution and affliction; though they afflict and persecute you, yet they shall glorify God when they behold your faith, your patience, your constancy in and under sufferings, in the day of your visitation. 2. With respect to the wicked; and so the day of visitation is the day of their conversion; and then the exhortation is to be so conspicuous in good works, that their adversaries may praise and glorify God, when he shall visit them with his grace, and draw them by his gospel, to believe in his Son: the day of saving conversion is a day of gracious visitation.

13 ¶ Submit yourselves to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake: whether it be to the king as supreme;

14 Or unto governors, as unto them that are sent by him for the punishment of evil-doers, and for the praise of them that do well.

15 For so is the will of God, that with well-doing ye may put to silence the ignorance of foolish men:

Our apostle having exhorted them in general to take care that their conversation be honest among the Gentiles, he now descends to particular duties, which he advises them to be very exemplary in the performance of. And the first is, in their subjection to governors and government; submit yourselves says he, to every civil ruler, both supreme and subordinate. Where observe, 1. How the apostle calls magistracy and civil government though originally of divine institution an ordinance of man: First, As to the end of it, being appointed and ordained for the good and benefit of man. Secondly, In reference to the kind of it, every nation having a liberty to choose what kind and form of government human prudence shall direct them to, as most agreeable to, and commodious for the people. Observe, 2. The quality of that obedience and subjection which is to be given unto magistrates, it must be for the Lord's sake, that is, in obedience to the command of God, and with an eye at the honor and glory of God. Christianity is no enemy to the civil rights of princes, it requires subjection for conscience' sake, Prov. viii. 15. By me, says God, kings reign; some read it, for me, kings reign; both are true: princes then hold not their crowns either from the pope or from the people, to be kicked off by the one, or to be plucked off by the other, at their pleasure: Submit yourselves, says our apostle, to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake. Observe, 3. The reasons assigned why magistrates should be thus subjected and submitted to; namely, 1. Because they are sent by God, for the punishment of evil-doers, and the praise of them that do well: the magistrate's office is to punish evil-doers; the fear of the magistrate's sword awes many men more than the fear of God's hand. If some men were not gods among them, many men would be devils among them; there would be no living among those who fear not the invisible God in heaven, if there were not some visible gods on earth to fear. 2. Because God will, by this their subjection given to magistrates and governors, silence, or as the word signifies, put a muzzle upon the mouth of the foolish and unreasonable men, who rage against his people, as if they were enemies to order and government: by this kind of well-doing in particular, namely, by subjection and obedience to rulers in the Lord, and for the Lord's sake, we put to silence the foolishness of wicked men.

16 As free, and not using your liberty for a cloke of maliciousness, but as the servants of God.

Here our apostle answers an objection which he foresaw the christian Jews ready to make against this duty of subjection, namely, "that they were a free people, as Jews, and ought to preserve their liberty, and own no governors that were not of their own nation; and as christians they looked upon themselves as Christ's freemen." Whereas christian liberty exempts no man from the duty of civil subjection; the liberty Christ has purchased for believers, is a freedom from sin and satan, from sinful servitude; Christ makes all his subjects free, but it is with a freedom from spiritual bondage, and not from civil subjection; consequently to plead our christian liberty in bar to that obedience which we owe our superiors and governors, either civil or ecclesiastical, is to use our liberty for a cloak of maliciousness; and as a covering for that disobedience which is hateful to God, and injurious to mankind, as being destructive of order and government, which is the beauty and the bond of human society.

17 Honor all men. Love the brotherhood, Fear God, Honor the king.

Here are four very important duties recommended to us in this short verse. 1. To honor all men; no man is to be despised by us, but every man duly respected, according to his place and station. There is a common honor, and a tribute of civil respect, payable to every man, though some men forfeit it, by acting below men; a vile person is contemptible, though great; bare greatness is no guard against contempt; but the rage of a good man cannot obscure his worth, nor hinder him from true honor in the hearts, and from the tongues of wise men; honor all men, but especially good men. 2. Love the brotherhood; as there is a general respect due to all men, so there is a special love due to the brethren; to all the saints of what nation and country soever, of what estate and condition soever, high and low, rich and poor, of what judgment and opinion soever; therefore the apostle calls upon us to love the brotherhood, the whole fraternity and society of christians, by what unhappy names and characters of reproach soever distinguished; there is no better evidence of the life of grace in ourselves, than the love of grace in another. 3. Fear God; that is live in a religious dread of his name, as a glorious God, and a gracious Father: have a reverential awe and fear of his majesty immoveably fixed and implanted in your souls; to the production of which a double apprehension is necessary, namely, the inconceivable majesty of God, and the miserable vileness of the sinners. 4. Honor the king; this duty consists in reverencing their persons, in obeying their lawful commands, in a cheerful payment of their dues, in praying affectionately for them, and in praising God for the blessing of their government. Nero, the worst of kings, and the persecutor of christians was now on the throne, yet the command is express to honor him: and if we consider the words in their connexion and conjunction one with another, Fear God, and honor the king, we learn, that religion and the fear of God, do best qualify persons to be good subjects; this is the true and steady principle of loyalty, that obedience to governors that is lasting, is for conscience' sake to the command of God; where there is no fear of God in the heart, there will be no regard to the command of God in the life. Lastly, these words may be considered as in their conjunction, so in their order in which they stand: first, Fear God, and then Honor the king; intimating, that the fear of God must be the rule and guide of our subjection unto governors; it is no disparagement to our superiors to be under God, and so to be looked upon by their subjects; let such as pretend to fear God, show it, by being loyal subjects; and let such as would be thought most loyal subjects, evidence it by their awful and religious fear of God.

18 ¶ Servants be subject to your masters with all fear, not only to the good and gentle, but also to the froward.

19 For this is thank-worthy, if a man for conscience toward God endure grief, suffering wrongfully.

20 For what glory is it, if when ye be buffeted for your faults, ye shall take it patiently? but if, when ye do well, and suffer for it, ye take it patiently? this is acceptable with God.

Observe here, 1. The order and method of our apostle in the exhortations given to christians in this epistle; he first excites them to the general practice of their duty, and to be holy in all manner of conversation; and next binds upon them the performance of relative, and particular duties. In the foregoing verses he insisted upon the duties of subjects towards magistrates and governors; in this verse he propounds the duty of servants towards their masters. Thus let christian servants be subject to their masters, whether christian or heathen, giving due reverence and respect, not only to such as are kind and gentle, but to such as are froward and wrathful. Learn hence, that such as are in the lowest condition, being servants, yea the meanest of servants, may glorify God in that condition. Learn, 2. The servants, to the end that they may glorify God in their servile condition, must be subject to their masters with all fear: yea, even to wicked and froward masters: because the ground of their obedience is the will and command of God, which binds them to their duty to their masters, though their masters fail and fall short in their duty to them. Observe, 2. The several arguments made use of by St. Peter to enforce this duty upon servants. 1. This is highly acceptable and well pleasing unto God, and will procure a gracious reward. We shall certainly receive a glorious reward from God, for what we suffer wrongfully and unjustly from men. This is thank-worthy, and this is acceptable with God. 2. From the indecency of the contrary; because it is no virtue, but a just punishment, for evil-doers to suffer for their evil deeds: though to suffer patiently when we suffer justly is praise-worthy, yet not comparable with the praise of suffering patiently when we suffer unjustly. To do well, and then to suffer patiently, as for ill-doing, will meet with a gracious, yea, with a glorious reward. "What glory is it if when ye be buffeted for your faults, ye shall take it patiently? But if when ye do well, and suffer for it, ye take it patiently; this is acceptable with God."

21 For even hereunto were ye called; because Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an example that we should follow his steps:

Observe here, Two farther arguments to excite and move christians to patience under unjust sufferings. 1. Hereunto, says the apostle, are ye called; that is, by your profession of christianity; religion obliges you to suffer, and to suffer with patience; you must bear the cross, before you wear the crown: to this you are called, and with this you have been acquainted. 2. You should not think much to suffer patiently, when you suffer unjustly, because Christ, your Captain and Guide, did so before you: he was the most meek and patient endurer that ever was, of the greatest and most wrongful sufferings that ever were. Note here, That although the example of our Saviour be here propounded to us with a special regard to the particular virtue of patience under unjust sufferings, yet it ought to be extended to all graces and duties, and improved as a pattern for the love and practice of universal holiness; Leaving us an ex- ample, that we should follow his steps: the practice and example of the holy Jesus, in all ordinary acts of his obedience, ought to be propounded by all the disciples and followers as the grand pattern of our imitation: it being a safe and unerring example, an easy and familiar example, a powerful and encouraging example, and the most instructive and universal example, that ever was given to the world, being a most absolute and perfect pattern of holiness.

22 Who did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth;

23 Who, when he was reviled, reviled not again: when he suffered, he threatened not; but committed himself to him that judgeth righteously:

24 Who his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree, that we, being dead to sin, should live unto righteousness: by whose stripes ye were healed.

Our apostle proceeds to represent and recommend our Lord Jesus Christ as a mirror and perfect pattern of patience under the sharpest sufferings: he acquaints us, 1. With his pure and spotless innocency; he did no sin, therefore could not suffer for doing evil; No guile was found in his mouth, neither in his expressions, nor in his actions; he never did ill either in word or deed, but was a perfect pattern of unblameable holiness. Next our apostle recommends to us his invincible patience under all his sufferings, telling us, that although Christ was most shamefully reviled, having the dirt of a thousand scandals, slanders, reproaches, and blasphemies cast upon him, yet he reviled not again, not giving them one ill word for all: and when he suffered all manner of injuries and indignities at once, being buffeted, spit upon, crowned with thorns, and crucified, though he had power sufficient to look them into nothing, to frown them into hell, yet he threatened them not with the least revenge, but prayed for his murderers, and committed his cause to a just and righteous God; "He threatened not, but committed himself to him that judgeth righteously." Blessed Jesus! help us to imitate thy patience under sufferings and reproaches, and never let us be found rendering to any evil for evil, or railing for railing, but contrariwise, blessing for cursing, courtesies for injuries, affability for affronts; let us at no time be overcome of evil, but labor at all times to overcome evil with good. Note lastly, how our apostle takes notice, that the sufferings of Christ were not only exemplary but satisfactory; he did not only suffer patiently, but meritoriously: "He his own self bare our sins in his own body upon the tree." Note here, 1. What was born, our sin, that is, the guilt and punishment of our sin. 2. Who bare it, Christ his own self. This imports, 1. The singularity of his sufferings, he had no partner nor sharer with him in what he bare, he trod the wine press alone. 2. The sufficiency of his sufferings, he himself bare our sins; he who was God-man, the Lamb of God, and as such took away the sin of the world. 3. How he bare it, in his own body upon the tree; that is, in his human nature upon the cross; Christ suffered in his soul as well as in his body, and both were satisfactory to divine justice; but his bodily sufferings are only mentioned, because these were most visible. 4. The great ends of his sufferings, namely, expiation of sin, and mortification of sin; our sins were expiated on the tree by Christ's suffering for us in his own body; and by his death he also purchased virtue for mortifying sin in us, and for quickening us unto holiness of life, that, as he died for sin, we should die unto sin, and as he rose again and revived, never to die more, so should we, being dead unto sin, live no longer therein; "he himself bare our sins in his own body upon the tree; that we being dead to sin, should live unto righteousness, by whose stripes," that is, by whose expiatory sufferings, we are healed; the wounds made in our souls by the guilt and power of sin, are mercifully and meritoriously healed; the guilt of sin is pardoned, the power of sin subdued, and all the invaluable fruits and benefits of the Redeemer's death obtained. Thanks be to God for Jesus Christ.

25 For ye were as sheep going astray; but are now returned unto the Shepherd and Bishop of your souls.

Observe here, 1. The state and condition in which both Jews and Gentiles were found before their conversion to christianity, they were like sheep going astray and lost: wandering in the ways of sin and unbelief, to their threatened ruin and destruction. Observe, 2. The tender care of Christ, that great and good shepherd, in bringing home these lost sheep upon his shoulders, (Isa. xl. 11.) into his fold of the church; Ye are now returned to the shepherd, to him that will feed you in green pastures, and preserve you to his heavenly kingdom: the shepherd gives life to his sheep, and also lays down his life for his sheep. Observe, 3. The additional title given to Christ, he is styled the bishop of our souls; he that with tenderness, care, and diligence, doth inspect and visit all his charge; he is the universal Bishop, the Bishop of bishops, who has the charge of all the flocks, and of the shepherds too, and to whom all bishops and shepherds must become accountable. God Almighty give them all such grace to be faithful, such wisdom to be prudent, that love to him-self, that zeal for Christ, that tenderness for souls, such meekness and humility, such patience and charity, such mortification and self-denial, as become persons of their holy character and profession; always remembering, that the salvation of one precious soul, for which the great Shepherd died, is infinitely worth the most indefatigable labors of their whole lives: that when the chief Shepherd shall appear, they may receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away. Amen.

CHAPTER III.

LIKEWISE, ye wives, be in subjection to your own husbands; that if any obey not the word, they also may without the word be won by the conversation of the wives:

2 While they behold your chaste conversation coupled with fear:

Our apostle having, in the foregoing chapter, entered upon an exhortation to the practice of relative duties, particularly of subjects towards their rulers, and of servants towards their masters, he continues here his exhortation to husbands and gives in the former part of this chapter, beginning first with the wives' duty, (as did St Paul, in all his epistles,) because their duty of subjection is the most hard and difficult duty; "Likewise, ye wives, be in subjection to your own husbands." Observe, here, 1. The duty enjoined, subjection, that is, a loving and delightful obedience to the husband, owing of, and submitting to his authority, in compliance with the command of God. Observe, 2. The persons from whom and to whom this subjection is due, from every wife to her own husband, believer or unbeliever, christian or infidel; it is not lawful, upon any pretence whatever, for the wife to cast off this duty, which, by the law of her creation, and the express command of God, is bound upon her. Observe, 3. One especial reason assigned why such wives as have unbelieving, wicked, and unconverted husbands, should take particular care to express that fear and reverence toward God, that subjection and obedience, that chastity and conjugal affection towards their husbands, which the word of God calls for; namely that such husbands, as obey not the word, may without the word (preached) be won to the faith, by observing the efficacy and power of the word in the conversation of the wives. Learn hence, That the wives' holy and humble, pious and prudent, meek and patient, chaste and unsuspected conversation before God, and the world, does recommend not only their persons to the love and esteem of their husbands, but also their faith and holy religion, (which produces such good fruits,) to their approbation and choice; "if any obey not the word, they may without the word be won by the conversation of the wives."

3 Whose adorning, let it not be that outward adorning of plaiting the hair, and of wearing of gold, or of putting on of apparel;

4 But let it be the hidden man of the heart, in that which is not corruptible, even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price.

Our apostle's next advice, here given to wives, is concerning their attire; this is laid down, first, negatively what it should not be, not an outward adorning, attended with great curiosity, and exactness in dressing the body with plaited hair, gold chains, gay and gaudy apparel, and such like. Where note, That plaited hair, gold chains, and costly attire, were then the attire of lewd women, whores only, and chiefly, were so decked and adorned, and therefore absolutely forbidden to the christian women by our apostle; but, when such attire ceases to be a mark of such distinction, it may be worn by christian women, provided it be done without pride, and without too great expence both of time and treasure: always remembering that gravity in apparel, and wearing such address as is soon put on, is most honorable, and best becoming christian women. "I had rather, says one, go like the wild Indians than have those thousands of hours to answer for, which some have spent between the glass and the comb." Observe here, that this text doth not absolutely forbid the wearing of ornaments, or costly apparel, by such persons whose quality will answer it, but only forbids pride and vanity, affectation and ostentation in the wearing of them; it is not only lawful to cover the body, but to adorn the body; Abraham had never sent ear-rings and bracelets to Rebecca, had they been sinful in their use; to wear such things beyond our purse and place, and to make ourselves or others poor by making ourselves fine, is very sinful, but otherwise lawful. Observe next, Our apostle's affirmative precept for the woman's adorning, with the reasons of it, ver. 4. "But let it be the hidden man of the heart, &c." Where note, 1. What must be apparelled and adorned, the hidden man of the heart, that is, the soul which wants both covering and adorning as well as the body, sin having made both naked to their shame. Note, 2. With what the hidden man of the heart must be apparelled, not with fine clothes, they will not cover a naked soul, but with the sanctifying graces of the spirit of God, with humility and meekness, with piety and prudence, which ornaments will never wax old, nor grow out of fashion, as others do, and are also of precious esteem with God himself, they are in the sight of God of great price; These are virtues in themselves, and render the possessors of them truly valuable in the sight and esteem of God. Upon the whole then, it evidently appears, that the negation here is not absolute, but comparative: as if the apostle had said, "God will have the hidden man of your heart adorned with grace, and delights more to see that, than your bodies adorned with precious jewels and costly apparel; and accordingly, if women affect finery, and would appear beautiful, let them choose the best ornaments, those of the mind and heart, which will attract the eye of God towards them, rather than those external ones, which serve only to draw man's eye to an admiration of them."

5 For after this manner in the old time the holy women also, who trusted in God, adorned themselves, being in subjection unto their own husbands:

6 Even as Sarah obeyed Abraham, calling him lord; whose daughters ye are as long as ye do well, and are not afraid with any amazement.

Our apostle in these two verses enforces the exhortation and advice given to women in the foregoing verses, namely, to attire themselves with outward modesty and inward meekness, by a twofold argument: 1. From the example of holy women in general under the Old Testament, whose praise is in the Scripture, not for the external adorning of the body, but for their affiance and trust in God, and their subjection paid to their own husbands. Here note, 1. That holiness, or the duties of the first table, are required of women as well as of men: and God accepts holiness in them as well as in men, the holy women. Note, 2. That all holy women of old did, and always ought to make conscience of their duty to their husbands, particularly of subjection, that so good an example may be given by them, and taken from them, for others to do the like; the virtue of good example is lasting, it may do good many years after the example is given; the example of these holy women had a fresh power to do good many thousand years after it was given, and will still have to the world's end. 1 Another argument is taken from the example of Sarah, who meekly obeyed Abraham, acknowledging him to be her lord; the daughters of whose faith, and the heirs of whose blessing, such wives will appear and prove themselves to be, who do as Sarah did, not suffering themselves by any fears or terrors to be diverted from, nor by any fits of passion and grief, to be disturbed in the performance of that duty which God requires, and the husband expects; Even as Sarah obeyed Abraham, calling him Lord. Observe here, 1. That the faithful practice, and conscientious discharge of domestic and relative duties is much taken notice of by God, and had in remembrance with him, particularly the wife's duty, faithfully discharged to the froward husband, is and shall be had in everlasting remembrance with God. Observe, 2. That the same duty and reverence, the same objection and obedience which Sarah gave to Abraham, is due and payable to every husband, else the apostle's argument is of no force. Some might say, Abraham was a great man: Ans. True, but Sarah obeyed him as her husband, as all wives ought to do, because the command of God requires honor and reverence to be given to all husbands, as husbands. Observe lastly, With what great and wonderful goodness and clemency the Lord is pleased to overlook the failings and infirmities of his upright servants. We find in Sarah's story, Gen. xviii. that she spake very unhandsomely and laughed indecently, when the angel came and told her she should have a son, but all that is passed by in silence, and that one good word she gave her husband, calling him lord, is mentioned here by St Peter to her eternal honor; the Lord has a gracious respect to a little pure gold, though mingled with much dross, and in a great heap of sin: if he can espy, he will accept of, a little spark of pure grace: O Lord, thou wilt not bring our infirmities and slips to account against us, nor rigidly reckon with us for the same, if our hearts be upright with thee; make us then sound in thy statutes, that we may not be ashamed.

7 Likewise, ye husbands, dwell with them according to knowledge, giving honor unto the wife, as unto the weaker vessel, and as being heirs together of the grace of life; that your prayers be not hindered.

Next our apostle proceeds to direct and exhort husbands to the practice of their respective duties: the general and comprehensive duty of the husband here mentioned is cohabitation, under which all matrimonial duties are contained; Dwell with your wives according to knowledge, that is, as becomes wise and understanding men, that well understand their duty, and, as the rule of christianity directs, giving just honor and due respect unto them, and exercising great tenderness towards them. Next observe, The reasons subjoined to enforce this duty upon husbands: 1. Because wives are the weaker vessels, subject to infirmities, and more liable to contempt; therefore their husbands should contribute their wisdom and authority to support their honor, and preserve them, from being despised either by children or servants. 2. Because wives are not only co-partners with their husbands in their temporal good things, but also co-heirs of saving grace with them, Heirs together of the grace of life. 3. Because otherwise their prayers one with, and one for another, would be obstructed and disturbed, That your prayers be not hindered. Note here, That all sinful walking in general, but discord and discontent between husband and wife in particular, doth exceedingly hinder prayer, and it oftentimes hinders from the very act of prayer, that the duty is laid aside; it flats and deadens our spirits, and straitens our hearts in prayers, and it hinders the effect, fruit, and success of our prayers; it makes persons in that condition, that they have no heart to come before God, nor care to lift up their faces to him. From the whole learn, That it ought to be the mutual care of married couples so to order all their carriage towards each other, that in their houses they hinder not any holy duties; to hinder the practice of religion is repugnant to the great ends of this relation; some hinder by their wickedness, others by their discontent and frowardness; take we care that neither the husband nor wife's heart be deadened, nor their heart damped to holy duties by either of their sinful or froward behaviour; that family will be little in praying that is much in squabbling and contending one with another.

8 ¶ Finally, be ye all of one mind, having compassion one of another; love as brethren, be pitiful, be courteous;

9 Not rendering evil for evil, or railing for railing: but contrariwise blessing; knowing that ye are thereunto called, that ye should inherit a blessing.

10 For he that will love life, and see good days, let him refrain his tongue from evil, and his lips that they speak no guile;

11 Let him eschew evil, and do good: let him seek peace and ensue it.

12 For the eyes of the Lord are over the righteous, and his ears are open unto their prayers; but the face of the Lord is against them that do evil.

13 And who is he that will harm you, if ye be followers of that which is good?

Our apostle having finished his exhortation to relative duties, namely, of husbands and wives, masters and servants, magistrates and subjects, he now enters upon another subject, namely, that of sufferings, showing a prudential way and manner how to avoid sufferings, that they may not come upon us; and next, how to avoid impatience under sufferings, if it be the will of God that they do come upon us. The former of these is spoken to in the verses now before us, in which he exhorts us to practise all those virtues which are apt to reconcile and gain the affections of men towards us, particularly he exhorts to unity and concord. Be all of one mind, to sympathize one with another in and under sufferings, and to bear with one another's infirmities, to be courteous towards all, sweet and affable in our demeanor, provided our courtesy be neither a snare to ourselves, nor an encouragement to others in their sins, abstaining from all injuries not provocations, from all revenge both in act and in desire, and reviling them that rail against us, but giving good words for bad ones, For we are hereunto called that we should inherit a blessing; that is, Christ by his gospel hath called, and by his example encouraged us to do, that we may be blessed. Next observe, That to encourage us to the perpetual practice of these virtues, our apostle assures us, that thereby we should most effectually consult the safety and comfort of our lives: For he that loveth life, that is, quietness and peace, which is the comfort of life, the likeliest way to obtain it is, to keep his tongue from speaking evil of others, and his lips from uttering falsehood and deceit; plainly intimating, that it is men's unbridled tongues which bring most of their troubles upon them. He advises also to eschew evil, to avoid and to abhor every thing that is vile and sinful; and to do good, that is, all the good we can to all men; to seek peace, and ensure it, that is, to depart sometimes from our own right to obtain peace, and to follow hard after it, though it flies before us. And farther, our apostle assures us, that this innocency of conversation is not only the way to gain the friendship of man, but to obtain the favor of God, and to engage his providence for our protection, "For the eyes of the Lord are upon the righteous, and his ears are open to their cry;" as if they had said, "The eye of God's special care will be continually watching over you for good, to save you from unreasonable men, and he will hear your prayers in all your distresses; and the face of the Lord, his angry countenance will be against them that wrong you, and do evil to you, to return it upon their own heads." So that the sum of all is, that an innocent and harmless, a quiet, peaceable and obliging deportment, doth naturally tend to preserve us from evil, and from evil men; for who is he that can be so unnatural and ungrateful as to harm us, if we be followers of that which is good? that is, if we be civil and obliging to them, they cannot find it in their hearts to be injurious and unkind to us. "Who is he that will harm you, if ye be followers of that which is good?" Here note, That the apostle doth not absolutely say none will harm us, but he speaks of it as so very unreasonable and improbable a thing, that we may presume it will not ordinarily and often happen: but not that good men are obnoxious to harm; the most unblemished and shining virtue will not at all times, and in all cases be exempt from injury and ill treatment; but following of that which is good doth in its own nature tend to secure us from the malice and mischief of men, and very frequently does it, and is the best and most effectual means in order to it: he must love mischief for mischief's sake, that will be mischievous to him who never offered him any occasion, or gave him any provocation; therefore let us never be weary of well doing seeing doing good to men is ordinarily a security against injuries from men, by recommending us to the favor and protection of God, and to the esteem and good-will of mankind; none shall harm them that do good, for all harm shall tend to their good.

14 ¶ But, and if ye suffer for righteousness' sake, happy are ye: and be not afraid of their terror, neither be troubled:

As if the apostle had said, "Though following that which is good be, generally speaking, a sure and certain way to keep you from harm, yet should it so happen, that notwithstanding all your piety and prudence, you should suffer for well-doing, ye are happy, and not miserable; therefore be not afraid of their terrors and threatenings, neither be ye troubled for what they can afflict upon you." Note hence, 1. That to suffer affliction and persecution for righteousness' sake, doth not hinder, but further our happiness; If ye suffer for righteousness' sake, happy are ye, for so suffered your Saviour that went before you. Note, 2. That when God calls us forth to suffer for righteousness' sake, we must fortify ourselves against all fear; no terrors must trouble us, no apprehended dangers or difficulties must dismay us; Be not afraid of their terror, neither be troubled.

15 But sanctify the Lord God in your hearts:—

This phrase in scripture imports, 1. A firm belief of God's almighty power, that he can protect from sufferings: and a full alliance in his goodness and providence, that he will do it, if it be good for us. 2. It is from the heart to own and believe the truth of all that God delivers in his word by way of promise to his people, and by way of threatening to their enemies that his eyes are over the righteous and his face against them that do evil. 3. To sanctify the Lord God in our hearts, is always to maintain upon our minds such an holy fear, and awful reverence of God, as will effectually prevail upon us to dread more the displeasure of God, than any thing we can suffer at the hand of man. Learn hence, 1. That when sufferings are approaching, we ought to strengthen our hearts against all fears of suffering, by putting our trust in God. 2. That by this trust and confidence in God in a suffering hour, we do eminently sanctify the Lord God in our hearts, Isa. viii. 13. "Sanctify the Lord of hosts himself, and let him be your fear and your dread."

—And be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you with meekness and fear:

As if the apostle had said, "If you be christians indeed, you are not without hope, an hope of everlasting bliss and happiness, which will infinitely recompense you hereafter for all the hard things which you suffer for the sake of christianity here; and forasmuch as this your hope is not in vain and groundless expectation, but a rational hope, Be always ready to render a reason of that hope that is in you, with meekness and fear." Learn hence, 1. That the christian's hope is a rational hope, he has a reason to hope for what he hopes, his hope is well grounded upon the promise of God, upon the purchase of Christ, and upon the operations of the Holy Spirit quickening him by its renovation, leading him by its manuduction, actuating him by its influence, animating him in his devotions by its assistances, by being the Author of all that grace that is in him, and of all that good that is done by him. Learn, 2. That it is a christian's duty to be always ready to render a reason of this hope, when the glory of God, the honor of religion, and the good of others, do require it. Learn, 3. That this must not be done with vanity and ostentation, but with meekness and fear; "Be always ready to render a reason of the hope that is in you, with meekness and fear."

16 Having a good conscience; that, whereas they speak evil of you as evil-doers, they may be ashamed that falsely accuse your good conversation in Christ.

17 For it is better, if the will of God be so, that ye suffer for well-doing than for evil-doing.

Here our apostle adds his advice to christians, that they silence and put to shame their adversaries, by their works as well as by their words, by their holy conversation, together with their rational disputations; he required them in the former verse to be always ready to make a profession of their faith, and to render a reason of their hope: here he bids them confute gainsayers by a good conversation, and in order thereunto, to keep continually an innocent mind, and a clear conscience, pure from guile, and clear of guilt: "having a good conscience, that such as speak evil of you as evildoers may be ashamed." Note here, 1. That let the servants of Christ be never so innocent in their lives, and circumspect in their carriage, yet there are those that will censure them as bad men, and slander them as evil-doers. Note, 2. That a good conscience, accompanied with a good conversation, is the most effectual mean to stop the mouth of slander, and to put such as accuse us falsely to shame. Note, 3. That when sufferings and persecutions do come, after all, the consideration that we suffer not for evil but for well-doing, will be a sufficient support and consolation to us. It is better, if God will have us suffer, that it be for well-doing: better for us, but worse for our persecutors; for now the body only suffers, while the soul is free.

18 For Christ, also, hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit:

These words are brought in as a strong argument, why christians that suffer wrongfully should bear it patiently; it was our Saviour's own case, he that had perfect innocence and unspotted righteousness, suffered in the severest manner, for us that were unrighteous, that he might reconcile us to God, being put to death in the flesh, that is, in our human nature, but quickened by the Spirit, or raised to life again by the power of his Godhead; it doth therefore well become all his followers cheerfully to undergo all manner of sufferings for him, which they meet with in their duty to him. Note here, 1. Christ did not barely suffer for our good, but he suffered in our stead: he is not only said to suffer for us, but to suffer for our sins, that is, the punishment of our sins; for no man was ever said to suffer for sin that did not undergo and endure the punishment of sin. As the sin offering under the law is called an offering for sin, because it did expiate the guilt of sin, by dying in the place and stead of the offender: in like manner, when the death of Christ is called an offering for sin, what can it import, but that he suffered to make atonement for sin in our place and stead? The just for the unjust; If these words do not imply the substitution of Christ as our surety, and his sufferings the punishment due to our sins, what words can express it? Note, 2. That the great end of Christ's bitter death and bloody sufferings was, to bring all those for whom he died unto God: now Christ's bringing us to God imports our apostacy from him, our inability to return to him; that sin unsatisfied for, which was the great bar to keep us from him, is mercifully removed by him, and that our chief happiness consists in the enjoyment of him.

—Being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit:

19 ¶ By which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison;

20 Which sometime were disobedient, when once the long-suffering of God waited in the days of Noe, while the ark was a preparing, wherein few, that is, eight souls, were saved by water.

As if St. Peter had said, "Though Christ suffered for our sins, and was put to death in his human nature, or flesh, yet he was quickened and made alive by the Spirit, in which, or by which Spirit he went and preached to the spirits in prison, which in the days of Noe were hardened into sin and disobedience, whilst the long-suffering of God endured them, and waited for their repentance no less than an hundred and twenty years, while the ark was making and preparing, and Noe preached to them; yet so impenitent were they to the very last, that only eight were saved in the ark." Note here, 1. That the old world before the flood were in prison whilst here on earth, being in bondage and captivity to sin and satan, held in the chains of their lusts, and in the bonds of their iniquity; such as are in bondage to sin, are captives in satan's prison: the old world was also in prison whilst on earth, as having received from God, the sentence of destruction, and were reserved, as in prison, against the day of slaughter, if they repented not within 120 years. Note, 2. That Christ by his Spirit, did preach to the old world in the ministry of his prophets, Enoch and Noe; and his Spirit did chide with them and reprove them, in order to their bringing to repentance. Note, 3. That those refractory and hardened sinners, for despising the offers of grace made to them, were for their disobedience clapped into the prison of hell, suffering the vengeance of eternal fire; such as were cast into prison in Noah's time, were all fast in St. Peter's time: there is no picking the locks of hell gates, no breaking through the walls of the fiery Tophet; hell has a door to take in, but none to get out. Note, 4. That though Christ, by his Spirit, preached to the spirits in prison, yet it was not when they were in prison, I mean in the prison of hell, but when here on earth; there are no sermons in hell, no conditions of happiness proposed, no tenders of salvation propounded there: Christ preached to these prisoners to prevent their imprisonment; Christ preached to these men, who were now in prison, that they might not have been imprisoned. Note lastly, that the obstinate infidelity, and sottish stupidity, of the old world, was amazing, that after 120 years preaching, no more than eight persons should be persuaded into the belief of the world's destruction. From the beginning we find, that the prophets of God had cause to complain, that few have believed their report: do the ministers of God now moan to God, that they run in vain, and labor in vain, and spend their strength for naught? From the beginning it has been so. Lord! if thou honorest any of us with better success, and givest us to see the fruit of our labors in the lives of our people, help us to set the crown of praise on the head of thine own grace, and say, Non nobis, Domine, non nobis, &c. "Not unto us, O Lord, not unto us, but unto thy name give glory."

21 The like figure whereunto, even baptism, doth also now save us, (not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience towards God,) by the resurrection of Jesus Christ:

Observe here, 1. The type and the antitype, the ark and baptism; their salvation from the deluge, by the ark prefigured our salvation from God's wrath by baptism. As all that were without the ark perished, and all within the ark were saved: so all that are engrafted into Christ by faith, whereof baptism is a seal, are saved, whilst the unbelieving and unbaptized part of the world perish. Baptism is such a mean of spiritual salvation now, as the ark was of Noah's and his family's temporal salvation then; the like figure whereunto baptism now saveth us. Observe, 2. How our apostle expresseth himself, and plainly declares what he means by that baptism which is saving: negatively, it is not the outward ceremony of sprinkling the face, or washing the body with water, that is saving, or any ways pleasing unto God, save only as it is an act and exercise of our obedience to his command and will; but positively, it is the answer of a good conscience towards God, that is, the faithful answer of a resolved soul in the covenant of baptism, who gives up himself to the obedience of Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, and renounces the world, the flesh, and the devil; this covenanting is the condition of salvation, and baptism but the sign. Learn hence, That outward baptism alone saves none, but the inward only; and the sign and singular effect of inward baptism, is the answer of a good conscience towards God. Yet must we not conclude, with the Anabaptists, from this text, that baptism can be of no saving advantage to infants, because they cannot at present make this answer of a good conscience: for in the same manner speaks St. Paul of circumcision, that the true circumcision before God, is the inward circumcision of the heart and spirit, and not the outward circumcision of the flesh. But who dare argue from thence, that the Jewish infants, for want of the inward circumcision, must not be admitted to the outward; the argument is the very same: will you say that the answer of a good conscience is absolutely necessary, and expressly required, that baptism may be beneficial; therefore they only are to be baptized that can make this answer? The same may we say, that the inward circumcision of the heart was required as the only acceptable circumcision in the sight of God; therefore they only are to be circumcised, who have this inward circumcision of the heart. But as the one was the will of God, so is the other. True indeed the Jews did not admit proselytes to circumcise then, no more will we admit adult persons to baptism now, without the answer of a good conscience, or a solemn stipulation to be the Lord's for ever; but they admitted infants to circumcision without it; in like manner, the christian church now admits the children of christian parents to baptism, without any such answer made by them, but for them only.

22 Who is gone into heaven, and is on the right hand of God, angels, and authorities, and powers, being made subject unto him.

Our apostle having, in the close of the former verse, spoken of the resurrection of Christ, and of the benefits which we receive thereby, he makes mention in the verse 1. Of his going into heaven, there to dispatch all that remained to be done for the completing the salvation of his people. 2. He is here affirmed to be at God's right hand. The right hand is the upper hand, the hand of honor; and the right hand is the hand of power; accordingly Christ sitting at God's right hand, as an enthroned King, imports sovereign honor and supreme power; and that God has exalted his Son Jesus Christ with great triumph to his kingdom in heaven. 3. It is asserted, That angels, authorities and powers, are made subject to him; that is, our Jesus, in whom we hope, believe, and trust, is advanced in heaven to a pre-eminency above, and to a superiority over, all angels and celestial powers, waiting and expecting until all his enemies on earth become his footstool. For though his victory is yet incomplete, and inconsummate, and we see not all things yet put under him, it may suffice at present that we see Jesus crowned with glory and honor, and that is enough to show that the power of his enemies is broken; and that though they make some opposition still, yet it is to no purpose at all: for refusing to submit to his sceptre, they will fall by the rod of his strength. Angels and principalities in heaven, and all powers and potentates upon earth, being made subject unto him.

CHAPTER IV.

The argument which our apostle pursues in this chapter, is the same which he had prosecuted in the former. The first part of the chapter is exhortatory, urging all the professors of christianity to the love and practice of universal holiness and purity. The second part is consolatory, against persecutions and sufferings for the cause of Christ, which were then inevitably coming upon them from the enemies of christianity. The exhortations unto, and the arguments for holiness, are many, contained in the first verses of the chapter, in which our apostle thus bespeaks them:

FORASMUCH then as Christ hath suffered for us in the flesh, arm yourselves likewise with the same mind: for he that hath suffered in the flesh hath ceased from sin;

2 That he no longer should live the rest of his time in the flesh to the lusts of men, but to the will of God.

These words may be considered, 1. As an inference drawn from what the apostle had asserted in the foregoing chapter, namely, That Jesus Christ suffered for our sins, the just for the unjust, v. 18. Now, says the apostle, forasmuch as Christ had suffered for us, first as our surety and representative, in a way of satisfaction. Secondly, as our pattern and example, in order to our imitation; let us arm ourselves with the same mind and resolution to be conformed to him in his death, dying to sin as he died for sin; for he that hath crucified the flesh, and mortified his corrupt nature in imitation of Christ's sufferings, in our flesh and nature, that man hath ceased from sin, that is, from living unto sin, observing sin any longer, but spends the remainder of his life wholly according to God's will, not according to his own, or others lustful desires and inclinations. 2. These words may be considered as an argument to excite christians to eschew evil and do good, which he had pressed upon them in the former chapter, from the example of Christ. And the force of the argument lies thus: "All christians should be armed with the same mind and resolution against sin, and for holiness, that Christ was. But Christ having suffered in the flesh for sin, and ceased from sin, lived in the spirit unto God: therefore all christians should wholly endeavour all they can to cease from all sin, and live no more to the lusts of men, but to the will of God."

3 For the time past of our life may suffice us to have wrought the will of the gentiles; when we walked in lasciviousness, lusts, excess of wine, revellings, banquetings, and abominable idolatries:

4 Wherein they think it strange that ye run not with them to the same excess of riot, speaking evil of you:

5 Who shall give account to him that is ready to judge the quick and the dead.

Observe here, 1. That this epistle was written, and directed not only to the Jewish natives, but to the Gentile proselytes and converts: this is evident from the apostle's putting them in mind that there was a time, namely, before their conversion, when they wrought the will of the Gentiles. Observe, 2. The black and dismal sin which the Gentiles were guilty of, and wallowed in, before their conversion to christianity, namely, all manner of sensuality, uncleanness, excess in drinkings, revellings, banquetings, and idolatries, joined with the rest of their abominations. Lord! how endearing are our obligations, who were sinners of the Gentiles, for calling us out of this darkness (worse than Egyptian) into marvellous light by the go-pel. Observe, 3. The argument used to excite them to quit and abandon the forementioned sins now in their converted state, which they had before indulged themselves in the practice of, in their heathen state. The time past may suffice to have wrought the will of the Gentiles; as if he had said, "Surely you have had enough of sin, and too much in your unregenerate state; your lusts have taken up too much of your lives, and had too much of your love." Learn hence, that the true penitent, and sincere convert, is one that has had enough of sin, yea more than enough; one moment's service of sin is more service than we owe it; we can never serve Christ too long, and our lusts too short a time. Learn, 2. That this consideration, how long some of us served sin before conversion, should be a forcible argument to excite and quicken us unto greater measures and degrees of holiness in our regenerate and unconverted state. Observe, 4. What usage such christians must expect from the men of the world, who come out from among them, and refuse to run any longer into the same excess of riot with them. 1. They think it strange; they admire and wonder at them, as we do at strangers that come out of another country. And, 2. They speak evil of them, because they will not be as bad and as mad as themselves. "They think it strange that you run not with them to the same excess of riot, speaking evil of you." Learn hence, 1. That wicked men are excessively riotous, or that there is an excess of riot and sin which wicked men upon all occasions run into. Learn, 2. That such men wonder and think it very strange, that good men are not as excessively riotous as themselves. 3. That because they will not so run, therefore they speak evil of them." Observe lastly, the impartiality and severity of that account which the wicked men of the world must render to God, the universal Judge, for all their hard speeches which they have uttered against the righteous: "Who shall give account to him that is ready to judge the quick and the dead." Note here, 1. There must and shall be a day of account: There must be one, because God has made man an accountable creature; he can give and therefore he shall give an account of his actions; for he has a principle of reason to know what he does, and a liberty of choice to govern himself, and a rule to direct him what to choose, and what to refuse; and consequently the actions proceeding from him, must and shall be accounted for by him. Note, 2. That this account must be given to Christ, the supreme and universal Judge both of quick and dead; partly as the fitting reward for his great humiliation and sufferings; and partly that the world may see what a great and excellent person he was, who came to visit them in great humility: and partly, to give advantage to the future judgment, in that God has appointed a man for our Judge, who is flesh of our flesh, and bone of our bone; one that is sensible of the follies, temptations, and infirmities of mankind, and pities them, and will make favorable allowance for them; nay, one that is God as well as man, from whom we may expect all the goodness of a God, and all the tender compassion of a man, in their utmost perfection, so that no man need fear such a Judge, who has not outsigned the mercies of a God, and the tender compassions of a man; for if either God or man can help us, we are safe in that day, when we "shall give an account to him that is ready to judge the quick and the dead."

6 For, for this cause was the gospel preached also to them that are dead, that they might be judged according to men in the flesh, but live according to God in the spirit.

By the dead here some understand the Gentile world, dead in trespasses and sins, to whom the gospel was preached when they were thus spiritually dead and buried in sensuality, that they might judge and condemn, oppose and strive against, mortify and subdue, those sensual desires and carnal appetites which they indulged, whilst they lived as natural men, without the knowledge of God's will, and the assistance of his grace and spirit: others do understand the words of such as are naturally dead, that the gospel was preached to them who were long since dead, even our forefathers, that lived and died before Christ's coming, and that they had the gospel preached to them, while they were alive, that so they might mortify all their sinful lusts and corrupt affections, and live new lives, according to the direction and command of God in his holy word. Learn hence, That the condition of men now living, and of those that lived heretofore in all ages, is one and the same, having the same gospel, for substance preached to them, and accordingly the same duties of mortification and holiness required of them.

7 But the end of all things is at hand; be ye, therefore, sober, and watch unto prayer.

These words are brought by our apostle as a fresh argument to persuade the christian Jews to the practice of sincere holiness: the end of all things, that is, of the Jewish state and polity, their city, their temple, and worship, is at hand: the fatal destruction of Jerusalem is now very near, therefore be ye sober and temperate in all things; watch, that the day of visitation overtake you not unawares, and pray for the averting of God's wrath, and that ye be not overwhelmed in it. Learn hence, that sobriety, watchfulness, and prayer, are very requisite and needful qualifications to prepare and fit persons for every coming and appearance of Christ to judgment, be it his particular coming to some, or his universal coming to all at the end of the world.

8 And above all things, have fervent charity among yourselves: for charity shall cover the multitude of sins.

The next grace and virtue exhorted to is that of charity, or mutual love amongst themselves; and observe with what special care and particular regard it is recommended to us, above all things; and note also the intense degree of it, it must not barely be charity, but, "fervent charity; above all things have fervent charity among yourselves." Learn, That christians ought to take care, above all things, that their love to one another be sincere and fervent. But how may it be known to be such? Answ. If it be active and operative; if we love not in word or in tongue, but in deed and in truth; if it be not weakened by time; if it be not hindered by remoteness of place; if it be a sympathizing and compassionate love, a forbearing and forgiving love, then have we fervent charity among ourselves. Observe next, the argument or reason to enforce the duty, for charity shall cover the multitude of sins. This may be understood two ways, 1. With respect to ourselves. Charity or true love to our brother, will cause us not strictly to take notice of, but silently to overlook and pass by the faults and failings of others towards and against ourselves. 2. It will cover the sins of others from the eye of the world, and keep us from blazing abroad the infirmities of others, to their prejudice and disgrace: it is both unwarrantable and unsafe to cover the sins of others, either by flattery or falsehood; but to cover a sin by charity, to conceal it from public notice, is a great piece of christian duty, unless when the concealing of it will do apparent mischief: love looks upon great wrongs as small, and small wrongs as none at all; he most have no friends that will have a friend with no faults, Prov. x. 12. "Hatred stirreth up strife, but love covereth all sins."

9 Use hospitality one to another without grudging.

As a principal act, an eminent exercise of charity, the apostle advises to use hospitality to their poor brethren, without grudging or murmuring at the charge; hospitality is a necessary, a commendable, and a commanded duty; St. Paul requires, Rom. x i. 13. that we be given to hospitality. Observe farther, the apostle doth not barely say, use hospitality, but, use it one to another; it is a mutual duty; whence it appears, that though hospitality towards the poor be a commanded duty, yet hospitality among the rich is no sin, but a duty likewise to give reciprocal entertainments; for though our Saviour says, Luke xiv. 12. "When thou makest a dinner, or a supper, call not thy friends and rich neighbours;" the prohibition is not absolute; he doth not forbid the inviting of the rich, but chargeth us not to forget the poor; we may treat both as we have enough for both; but if not, what we have to spare must be for them that have nothing, not for them that have enough already, for we must prefer works of pious charity before acts of civil courtesy: "Use hospitality one to another, without grudging."

10 As every man hath received the gift, even so minister the same one to another, as good stewards of the manifold grace of God.

His next exhortation is, That they endeavour rightly to employ, and wisely to improve, their spiritual gifts, (as well as their temporal, mentioned in the foregoing verse,) which they had received for the good and benefit of others, in their respective places in the church, looking upon themselves not as proprietors, but as stewards, of the various gifts bestowed upon them by the free favor of God, and of which they must give an impartial account. Learn hence, 1. That several men have their several gifts, as it pleaseth the gift-giving spirit to give unto them: As every man has received the gift. Learn, 2. That gifts are given for the benefit of others, we are to minister one to another, that is, to improve our gifts to the mutual edification of each other, Learn, 3. That such as look upon themselves, as stewards of the manifold gifts of God, will wisely improve them for his glory and the good of others, the great ends for which he has conferred them.

11 If any man speak, let him speak as the oracles of God: if any man minister, let him do it as of the ability which God giveth; that God in all things may be glorified through Jesus Christ: to whom be praise and dominion for ever and ever. Amen.—

If any man speak; that is, 1. As a public minister, or teacher, let him speak as he is instructed from the oracles of God. Or, 2. If he speak as a private christian, let his discourse be grave and serious, for mutual edification, especially when ye speak divine things; speech is a noble and advantageous benefit to man, by which he excels the whole creation: our tongue is our glory, the instrument of our Creator's praise; and there is no subject so sublime and honorable for the tongue of man to be employed about, as the word and oracles of God, but then we must never mention them but with reverence: woe be to those men that bring forth scripture in their discourse, as the philistines brought forth Samson, only to make them sport, rendering it the theme of their giddy mirth and profane drollery: but these men ere long will find Almighty God in earnest, though they be in jest; such men forget this injunction of the apostle's. If any man speak, let him speak as the oracles of God.

—If any man minister,

To supply the necessities of others, either as a deacon, whose office it then was to take care of the poor, or as a private christian by charitable contribution, let him perform that duty readily and cheerfully, according to the ability God hath given him. Where observe, that he that with his wealth administereth to the necessities of others, if he doth it not according to the ability which God hath given him, his charity is no acceptable charity in God's account; not acceptable to God, because not proportionable to what he has received from God; the reason of this injunction is added in the next words,—“that God in all things may be glorified through Jesus Christ;” in whose strength these gifts are rightly employed, and by whose merits and intercessions, our intention to glorify God by them is accepted.—To whom, that is, to which Jesus, as to God blessed for evermore, be all honor and dominion everlastingly described. Amen.

12 ¶ Beloved, think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing happened unto you:

13 But rejoice, inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings: that when his glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad also with exceeding joy.

Observe here, 1. The metaphor which the apostle uses to set forth the christian's afflictions and persecutions by; he calls them fiery trials; burnings, because very painful and afflictive, very grievous and burthensome to sense, and also because men are tried by them as metals are by fire. Observe, 2. The warning given by the apostle to all christians, not to think strange concerning these fiery trials; that is, not to look upon them as unusual things, but to expect them, and prepare for them; for unexpected trials fall upon the soul in their full weight, and suddenly overthrow it; what we fear, for that we prepare, but when trials come, and we never looked nor prepared for them, they strike us to the heart, because not armed to receive the blow. Observe, 3. The gracious end that God has in the afflictions and persecutions which fall upon his people, they are to try them, not to consume them, to try their graces and destroy their corruptions, to give them opportunity to make proof of the truth of their faith, sincerity, and constancy. Observe, 4. The high honor which God puts upon his suffering saints and servants: they are said to be partakers of Christ's sufferings, because they suffer for him, and he suffers with them, and in them; and also because he suffered the same things before them, and much worse things for them. Observe lastly, The duty which God expects and requires from them who suffer these fiery persecutions for the sake of his Son, and that is to rejoice and be exceeding glad. From the whole learn, 1. That no afflictions or persecutions should seem new or strange things to sincere christians. 2. That the end and use of all afflictions is the trial and improvement of the christian's graces. 3. That believers in suffering afflictions and persecutions are partakers of Christ's sufferings; he suffers in them and they are made conformable to him by them. 4. That it is the will of God, that such as suffer for him, should not only be meek and patient, but be joyous and cheerful. 5. That at the great day when Christ's glory shall be revealed, then especially will the suffering saints rejoice, and be glad with exceeding joy, when they shall see their dear Redeemer coming in the clouds, with an human body shining brighter than ten thousand suns; a body which still retains the mark of his sufferings, and the tokens of his love. O joyful day of Christ's appearing, when this royal bridegroom shall take his suffering spouse the church by the hand, and present her to his Father, own his in the presence of men and angels, bestow a kingdom upon them, that they may be with him where he is, eternally to behold his glory, to feed upon an happiness as large as their capacities, and as lasting as their beings; such honor have all the suffering saints, and therefore ought greatly to “rejoice inasmuch as they are made partakers of Christ's sufferings; that when his glory shall be revealed, they may be glad also with exceeding joy.”

14 If ye be reproached for the name of Christ, happy are ye: for the spirit of glory and of God resteth upon you: on their part he is evil spoken of, but on your part he is glorified.

Another argument is here offered by our apostle for glorying in sufferings and reproaches for Christ, taken from the happiness of those that are so reproached, “If ye be reproached for the name of Christ, happy are ye.” Note here, that the reproaches which the saints suffer for the sake of Christ, are reckoned persecutions, and yet at the same time are esteemed a part, as well as a prognostic of their happiness: “happy are ye, if ye be reproached for the name of Christ.” Observe, 2. The reason assigned why christians, under reproach for the sake of Christ, are to be esteemed thus happy, namely, because the spirit of glory and of God resteth upon them;" that is, the glorious Spirit of God, which is both the mean and evidence of your happiness, who is glorious in himself, and also a glory to you, upon whom he rests, and in whom he dwells. Two things are implied by the Spirit's resting upon a reproached christian: 1. Complacency, that he is well pleased where he is; men do not rest where they do not like. 2. Permanency, he abides where he rests, and dwells there with delight. Some take the expression to be an allusion to Noah's dove, that hovered about, but could not rest till returned to the ark. Thus the Spirit of God, called here a Spirit of glory, from its effects and fruits, namely, from his cheering, sealing, and reviving influences, which make christians glory in tribulations; this Spirit flies from place to place, and from person to person, hither and thither, but rests upon and takes up his residence and abode with such christians as suffer for the name of Christ: "If ye be reproached, &c. happy are ye, for the Spirit of glory and of God resteth upon you:" It follows,—"On their part he is evil-spoken of, but on your part he is glorified;" that is, by their reproaches cast upon you, they blaspheme the Holy Spirit, as the word signifies; but he is eminently glorified by your patience and constancy of mind under all your pressures, which shows the power of the Spirit resting upon you, and mightily working in you. Learn hence, that in those reproaches which good men suffer for the sake of Christ, the Spirit of God in a special manner is blasphomed on the one side, and glorified on the other. O sinner! know, that all the reproaches thou castest upon religion and religious persons, as such, reach the Holy Spirit that rests upon them, and resides in them as his temples: but, O christian, remember thou, that by thy patience and constancy under sufferings, thou glorifiest the Holy Spirit eminently, abundantly showing that, by his help, afflictions are not only tolerable, but joyous.

15 But let none of you suffer as a murderer, or a thief, or as an evil doer, or as a busy body in other men's matters.

16 Yet if any man suffer as a christian, let him not be ashamed; but let him glorify God on this behalf.

Observe here, 1. What it is that the apostle calls upon them to avoid and shun: it is sin, not suffering: evil doing in general, murder and theft in particular, sins that were then very much practised among the Jews: "Let none of you suffer as a murderer, or a thief, or as an evil-doer;" by suffering as evildoers, we lose the comfort and reward of all our sufferings. Observe, 2. What sufferings he bids them not to be ashamed of, but glory in, namely, when they suffer as christians, and purely as such. Quest. But what is it to suffer as a christian? Ans. 1. When we suffer for a good cause. 2. From a christian principle. 3. In a christian manner, with meekness, patience, and self denial. Quest. 2. What is it to glorify God on the behalf of our sufferings? Ans. Afflictions and sufferings, considered barely in themselves, are far from being glorious: but consider them in their cause, as sufferings for righteousness' sake, and so they are glorious; and God honors us greatly, when he calls us forth to suffer, and furnishes us with courage and resolution for sufferings, and it is our duty to give glory to him who enables us thus to do: "If any man suffer as a christian, let him not be ashamed, but glorify God in this behalf."

17 For the time is come that judgment must begin at the house of God: and if it first begin at us, what shall the end be of them that obey not the gospel of God?

Observe here, 1. The apostle does not say, If judgment begin at the temple of idols, but, "if it begin at the house of God;" God will not spare his own house, nor his own household; he will not spare his children, or servants when they sin, he is no cockering Father to indulge his children to their ruin. Nay, observe, 2. Judgment first begins at the house of God; God will not bear so long with his own people sinning as with strangers; they shall be corrected sooner and sorer than others; the Lord will first punish them who have been forgetful of him, and trifled with him, who have been formal in their profession, and vain in their conversation. Observe, 3. That when we see with sorrow God contending with his own people for their sins, we may with astonishment expect what will be the end of them that obey not the gospel, when God brings such troubles upon his own house, what troubles may they expect from God, who are but a den of thieves, and a cage of unclean birds? O what appearances shall they have of God! And how shall they appear before God! Observe then, what little cause wicked men have to rejoice at the church's sufferings, when it presages a far more heavy judgment coming upon themselves; for "if judgment begin at the house of God, what shall be the end of them that obey not the gospel?"

18 And if the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear?

As if he had said, "When the day of visitation comes, which is verily at hand, and God shall begin to punish the Jews, his own people, called his house in the foregoing verse; if then the righteous among them escape the common calamity with great difficulty, and are scarcely preserved, how shall the ungodly and sinners think to escape unpunished in the day of Jerusalem's calamity; that day of vengeance, when Christ shall come to plead with them? If then the righteous be scarcely saved, that is, with great difficulty preserved from that desolating calamity, that fiery trial spoken of, ver. 12, "where shall the ungodly and sinner appear?" And how shall they hope to escape in safety from that dreadful judgment now ready to come on the Jewish nation!" There have been those that have made use of this text to show the difficulty of eternal salvation; and that the best and honestest of saints, even those who are most eminent in grace, are very difficultly saved; which, though a truth in itself, yet is scarcely deducible from this text, which certainly speaks of temporal preservation.

19 Wherefore, let them that suffer according to the will of God, commit the keeping of their souls to him in well-doing, as unto a faithful Creator.

Observe here, 1. A cautionary direction given, that in all our sufferings, we take care that we suffer according to the will of God: that is, for what is according to God's will, either to be believed or practised by us, for asserting and maintaining the purity of the christian doctrine and worship: and when our patience under such sufferings is as extensive and intensive as God requires, when our patience is as large and as lasting as our troubles, then may we be said to suffer according to the will of God. Observe, 2. The special privilege allowed to such "sufferers as suffer according to the will of God, they may commit the keeping of their souls to God in well doing, as unto a faithful Creator." Learn hence, 1. That when men suffer really and truly for well-doing, they may with confidence and great assurance commit their lives, and all that is dear unto them, to the special care of the divine providence; either God will keep us from, or support us under, trials, when we thus commit ourselves to him.

CHAPTER V.

St. Peter closes his epistle with an exhortation to the spiritual guides and governors of the church, to discharge their duties faithfully, in feeding and ruling of the flock of God committed to them; and this exhortation is enforced with several weighty arguments in the four first verses of this chapter.

THE elders which are among you I exhort, who am also an elder, and a witness of the sufferings of Christ, and also a partaker of the glory that shall be revealed;

Observe here, 1. The persons exhorted, The elders that are amongst you, the guides and governors of the church: elders by age and office, who were both to rule well, and also to labor in the word and doctrine; and for doing both faithfully, were to be accounted worthy of double honor. Observe, 2. The person exhorting, I exhort, who am also an elder. Mark, he says, "Not I, who am the universal head of the church, Christ's vicar upon earth; but I, who am an elder by age, and by apostleship, who have been long the minister of the circumcision; I exhort, beseech, and entreat you as my brethren, fellow-laborers in our Lord's vineyard." Observe, 3. The humble testimony which St. Peter gives of himself; he doth not say, "I command, who am the chief of the apostles, with whose confession of faith Christ was so well pleased, That he said, 'Thou art Peter, and upon this rock will I build my church,'" but, "I exhort, who am a witness of the sufferings," and eye-witness of what our dear Lord and Master suffered in the faithful discharge of his office, both in his life, and at his death: and "also a partaker of the glory that shall be revealed," I was also an eye-witness of Christ's glory in his transfiguration here on earth, and hope to be partaker of that glory which shall hereafter be revealed in heaven." Learn hence, That such exhortations to duty, are likely to be most effectual and successful, which are propounded in the humblest manner. St. Peter was placed in an high degree above these elders, being an apostle, a chief apostle; yet he gives himself no such title, but says, "The elders I exhort, who am also an elder;" not an apostle, much less the head and chief of the apostles.

2 Feed the flock of God which is among you, taking the oversight thereof, not by constraint, but willingly: not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind:

3 Neither as being lords over God's heritage, but being ensamples to the flock.

Observe here, 1. The title given to the church, it is the flock of God; denominations are given in scripture to persons and things proper to the state of things and persons: thus here the church is called a flock, and sometimes a little flock, in opposition to the herds and huge droves of the men of the world; yet the flock consists not of a few absolutely, but comparatively only; a flock contains a multitude. Again, As the church is called a flock for the number, so for their order: a flock is under inspection and government continually; Christ Jesus is the great overseer of this flock: and farther, it is a flock in respect of the unity and love that is amongst them; though the church be scattered over the world, yet there is an holy combination, and sweet communion of the members amongst themselves. Observe, 2. The duty exhorted to, and that is double, to feed the flock, and to be an example unto the flock. 1. Feed the flock, taking the oversight of it; feed it with wholesome doctrine, guide and govern it by strict discipline, overlooking it continually, and watch over it with unwearied diligence; and that you may do so, be perpetually resident, feed the flock that is among you. How can the flock be duly watched over, when the shepherd lives several miles from the fold, and is following his pleasure, when he should be feeding his sheep; feed the flock among you. Observe, 3. The manner directed to, how, and after which, the shepherds should feed and watch over their flocks. 1. Not by constraint, but willingly: that is, not as a burden, but a pleasure, with a free and ready mind; what men do out of compulsion from base fear, they do with no satisfaction either to God or man. 2. Not for filthy lucre; to feed the flock purely for the sake of the fleece, and to take a living only to get a living, is an horrid impiety: to be driven into the ministerial office by necessity is bad, but to be drawn by covetousness is much worse. 3. Not as being lords over God's heritage. Where note, The title given to the church, they are God's heritage, his people, not our own, his lot and portion; he having a special and peculiar right unto them, and property in them: therefore they are not to be lorded over, not to be treated with insolence and imperiousness, ruling them by the sword, and outward force, which has made many hypocrites, but not one convert. Lastly, He requires that they be ensamples to the flock; that is, in their daily conversation. Now, how can they be examples to them, if they live not amongst them? they must be examples of such meekness and humility, of such patience and charity, of such mortification and self-denial; as becomes persons of their holy character and profession: and be patterns of those virtues amongst their people in conversation which they recommend to them from the pulpit. This duty of ministerial exemplariness in conversation is bound upon us by innumerable arguments taken from the command of Christ, from the glory of God, from the preciousness of the soul, from the dignity of our office, from the success of our ministry, which depends more upon our practice than upon our preaching; from our own interest, with respect to our present comfort and future happiness; from the influence it has upon our people, an encouraging and confirming influence.

4 And when the chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away.

As if our apostle had said, "It is possible you may miss of your reward here from the hands of men, but when Christ, the great and good Shepherd, shall appear, when the owner, ruler, and lover of his church, shall come to judgment, you shall have from him your full reward, a never fading, ever flourishing crown of glory, for faithfully discharging your duty to God and his people. Learn hence, 1. That Jesus Christ, the chief Shepherd, will at length appear. 2. That, when he doth appear, he will call the under shepherds to account, how they have discharged every part of their ministerial office, as well private inspection, as public preaching. 3. That to all such, and to only such as have been faithful to the interest of Christ and souls shall the reward be assigned, even a crown of glory that fadeth not away: "when the chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory, &c."

5 ¶ Likewise, ye younger, submit yourselves unto the elder, yea, all of you be subject one to another,—

Having laid down the duties of pastors in the former verse, he points out the duties of the people in this, whom he calls the younger, either because they were generally younger in years than their spiritual guides, or because they ought to show that reverence and obedience to them which is suitable in young ones towards their elders: these young ones he exhorts to submit themselves to the guidance of their elders and teachers: likewise, ye younger, submit yourselves unto the elder: instruction and jurisdiction belonged to the elder, subjection and obedience to the younger. Note here, That the duties of pastor and people are mutual and reciprocal, not that their duties are alike, but because there is a like reason for the performance of their respective duties, a like engagement and obligation upon both; the duty of the one is subjection; of the other ministerial direction. He adds, yea, all of you be subject one to another; intimating thereby, that there is a duty of mutual subjection, which all christians owe to one another in love; they ought to condescend to the meanest offices one towards another; to bear with the infirmities of each other.

—And be clothed with humility: for God resisteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble.

The original word, rendered clothed, signifies, first, an upper garment, a frock, or a cloak, put over all the rest of our clothes; and so imports, that we should be wrapped up all over with this grace, that this should be most visible in our conversations, words, and actions, and conspicuous beyond all other virtues. Secondly, It signifies a belt which girds about our garments, and so imports, that we should tie it fast unto us, and have those considerations always fixed upon our spirits, which may keep us in an humble frame of soul. Note then, That humility is a special ornament, a beautiful robe, to be put on daily, which commends us greatly both to God and man. We are never to account ourselves dressed, until we have this livery of our humble master Christ Jesus put upon us; Be clothed with humility. Observe next, The argument to enforce this duty: for God resisteth the proud, sets himself as in battle array against them, but giveth fresh supplies of grace to the humble; because more grace is promised to the humble, and the humble soul is more fitted, prepared, and disposed, to receive farther measures of grace from God. God sets himself against proud men to bring them down, but the humble he doth countenance and exalt.

6 Humble yourselves, therefore, under the mighty hand of God; that he may exalt you in due time:

By the hand of God understand his judgments, his almighty power, which it is our duty to submit unto, and to be humble under, in the day of our affliction: and this profound submission, and deep humiliation, is the way to glory and exaltation. He can exalt us, and will do it here, if it be good for us; but sometimes God sees abasement better for his people; better, because safer, and accordingly they shall have it. Learn hence, That the strength and the power of God should oblige us very greatly to humble ourselves before him, and subject ourselves unto him. "Humble yourselves under the mighty hand of God." Secondly, That God will exalt the humble in due time, either here or hereafter; either in time or in eternity, as it shall most and best conduce to his own glory and their good.

7 Casting all your care upon him; for he careth for you.

Observe here, 1. The nature of the duty enjoined, to cast our care upon God; it is not a providential and prudent care, but an anxious and vexatious care, that the scripture forbids; and the duty here required is this, that, after we have used all prudent care and diligence in suberviency to the providence of God, we should not be over-solicitous about the issue and event of things; which, when we have done all we can, will be out of our power. 2. Casting our care upon God implies, that we should refer the issue and event of things to his wise providence, which is continually watching over us, and knows how to dispose of all things for the best advantage to us; entirely confiding in his wisdom and goodness, that he will order all things for the best, and, in that confidence, resting satisfied with the disposals of his providence, whatever they be. This is to cast all our care upon God. Observe, 2. The argument here made use of to persuade us to this duty: God careth for us. This implies also two things: 1. In general, that the providence of God governs the world, and concerns itself in the affairs of men, and disposeth of all events that happen to us. 2. More particularly, that this providence is more peculiarly concerned for good men, and that he takes a special care of them, and of their concerns; and the care that God takes of them is a special care, a tender care, a promised and engaged care, a care mysteriously exercised; he then takes most care of them when they think he takes the least, and the men of the world think he takes none at all. Cast we then all our care upon him who careth for us; for anxious care is a painful evil, an unprofitable evil, a sinful evil.

8 ¶ Be sober, be vigilant: because your adversary the devil, as a roaring lion, walketh about, seeking whom he may devour:

9 ¶ Whom resist steadfast in the faith, knowing that the same afflictions are accomplished in your brethren that are in the world.

Observe here, 1. A double duty exhorted to, sobriety and vigilancy: Be sober, be vigilant, be sober and temperate in all things; sober in your enjoyments; sober in your employments; sober in your recreations. Be neither drunk with wine, nor with worldly cares; the latter is the worst of the two. A night's sleep cures the former, but the worldling is drunk all the year long, never sober night nor day. And to sobriety we are exhorted to add vigilancy, a watchful care, and diligent circumspection over all our thoughts, words, and actions, that we may not displease God in any thing: Be sober, be vigilant. Observe, 2. The reason or motive to enforce the duty, because your adversary the devil goeth about, &c. Where note, How every word contains a special motive to christian watchfulness. He is your adversary, who will do you all possible mischief: he is the devil, an accuser, and one that seeks all advantages against you; he is a cruel adversary; a lion, yea, a roaring lion, which adds terror to his cruelty: he is a restless adversary, he goes about seeking whom he may devour; what soul he may devour, for that is the bait he gapes for, it grieves the devils, those apostate angels, to find the souls of men appointed to fill up those vacant places in heaven, which they turned themselves out of. It is a delight to them to plunge souls into the same condemnation and misery with themselves. Observe, 3. The duty of resistance urged upon us in order to our preservation, with the weapon put in our hand for that purpose; Whom resist steadfast in the faith; that is, be steadfast in the faith, that you may resist him; and, by the help of your faith, you shall overcome him. Learn hence, 1. That the devil is the restless adversary, and unwearied enemy of mankind. 2. That all the pains which satan takes, is in order to the destruction of precious souls. 3. That the way to overcome him is by resisting of him, not by yielding to him; he is a cowardly enemy, and a conquered enemy; resist him and he will run. 4. That faith is the weapon, by which the christian is enabled to resist the tempter, and to repel the force of his fiery temptations.

—Whom resist steadfast in the faith, knowing that the same afflictions are accomplished in your brethren that are in the world.

As if the apostle had said, "Resist satan's temptations, occasioned by your sufferings, remembering that it is not your case alone, but others also suffer with you, even all that will live godly in Christ Jesus. Learn hence, That christians should not desire, and cannot reasonably expect a better condition in the world, with respect to freedom from sufferings, than the rest of their brethren, who have all a share of affliction to suffer, and a measure of hardship to endure as well as ourselves: "The same afflictions are accomplished in your brethren that are in the world."

10 But the God of all grace, who hath called us unto his eternal glory by Christ Jesus, after that ye have suffered awhile, make you perfect, stablish, strengthen, settle you:

11 To him be glory and dominion for ever and ever. Amen.

Our apostle concludes and closes his epistle with an affectionate prayer for these afflicted christians and suffering saints, beseeching Almighty God, who is the author of all grace, and who hath called them by his gospel to the participation of that grace, which will entitle them to eternal glory, that, after they have suffered awhile in the world, he would perfect the work of grace begun in them, establish, strengthen, and settle them in the truth of the gospel; and to this infinitely gracious God, he desires glory and dominion should be for ever ascribed. Observe here, 1. That God is the God of all grace, seed, growth, and perfection, all from him, restraining grace, renewing grace, sanctifying grace, all from the fountain of all grace. Observe, 2. That serious christians are called by God to eternal glory and happiness, they are called to the hope and expectation of this glory, upon the account of the promise of it which God made to Christ, Tit. i. 2. and they are brought into a state of preparation for it; God hath by his word and Spirit wrought them for this same thing. Observe, 3. They are called to eternal glory through Jesus Christ, he reveals it to them, he purchases it for them, he works that faith and repentance in them which qualifies them for, and entitles them unto this heavenly glory. Observe, 4. That some afflictions must be expected and endured by all christians, how dear to God soever they are or may be. Was there any patriarch, prophet, apostle, primitive or modern christian, that did not suffer awhile? Saints must suffer awhile from the remains of sin, from the temptations of satan, from the enemies of religion, from the friends of religion, yea, from God himself their best friend. Observe, 5. That after serious christians have suffered awhile, they shall enter into glory, their title is sure by the promise of God, by the purchase of Christ, by the inhabitation of the Spirit. Observe, 6. That the perfecting, establishing, strengthening of the christian in grace and comfort is from God, to whom all glory and dominion is and ought for ever to be ascribed.

12 By Sylvanus, a faithful brother unto you, (as I suppose) I have written briefly, exhorting and testifying, that this is the true grace of God wherein ye stand.

Observe here, That our apostle, to encourage these suffering christians to a resolved perseverance in the christian religion, assures them, that it was undoubtedly from God, the unquestionable truth of God, and therefore neither seducers on the one hand, nor persecutors on the other, should be able to shake them, or cause them to fall from their own steadfastness; a firm belief of the certainty and excellency of christianity conduces much to the establishment of those that have newly embraced it: if we be once assured that it is the true grace of God wherein we stand, it will cause us to stand steadfast.

13 The church that is at Babylon, elected together with you, saluteth you: and so doth Marcus my son.

14 Greet ye one another with a kiss of charity. Peace be with you all, that are in Christ Jesus. Amen.

At the foot of his epistle he sends them salutations from the christians at Babylon, who were chosen out of the world, to partake in the faith and fellowship of the gospel. Some, by Babylon, figuratively understand Rome, but others understand it of Babylon in Assyria, where many Jews did tarry and continue after the expiration of the seventy years' captivity, whom St. Peter, being a minister of circumcision, went to visit, having probably planted a church there. Wheresoever they were, God had called them to the knowledge of his gospel, and they send salutations to all their brethren and fellow-members in Christ, wheresoever dispersed, or howsoever distressed. As also doth Mark, whom St. Peter calls his son, because instructed by him in the gospel, and begotten by him to christianity. Lastly, He exhorts them to express their fervent affection to each other by a kiss of charity, used in the primitive times as a token of love amongst christians; but afterwards, for just reasons laid aside; and so wishing peace: that is, all manner of prosperity to all in Christ Jesus, that is, to all professing faith in Christ Jesus, he shuts up his epistle.

SAINT PETER.

The second Epistle of St. Peter was written by him a little before his death, he having received a revelation, probably of his approaching departure out of this life; he writes this second letter to the Jews of the dispersion scattered through Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia, and Bythinia, to warn them of the fiery trial, that sharp and bitter persecution which was coming upon them, and to fortify them against that apostacy from the faith, that falling from their own steadfastness, that departing from the holy commandment, which these newly-converted Jews were very prone unto: he sends therefore this epistle to establish and settle them, to strengthen and confirm them; and this is the last mention which we find in Scripture of this great and glorious apostle.

CHAPTER I.

SIMON PETER, a servant and an apostle of Jesus Christ, to them that have obtained like precious faith with us, through the righteousness of God, and our Saviour Jesus Christ :

Observe here, 1. The author and penman of this epistle, described by his name, Simon Peter, the former given at his circumcision, the latter by Christ, upon the occasion of his confession, Mat. xvi. 18. by his condition, a servant : by his office, an apostle ; by the author of his office, Jesus Christ. Here note, That Christ only hath an authoritative power to make apostles, ministers and dispensers of his word : a derivative power from Christ the governors of the church have ; but such as have not now their call from Christ immediately, (which it is presumption to expect, and if any pretend to it, let them show it by their miracles) or mediately from the officers of his church, are usurpers of the sacred office, and they cannot pray in faith themselves for a blessing upon what they do, nor can the people expect, Jer. xxiii. 32. I never sent them, (says God) therefore they shall not profit this people at all. Observe, 2. The persons described to whom this epistle is directed, to them that have obtained like precious faith with us. To such as had obtained faith, precious faith, like precious faith, with the apostle of Christ ; like for its nature and quality, though not for its measure and degree : and alike precious in regard of its object, Christ ; in regard of its subject, the heart ; in regard of its act, which is acceptance and consent to the terms of the gospel covenant ; in regard of its effects and precious fruits, peace with God, peace with conscience, victory over the world, and the like. We see then that the faith of the poorest believer is as precious as the richest, and that the weakest believer has the same precious faith with the strongest ; and if it be alike precious, it shall be alike permanent and persevering. Observe, 3. The meritorious cause of this their precious faith, the righteousness of Jesus Christ : Through the righteousness of God, even our Saviour Jesus Christ. All grace is derived to us, through Christ, for the sake of his righteousness, sufferings, and satisfaction : and as all grace is derived from him, and for his sake conferred, so all our good, that little service we do for God, is accepted through him, and owned for his sake. And if so, then Jesus Christ is really God : for the righteousness of a creature cannot justify me in the sight of God : there is no appearing before God for any creature in a creature-righteousness, and farther, if so, then it is not faith that justifies and saves, but the righteousness of Christ, upon which faith is grounded, Eph. ii. 8. By grace ye are saved effectually, through faith instrumentally. The brazen serpent healed not the eye that looked on it ; yet without looking upon it, no help from it, no healing by it.

2 Grace and peace be multiplied unto you through the knowledge of God, and of Jesus our Lord :

The person saluting, and the parties saluted, were mentioned in the former verse ; here we have the salutation itself, 1. The matter of it, Grace and peace ; grace to free us from God's wrath, and reinstate us in his favor ; peace to quiet our own consciences, and reconcile us to ourselves. Observe, 2. The measure of it, grace and peace be multiplied : they had both grace and peace already, yet the apostle prays for the farther increase of them ; there is no complete perfection in grace attainable in this life. The best of saints must be multiplying and increasing their stores ; for they are but imperfectly perfect, when at the best. Observe, 3. The means for multiplying grace and peace, through the knowledge of God, and of Jesus Christ our Lord. Learn, That the knowledge of God, in, by, and through our Lord Jesus Christ, is the special mean of multiplying grace and peace in our hearts ; and indeed there is no comfortable knowledge of God, but in and through Christ, John xvii. 3. " This is life eternal, &c " Out of Christ God is a revenger, in Christ a reconciled Father.

3 According as his divine power hath given unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness, through the knowledge of him that hath called us to glory and virtue :

In these words our apostle shows, what reason they had to believe and hope, that grace and peace should be multiplied unto them, namely, because Almighty God had already given them all things which conduced to make them holy in this life, and happy in the next, by the knowledge of Christ. Others, by life and godliness, understand all things conducing to the preservation of natural life, likewise of grace here and glory hereafter : and whereas it is said they were " called to glory and virtue," by glory understand the honor of being christians ; by virtue, the good life that becomes christians. To both these they were called with a glorious calling, as being attended with the glorious effusion of the Holy Ghost. If by glory and virtue be understood grace here, and glory hereafter, it shows our privilege, that we have both at present in a way of inchoation, and shall ere long enjoy both in a way of consummation ; and it points also to us our duty, we must have virtue, if we would have glory ; if we be not like Christ, we can never love him, nor may we ever expect to live with him.

4 Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises, that by these you might be partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust.

Whereby, or by whom, that is, through the knowledge of Christ in the gospel, God has given to us all things conducing to our present and future happiness ; and, amongst the rest, the precious promises of the gospel, which so directly tend to make men partakers of the divine nature. Note here, That the promises of the gospel are the christians' great and precious treasure ; greatness and goodness are then most shining, when they meet in the same subject, but such a glorious conjunction is rarely found, either in persons or things: rarely are great men good, or good men great: pebbles are great, but not precious: pearls are precious, but not great: but the promises are both for quantity exceeding great, for quality exceeding precious, and that in respect of the author of them, God: the foundation of them, the blood of Christ; the manner of the dispensation, they are freely given; the means whereby they are apprehended and applied, precious faith, and exceedingly precious the promises are in regard of the end of them, which is to make us partakers of the divine nature, not of the essence, but qualities of the divine nature, which enables us in some measure, to resemble God; as the seal doth communicate its signature, but not its substance: so in the work of regeneration God doth not impart his essence, but infuse holy principles and gracious habits into the soul, whereby the christian resembles him. Learn hence, That the great end and effect of the promises, and the proper influence and efficacy which they ought to have upon the hearts and lives of men, is this, to make them partakers of the divine nature, and to render them daily more like unto God: "Having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust." Here note, 1. That the world is full, very full, of corruption, sin, and temptation; by reason of the lusts of men, they rub their leprosy upon each other, and, by the contagion of a bad example, infect and poison one another. Note, 2. That by being made partakers of the divine nature, through the influence of the promises, we escape the pollution of fleshly lusts, which the world is defiled with, and would defile us by.

5 And, besides this, giving all diligence, add to your faith, virtue; and to virtue, knowledge;

6 And to knowledge, temperance; and to temperance, patience; and to patience, godliness;

7 And to godliness, brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness charity.

The apostle spends the former part of the chapter in comforting, this in exhorting; he told us before what God had done for us; he tells us now what we must do for ourselves; it is not fit that heaven should take all the pains, and we none; we must give diligence, all diligence. Besides this, that is, besides what God has given us and done for us, let us take care to be daily adding to our stock and store. Adding to our faith, virtue; that is, all good works in general, without which, faith is dead, or dying; and fortitude, or holy courage, in doing our duty in particular. To virtue, knowledge; that is, a more exact knowledge of your duty, and a farther increase in it; for knowledge is the light, without which the christian cannot see to do his work. And to knowledge must be added, temperance, which subdues the violence of our unruly passions and appetites, and does reduce those rebellious powers under the government and dominion of reason and religion. And to temperance, patience, under all wrongs and sufferings whatsoever: an impatient man under affliction is like a bedlamite in chains, raving against God and man. To patience, godliness, a conscientious regard to all the duties of the first table; let the fear of God restrain you from sin, the love of God constrain you to duty and to godliness, brotherly kindness, or a fervent love to all christians, as being our brethren and fellow-members in Christ, and this for grace-sake. And to brotherly kindness, charity; that is to all mankind, as proceeding from the same stock, having the same nature, and subject to the same necessities with ourselves; let there be found with you a desire and endeavour to do all the possible good you can to every one. Learn and observe from the whole, That there is a concatenation both of graces and duties, they must not be separated, they will not live single; where there is one grace in sincerity, there is a constant care to secure all the rest; and where a christian, for conscience sake, performs one duty, he will make conscience of all the rest; the duties of both tables are religiously observed, both as an argument of his sincerity, and as an ornament to his holy profession.

8 For if these things be in you, and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ.

9 But he that lacketh these things is blind, and cannot see afar off, and hath forgotten that he was purged from his old sins.

To encourage christians to grow and improve in the fore-mentioned virtues and graces, our apostle here lays before us, 1. The great advantage of such a proficiency and growth; If these things be in you and abound, that is, the fore-mentioned graces, they will both cause you, and evidence you not to be barren and unfruitful in your profession of christianity and faith in Christ; the exercises of divine graces are the best evidences of our being made partakers of the divine nature. Observe, 2. The miserable state of those whose faith is not fruitful in good works: He that lacketh these things, that is, who doth not live in the exercise of the fore-mentioned graces, is spiritually blind, and really destitute of that knowledge which he pretends to, blinded by his passions and lusts, and sensual affections, and sees not the great end and design of christianity, forgetting that in baptism he solemnly vowed all this, and that he was sacramentally washed from his old sins.

10 Wherefore the rather, brethren give diligence to make your calling and election sure: for if ye do these things, ye shall never fall:

As if our apostle had said, "See that in the diligent exercise of the afore-named graces, and in the daily practice of the afore-mentioned duties, you make your calling and election, which are sure in themselves, sure to you; for so doing, you shall never fall or miscarry eternally." Here note, That it is their own calling and election which christians are called upon to make sure, not another's: we must leave their case and state to God that searches the heart; we cannot know the hearts of others, it is well if we know our own: "Make your calling and election sure." Learn, 1. A christian may be assured of his own salvation. 2. Assurance of salvation requires all diligence. 3 That assurance of salvation deserves all diligence. 4. That the way to make our election sure, is first to make our calling sure.

11 For so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

There are four sorts of persons spoken of in scripture : 1. Some are said to be far from the kingdom of God, afar off from God, as heathens and infidels, who know not God. 2. Others are said not to be far from the kingdom of God, Mark xii. 34. who yet will never come there. 3. Others are scarcely saved, saved with great difficulty, so as by fire, with much dross of error in judgment, and corruption in life. 4. Others are said to have an abundant entrance administered to them into the everlasting kingdom, and these are the fruitful christians, who are daily adding to their graces, and going from strength to strength : these shoot the gulph of death in the holy triumph of their grace : they enter the harbour of heaven with a plerophory, a full sail, with a full assurance of faith and hope : thus will the fruitful christian have both a more comfortable passage to, and also a more ample reward in heaven.

12 Wherefore I will not be negligent to put you always in remembrance of these things, though ye know them, and be established in the present truth.

13 Yea, I think it meet, as long as I am in this tabernacle, to stir you up, by putting you in remembrance :

14 Knowing that shortly I must put off this my tabernacle, even as our Lord Jesus Christ hath showed me.

15 Moreover I will endeavour that you may be able, after my decease, to have these things always in remembrance.

Observe here, 1. The persons to whom the apostle gave the foregoing exhortation to progressiveness and proficiency in holiness, they were knowing persons, yea, established persons, they were both informed and confirmed in the truth ; but were they knowing, yet they wanted farther information : were they established, yet might they want farther confirmation. It is a very dangerous notion that some have taken up, that a christian in this life may live above ordinances, and outgrow counsels and exhortations, as if he need not hear, or pray, or the like. St. Peter thought otherwise ; these were grown christians to whom he writes, yet he tells them three several times together here, in four verses, that he would not be negligent to put them in remembrance, even of those things which they knew already. Observe, 2. The exemplary diligence and industry of the apostle in his ministerial work, together with his constancy therein, as long as I am in this tabernacle ; that is, as long as I live in this world, I will endeavour to keep the heavenly flame of love and zeal burning very lively upon the altar of your hearts. Observe, 3. The motive of consideration provoking him to this diligence, and that is, the certainly of his approaching dissolution, " I must shortly put off this tabernacle, as my Lord hath showed me." Where note, 1. He calls his body a tabernacle in regard of its moveableness and frailty, and in opposition to that house made without hands, eternal in the heavens. Note 2. How familiarly our apostle speaks of death. I must put off this tabernacle ; he makes no more of putting off his body by death, than a man does of putting off his clothes at night. Note, 3. The necessity of putting off the body, I must, I may, and I must shortly ; intimating, that how strong soever the affections and inclinations of souls are to the fleshly tabernacles they now live in, yet they must put them off, and that speedily. Note, 4. How the consideration of the certainty and suddenness of St. Peter's removal by death did excite and provoke him to the utmost industry and diligence in his ministerial work, while he lived ; the apprehensions of approaching death must quicken to utmost diligence. Lastly, that ministers must never give over pressing known truths as long as they live, that their people may have them in remembrance after their decease ; " I will endeavour that after my decease you may have these things always in remembrance."

16 For we have not followed cunningly devised fables, when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eye-witnesses of his Majesty :

17 For he received from God the Father honor and glory, when there came such a voice to him from the excellent glory, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased.

18 And this voice which came from heaven we heard, when we were with him in the holy mount.

Our apostle comes now to exhort them to constancy in the faith of the gospel, assuring them that himself and his fellow-apostles had not followed artificially devised fables, when they made known to them the coming of Christ in the flesh, and that he was truly, and in very deed, the promised Messiah ; for that he himself, with James and John, were with Christ upon mount Tabor, as eye witnesses of his transfiguration, where and when he received in his human nature a communicated splendor, and God the Father from heaven, the seat of the magnificent glory, pronounced him to be his well-beloved Son, in whom he is well pleased. Learn hence, That God the Father's testimony from heaven, concerning his Son Jesus Christ, did effectually bring honor and glory unto Christ, and is a great obligation upon us to faith and obedience to him ; " he received from God the Father honor and glory ;" attesting him to be his well-beloved Son. Learn, 2. That there was as much assurance given of the certainty of Christ's being the promised Messiah, and of the truth of the evangelical doctrine, as the world could reasonably desire. Men can humanly be certain of nothing more than what they perceive by their senses, which are the proper judges of all sensible objects ; now no satisfaction of this kind was wanting to the world concerning our blessed Saviour and his miracles: the apostles attesting what they had heard, what they had seen with their eyes, and their hands had handled of the word of life, 1 John i. 1.

19 We have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day-star arise in your hearts.

Observe here, That the scriptures, or written word of God, are a more sure word to us than any voice from heaven, or revelation whatsoever; not that there was any uncertainty of the Lord's voice uttered from heaven at Christ's transfiguration, but because that transient voice was heard only by three, and might be mistaken or forgotten; whereas the Holy Scriptures are a standing and authentic record, and a most sure ground for faith to build upon: and accordingly our apostle tells them, they should do well to attend unto the written word, that is, the scriptures of the Old Testament, as unto a light that shineth in that dark time, until, by considering those ancient prophecies, and comparing them with what Christ hath done and suffered, they might find the day dawning upon them, and the morning star, the Holy Spirit, arising in their hearts, so enlightening and convincing them, that no more doubts or scruples should be left in them, concerning this great truth, attested by a voice from heaven, and confirmed by the writings of the prophets, namely, that Jesus is the true and promised Messias, and really the Son of God. Learn hence, That the written word of God is a surer word, more to be depended on and relied upon than any voice from heaven, though attested by the greatest and most eminent apostle, and consequently to be more heeded and regarded by us; nay, farther, the sanctifying operation of the Holy Spirit in and upon the hearts and lives of sincere and serious christians is a more certain and indubitable evidence of their salvation, than if an angel should come from heaven on purpose to tell them that they should certainly come thither; for the testimony of an angel, at the highest, is but the testimony of a creature; but the testimony of the sanctifying Spirit is the testimony of God himself; it is therefore the sure word that we are to attend unto; and that revelation of God's will being final, is and ought to be attended to, before any pretended or real revelations whatsoever: "we have a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, &c."

20 Knowing this first, that no prophecy of the scripture is of any private interpretation.

These words are understood variously. 1. Some interpret them thus: that no part of holy scripture was written by any private impulse, incitation, or motion, by no suggestion of men's own private spirits, but they gave out to us what the Holy Ghost gave in to them; nor did they prophesy according to the will of man, that is, when they would, or what they would, but they spake by the instinct and impulse of the Holy Ghost. The words show what authority the men of the holy scriptures had to write what they did, and why we should be so careful to take heed to what they wrote. Learn hence, That it is a very great principle, yea, one of the first principles of our faith, that the scriptures are the very word and will of God, written not by any private spirit, but dictated by the Spirit of God, and consequently are no part of them of human invention, but all of divine inspiration, for which reason great respect is due to them, and we shall do well to take heed to them. 2. Others understand the words thus: that no prophecy of scripture is to be expounded as speaking only of those persons whom the speaker first intended and meant, according to the speaker's proper private thought, for the holy men of God were moved by God's Spirit to speak those words which signified more than they designed, or always meant and understood themselves; as for instance, David often speaks in the Psalms words true of himself and Solomon, but the Holy Ghost pointeth at Christ, who was typified by those persons; and whether David meant more than himself and Solomon, it is certain the Holy Ghost meant more; so if Joshua be meant in Isa. liii. as some would have it, it is evident that he was but typical, and that the Holy Ghost meant Christ and his sufferings ultimately; so that it is plain that the scripture prophecy receives its full sense from the Spirit, and not from the speaker; and must not be appropriated narrowly to those private men, by whom, or of whom they were proximately meant by the speaker. 3. Others understand the words after this manner, namely, that no private person must take upon him the interpretation of holy scriptures, but refer all to the church: hence Estius infers, "That the reformed and their pastors must not interpret the scriptures, but the Catholic church only." To which we reply, that as no private persons, so likewise no church, may presume to interpret scripture according to their own mind, nor make their private sense to be the sense of scripture, but to seek understanding from God, who shows the meaning of the word by the word, (comparing scripture with scripture) and by his Spirit leads good men into the knowledge and understanding of it; knowing this, that no prophecy of the scripture is of any private interpretation: for the prophecy came not in old time by the will of men, but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost."

CHAPTER II.

Our apostle, in the latter end of the foregoing chapter, recommended the Holy Scriptures to us as our guide and rule, as our card and compass, by which we should steer our christian course; he tells us, that the holy prophets under the Old Testament were men divinely inspired, and what they wrote was by the special direction of the Holy Ghost: he comes now to declare and foretel in this chapter, the coming in of false prophets and teachers, that would pervert the truth of doctrine by bringing in damnable heresies; and he sets forth their manners: also they walk according to their own lusts; monstrous doctrines are usually accompanied with monstrous lusts, and strong delusions with vile affections.

BUT there were false prophets also among the people, even as there shall be false teachers among you, who privily shall bring in damnable heresies, even denying the Lord that bought them, and bring upon themselves swift destruction.

Observe here, 1. How the apostle foretels the coming of false teachers into the gospel-church, as there had been false prophets in the Jewish church; no age of the church ever was or will be free of them; but the run of the last times is most likely to have most of these sour dregs. There shall be false teachers among you, false teachers then may find a scripture prophecy for their being in the church, but they will hardly find a scripture warrant for their being there. Observe, 2. The doctrines which they will teach; and they are damnable heresies. Where note, That Almighty God never intended a certain remedy against heresy any more than he did against sin and vice; it is certain, that there is no certain and effectual remedy against either of them; God does what he sees best and fittest, not what we think to be so. Note also, that infallibility itself is no effectual remedy against heresy; the apostles were certainly infallible, and yet they could neither prevent nor extinguish heresy, which never more abounded than in the apostles' times: St. Paul says, there must be heresies, 1 Cor. i 19. St. Peter here says, that there shall be false teachers; now, if there must be heresies and false teachers, either the church is not infallible, or infallibility is no effectual remedy against heresy. Observe, 3. That Christ is here called the Lord that bought these men who brought destruction upon themselves, denying the Lord that bought them; because none should perish for want of a sufficient sacrifice for sin; Christ by his blood purchased for them pardon and life, to be theirs, upon condition of believing acceptance. Observe lastly, As the seeds-men, false teachers, and the seed they sow, damnable heresies, so the crop they shall reap, and that is swift destruction; as damnable heresies are brought in privily, so the blasphemous heretic, the seducing heretic, the seditious heretic, brings upon himself swift destruction; sometimes temporal destruction in this world, certainly eternal, without repentance, in the next.

2 And many shall follow their pernicious ways, by reason of whom the way of truth shall be evil spoken of.

As if the apostle had said, "Notwithstanding heretics bring such fatal destruction upon themselves, yet many that profess christianity shall be seduced by them, and follow their pernicious ways, by reason of whom the enemies of religion will speak evil of it, and the professors of it. Observe here; 1. The thriving and growth of heresies, many shall follow their pernicious ways. Where note, the nature of error, it is pernicious and destructive; and the efficacy of error, not a few, but many are in danger of being perverted by it. Observe, 2. The sad sequel or fruit of this, by reason of whom the way of truth is evil spoken of. Here note, 1. The title given to christian religion, it is the way of truth, so styled from its parentage and original, the God of truth, in regard of its efficacy, it works truth in the inward parts, and because it brings those that embrace and practise it, to the enjoyment of him who is the God of truth. Note, 3. The coarse usage which religion meets with from many in the world, it is blasphemed or evil spoken of by persons following seducers, by reason of whom the way of truth is evil spoken of. It is no new or unusual thing for religion, and the sincere professors of it, to be traduced and slandered by heretical seducers and false teachers.

3 And through covetousness shall they with feigned words make merchandise of you: whose judgment now of a long time lingereth not, and their damnation slumbereth not.

Observe here, 1. What is the root of all heresy; it is covetousness, which the apostle calls the root of all evil; they are covetous worldly minded men generally, who hope some way or other to make an advantage of their opinions, who broach errors and false doctrines. Observe, 2. The miserable condition of the seduced, they are sold by heretics like beasts; they make merchandise of you: the business of heretics is to sell their own and others souls, as Judas did Christ, for some outward benefit. Observe, 3. The arts which heretics and seducers use to circumvent and deceive, and that is feigned words, artificially composed to seduce, drawing into error with a deceitful eloquence. Observe, 4. The dreadful punishment which attends their sin, "swift destruction; their damnation slumbereth not; their judgment lingereth not." Learn, That the righteous judgment of God brings damnation upon the wicked, and their damnation will come swiftly, very swiftly upon them.

4 For if God spared not the angels that sinned, but cast them down to hell, and delivered them into chains of darkness, to be reserved unto judgment:

5 And spared not the old world, but saved Noah the eighth person, a preacher of righteousness, bringing in the flood upon the world of the ungodly.

6 And turning the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah into ashes, condemned them with an overthrow, making them an ensample unto those that after should live ungodly:

Our apostle having asserted in the foregoing verse, that the judgment of the wicked in general lingereth not, and that the damnation of seducers in particular slumbereth not; he comes here in these verses to make his assertion good by a threefold instance, namely, the angels, the old world, and the people of Sodom and Gomorrah; from whence he would have them conclude, that, if God spared not these he would not long spare false prophets and their followers. Observe, 1. The example of God's severity on the fallen angels: they sinned, and kept not their first state, they fell from that state of holiness in which they were originally created; and their punishment followed, they were cast down to hell, and delivered into chains of darkness, reserved unto judgment. But are they not judged and punished already? Yes, no doubt, but the full wrath of God will not be poured out upon them until the day of judgment; if they are now as full of sin as they can be, it is certain they are not so full of misery and torment as they shall be. Learn hence, 1. That the angels, though created in an holy, yet are they not in an immutable state. 2. The freedom of their own wills was the cause of their sin, and their sin the cause of their misery. 3. That for sin they were cast down to hell, where their misery is much, but they expect more. Observe, 2. The example of the old world, upon whose sinning God brought a flood, drowning them all, except eight persons. Where note, That the greatest multitude and number of sinners does not hinder God's justice from executing judgment upon them for their sins; a whole world sinning are as easily destroyed by God as a single sinner. Observe, 3. He instances in the wicked cities of Sodom and Gomorrah, who were consumed by fire from heaven, and rendered by the Almighty a dreadful spectacle to all that should live ungoddily. Sin lays the foundation of ruin in the most flourishing cities and kingdoms; the strongest walls cannot keep judgments out, when sin enters in: Sodom's plenty and power could not secure her inhabitants, when sin had once exposed them to the wrath of God. Note also, The intention, end, and design of God, in punishing some sinners; it is to make them examples unto others.

7 And delivered just Lot, vexed with the filthy conversation of the wicked:

8 (For that righteous man dwelling among them, in seeing and hearing, vexed his righteous soul from day to day with their unlawful deeds.)

Observe here, 1. As bad as Sodom was, it had a good man in it; God leaves not himself without witness, in the vilest and worst of places. God has some that profess his name, and bear witness to his truth. Observe, 2. The character given of him, just Lot; the denomination was taken from the habitual frame of his heart, and the general tenor of his life. Observe, 3. How this good man laid to heart the wickedness of Sodom; he was grieved for their wicked and filthy conversation before God, more than for their unkind and cruel behaviour towards him; the spirit of a child of God is a sympathizing spirit, it sadly lays to heart both the sins and sufferings of others. Observe, 4. The care that God took for this good man's preservation, he delivered just Lot; he delivered him both from the company and conversation of the wicked, which was a continual vexation to him; and also delivered him from the judgments which were righteously brought upon the wicked: "and delivered just Lot, vexed with the filthy conversation of the wicked."

9 The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptations, and to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished;

From the particular example of Lot, and his gracious preservation in Sodom's destruction, the apostle draws this general conclusion. "That Almighty God knows how to preserve his own faithful servants from the evil of temptations and trials, which they here meet with in the world, and from the world, and can and will reserve the wicked to the day of judgment to be punished." Note here, 1. That the Lord has a perfect and exact knowledge both of the righteous and the wicked, and of their several ways and doings. 2. That God knoweth many ways how to deliver the righteous, (but considering the tenor of his revealed will), he knoweth no way how to deliver the wicked, they having refused all ways of his appointment for their own deliverance. 3. That although the wicked sometimes escape trouble, yet they are never delivered from it; all their preservations from evils are but reservations for future and farther evil; the wicked are not so much preserved from, as reserved unto future wrath: thus we see how Almighty God very well knows how to perform all those things which he has promised to the godly, and threatened to the wicked: "The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly, but reserveth the wicked, &c."

10 But chiefly them that walk after the flesh, in the lust of uncleanness, and despise government; presumptuous are they, self-willed, they are not afraid to speak evil of dignities.

As if the apostle had said, "Though God reserves all wicked men to punishment, yet, especially heretics and seducers, who second their corrupt doctrine with a wicked conversation, such as walk after the flesh in the lust of uncleanness." Here note, That heretics are frequently unclean persons, monstrous opinions and vile affections accompany one another such as oppose the faith are flesh-defilers. Note farther, That seducers are opposers of civil-government and dominion, "they despise government, and are not afraid to speak evil of dignities." Some think the dignities here intended were the angels, others the apostles, but most understand it of civil rulers: it is a very heinous sin in the sight of God to despise government, and oppose rulers.

11 Whereas angels, which are greater in power and might, bring not railing accusation against them before the Lord.

That is, "Whereas the blessed angels, who have more power than men, when they plead against devils themselves, do it not by railing accusation." Note here, That angels are far superior to men in dignity and power. 2. That purity of affection does accompany angelical illumination; as the angels are above us, so are they the patterns of holiness to us. 3. They are eminently so with respect to the government of their passions; when they contend with devils themselves, it is without disturbance, without railing accusations. It is our duty to learn this angelical lesson, or forbearing railing accusations; not to return evil for evil, but being defamed, to entreat; we are to be as just to another's reputation as our own: they that handle the names of others rudely, must expect their own will be, at one time or other, hauled as roughly; nothing is more just with God, than to suffer others to open their mouths against those who will open their own mouths against others.

12 But these, as natural brute beasts, made to be taken and destroyed, speak evil of the things that they understand not, and shall utterly perish in their own corruption :

Observe here, What our apostle compares these heretical seducers to, and sets them forth by, brute beasts. 1. Because their minds run after sensual objects violently and impetuously, and they know no measure in the using of them; like swine, they wallow over head and ears in the mud of their sensual lusts. And, 2. They were also as secure as the brute beasts; they mocked at the denunciation of God's judgments, saying, "Where is the promise of his coming?" Seducers are perfect sensualists; it is a righteous thing with God to leave them to be governed by sense, who will not be guided by grace: they would not be saints, and at length they cease to be men; but like brutes fall into the ditch of beastly sensuality. O christian! beg of God that thy grace may be true and supernatural; for if it be only in appearance, and doth not arise to true sanctity, it may soon degenerate and sink down into sensual bestiality. In a word, 3. They are to perish, and to be destroyed like brute beasts; all seek to destroy them for their hurtfulness, but these moral beasts destroy themselves; sensual seducers perish in their own corruptions; in their natural corruptions, by their luxury and intemperance, bringing diseases and death upon their bodies: in their civil corruptions, overthrowing their families, by swallowing down their estates; yea, they corrupt themselves eternally, destroying body and soul by their excesses. Lord! how will the fatted glutton (without repentance) fry in hell; how dismal a recompence will a sea of brimstone be for a river of wine! They who are drowned in profuseness, shall certainly be drowned in perdition.

13 And shall receive the reward of unrighteousness, as they that count it pleasure to riot in the day-time: spots they are, and blemishes, sporting themselves with their own deceivings, while they feast with you :

14 Having eyes full of adultery, and that cannot cease from sin; beguiling unstable souls: an heart they have exercised with covetous practices; cursed children :

Here we have many sad and dreadful instances given of the height of sensuality and brutishness which these seducers were arrived at, and had attained unto. Lord! how do fleshly lusts, and sensual affections, obscure the light of conscience, and corrupt its judgments? There is such an intimate communion between the soul and the body, that they interchangeably corrupt one another. To what a desperate degree of hardness and insensibility, had the flames of lust seared the consciences of these men! They had lost all the ingenuous bashfulness of human nature, and pleased themselves in their licentious principles and practices, not declining to do that at noon day which heathens would have blushed to be found doing at midnight. Observe particularly, how luxury and uncleanness accompany each other; they took pleasure in rioting and sporting themselves in their feasts, and their eyes were full of adultery. They feasted and fed immeasurably, impurely, and lustfully, making their plenty fodder and fuel for their lusts: for, having fed to the full, every one neighed after his neighbour's wife, and putting out the candles after supper, they gave way promiscuously to the ravings of unbridled lust, turning the temple of the Holy Ghost into an hog-sty: but know, O unclean sinner! that God will return flames for flames, and revenge this fire in thy heart with the fire of hell. How nearly does it concern thee, who hast burnt in these impure flames of uncleanness, and kindled the flames of God's wrath, to labor to cool and quench them with the blood of Christ, and the tears of repentance, which alone can allay the heats of sin in thee, and of wrath in God? Let unclean sinners improve examples, lest they be made examples

15 Which have forsaken the right way, and are gone astray, following the way of Balaam, the son of Bosor, who loved the wages of unrighteousness ;

16 But was rebuked for his iniquity; the dumb ass, speaking with man's voice, forbade the madness of the prophet.

Our apostle having charged these men with insatiable lust in the former verse, proceeds next to tax them with insatiable covetousness in this verse, declaring that this sin had diverted them from the right way of truth and godliness, and caused them to imitate Balaam of old, whose love of honor and wealth so blinded his eyes, that the ass he rode upon could see beyond him, whose mouth God miraculously opened to rebuke the madness of the prophet. Note here, 1. How the wicked in after ages do in their courses and practices imitate such wicked persons as lived before them in former ages: these men follow the way of Balaam, imitate his covetousness and insatiable desire of wealth. Note, 2. That as it is the nature of all sin to carry men out of the way, so covetousness in particular will carry a man astray, and put him upon the practice of any wickedness; it neither fears nor forbears any sinful course to attain its end; they that will be rich meet with many enticements unto sin, and they will not fear to embrace any enticement. Nay, verily, a thirst after gain, will make a man thirst after blood, to get gain. Witness Balaam and Judas, who were both covetous and bloody. Covetousness is oftentimes the cause of uncleanness. How many, for the sake of money, have violated their matrimonial faith, allured more with the adulterer's purse than by his person. Let no person hope to escape any sin that embraces this one sin. Note, 3. What a mighty struggle there sometimes is in a natural man's conscience concerning sin. The light of Balaam's conscience made him refuse the wages of unrighteousness, and speak honorably: "If Balak would give me his house full of silver and gold, I cannot, &c." but at the same time lust in his heart led him forth strongly to desire it. "He loved the wages of unrighteousness;" loved it, yet durst not touch it. Note, 4. How extremely, yea, brutishly mad, such men are upon their lusts, who will not be rebuked or stopped in their progress of impiety without a miracle. Balaam's running was so greedy, and his march so furious, that he had cursed the people, had not the angel stopped him, and the ass spoken to him. Little thanks to a resolute sinner that he does not rush on, when the arm of omnipotency pulls him back. O let the heart changing power of the grace of God influence us to do good, as well as his almighty arm restrain us from evil, or we are miserable.

17 These are wells without water, clouds that are carried with a tempest; to whom the mist of darkness is reserved for ever.

Still our apostle proceeds in characterising and describing these seducers, which were then amongst them. He describes them before by their luxury and licentiousness, by their incontinency and uncleanness, by their insatiableness and covetousness, now he proceeds to discover their vanity and emptiness. They pretended indeed to be deep fountains of saving knowledge, but they were like wells without water; and to be clouds, containing abundance of rain, for the watering of the church; whereas they were like clouds carried about with the tempest of pride and ambition, from one vicious doctrine and practice to another, darkening the church; for whom by the just judgment of God, is reserved the blackness of darkness for ever. Note here, 1. The ministers of the gospel ought to be as wells, for depth of knowledge, for purity of doctrine, for residency and fixedness of abode; every one knows where the town-well stands; though ministers are wells of clay, yet should they be always full of the water of life, and always at hand for the people to have recourse unto. Note, 2. The ministers of Christ must be full and watery clouds, able and apt to teach, able to open scriptures, able to convince gainsayers, continually dropping down the heavenly dew; but not as clouds without water, without the water of true knowledge, without the water of holiness, sanctity both of heart and life, not without the water of consolation and refreshment. The highest commendation of a minister is industry for, and usefulness to the souls of others; clouds consume themselves by watering others. Note, 3. That although seducers are wont to make great shows and appearances of worth in themselves, yet it is a great and inexcusable sin to make show of that goodness of which we are wholly void, and to which we are also opposite; to be wells without water, and clouds without water, big and black, accompanied with emptiness and dryness. Appearing goodness sets men at the farthest distance from the real goodness; they that satisfy themselves in appearances, will never labor after holiness in reality.

18 For when they speak great swelling words of vanity, they allure through the lusts of the flesh, through much wantonness, those that were clean escaped from them who live in error.

The next sin charged upon these seducers is pride and ostentation, they speak big, great swelling words of vanity; with a lofty and affected style they propound their false doctrines to amuse the simple. It is the usual practice of seducers to speak in an high-flown strain of words, that, being not understood, they may be the more admired. Next they allure to their party such novice christians who had left the heathenish bestiality, and made an outward profession of the christian religion. The word rendered to allure, is a metaphor taken from fishes or fowlers, who produce the bait or shrap, but hide the net or snare. Seducers bait their hook with such baits as are proper to the fish they would catch, else they are no good anglers. But observe, why the bait is here before us, it is liberty, it is licentiousness, they allure through the lusts of the flesh: no bait like this. Learn hence, That the true reason why seducers have so many followers is this, because their doctrine is libertinism, and most agreeable to the carnal lusts and corrupt affections of men. This is the true reason why popery has had so many proselytes; they allure through the lusts of the flesh. Never was a religion better calculated for gratifying men's beastly lusts than popery: it indulges a liberty to all abominable lusts and unchristian practices, yet after all will blanch over wilful violations of God's laws with the favorable title of venial crimes, Sit anima mea cum philosophis; let my soul, at the great day, be rather found among the sober heathen philosophers, than among sensual and brutish christians.

19 While they promise them liberty, they themselves are the servants of corruption: for of whom a man is overcome, of the same is he brought in bondage.

Observe here, 1. How the old pretence for the most unbounded licentiousness has been "liberty; they promise you liberty;" a liberty to do any thing without fear: but this is not liberty properly, but licentiousness, which in reality is the greatest slavery. Accordingly it follows, "they themselves are the servants of corruption;" that is, such as promise you a sinful liberty, are the greatest slaves to sin and corruption themselves. All sin is servitude and slavery; and, when sin and sinners flatter men with the great opinion of liberty, it makes them the most miserable vassals, and the worst of slaves; for so many lusts, so many lords, so many vices, so many tyrants has a sinner over him;" for of whom a man is overcome, of the same he is brought in bondage." As when the conqueror brings the vanquished into captivity, he makes them slaves, and imposes on them vile and servile offices; in like manner, those lusts, by which sinners have been conquered and brought in bondage, they must needs be slaves unto. Is this liberty, to obey every lust as a petty slave? Call you this freedom, when a man cannot choose but sin? If to sin be the only liberty, they have no liberty in heaven; no, this is the service of corruption; a thraldom, not a freedom: "for of whom a man is overcome, of the same is he brought in bondage."

20 For if after they have escaped the pollutions of the world, through the knowledge of the Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, they are again entangled therein, and overcome: the latter end is worse with them than the beginning.

By escaping the pollutions of the world, understand their renouncing of them in baptism; their conversion from Heathenism to the profession of Christianity, by the knowledge of the gospel. Now, if afterwards they return to it again, and are entangled in their idolatry, and other gross sins, their latter end is worse than their beginning, their christian heathenism worse than their old heathenism. Learn hence, that a person may forsake many gross and scandalous sins, and have a visible change, and reformation wrought in his life: but not being a thorough and prevailing change, he is still in an unsafe state; his latter end may be worse than the beginning.

2 For it had been better for them not to have known the way of righteousness, than, after they have known it, to turn from the holy commandment delivered unto them.

As if the apostle had said, the sin and misery of these men had been far less, if they had never known the way of righteousness revealed by the gospel of Christ, than after they have known it, to forsake the practice of holiness, which by their baptismal profession they had obliged themselves unto. Learn hence, That to sin against light and knowledge received in and by the gospel is a very heinous aggravation of sin. The condition of persons simply ignorant is not so sad by far as theirs who have been enlightened, and yet afterwards have apostatized. A relapse is evermore dangerous than the first sickness, more soon incurred, more hardly cured. Woe to those that relapse from God to the world, from truth to error, from grace to vice; their latter end will be worse than their beginning, if they recover not themselves again by timely repentance.

22 But it is happened unto them according to the true proverb, The dog is turned to his own vomit again: and, The sow that was washed to her wallowing in the mire.

Observe here, The odious character given of apostates; the apostle compares them to dogs and swine, who, though washed in the water of baptism externally, yet their natures were never internally renewed by the Holy Ghost, as Christ's sheep are. All the outward reformation of life which is found in unrenewed persons, is but like the washing of a swine, which you may make clean, but can never make cleanly; upon occasion it will again to the mire; make the swine a sheep, change its nature, and it will never delight in filth more; but whilst it retains its filthy nature, it will delight in filthiness. Dogs that have disgorged their stomachs are dogs still: and swine washed are swine still. No wonder then if temptation draw them to return to their vomit, and mire again. O our God! as thou hast outwardly washed us in baptism, do thou inwardly renew us, and thoroughly sanctify us by thy Holy Spirit; as we are the workmanship of thine hands, make us also the sheep of thy pasture, that our love to purity may daily more and more increase: that when apostatizing sinners return to their vomit with the dog, and to the mire with the swine, and so draw back unto perdition, we may be of the number of those that persevere to the salvation of our souls. Amen.

CHAPTER III.

Our apostle having, in the foregoing chapter, at large described the seducers and false teachers, which in all ages trouble and perplex the church; he comes, in this chapter, to inform us, that those men would proceed to that height of impiety, as to scoff at the principles of religion, and to deride the expectations of a future judgment, which in the close of this chapter he describes; and exhorts christians to the love and practice of universal holiness, as the best preparative for the day of judgment; advising, that no profit may tempt them, no pleasure entice them, no power embolden them, no privacy encourage them, to do that thing which they would not be found doing, if judgment should surprize them in the doing of it. Accordingly thus he writes:

THIS second epistle, beloved, I now write unto you: in both which I stir up your pure minds by way of remembrance:

2 That ye may be mindful of the words which were spoken before by the holy prophets, and of the commandment of us the apostles of the Lord and Saviour:

Observe here, 1. The design of both St. Peter's epistles was one and the same, even to put them in remembrance of, and to call to their minds what they had formerly heard and understood, but possibly not retained, nor duly considered. "This second epistle I write; in both which I stir up your minds by way of remembrance." Note, the office of ministers is to be remembrancers. The Lord's remembrancers, by putting him in mind of the people's wants; their people's remembrancers, by putting them frequently in mind of their duty to God. There is then a constant necessity of a conscientious ministry; none are weary of it but such as love not to be remembered of their duty by it. Nay, farther, St Peter tells them, he would stir up their pure minds by way of remembrance; implying, that the memories of the best christians stand in need of refreshing, and the affections of the holiest want a fresh exciting. The freest christian sometimes wants a spur: we are slow to learn what we should do, and more slow to do what we have learnt. Great then is the sin of those who contemn repeated truths.

Cursed is that curiosity that despises a wholesome truth, because it is common. If we have such nice stomachs that will not endure to eat twice of the same dish, if wholesome; it is just with God, that want should overtake our wantonness. Observe, 2. What it is that he would have them remember and be mindful of; it is the word of prophecy in the Old Testament, and the doctrine of the gospel in and under the New, "that ye be mindful of the words spoken before by the holy prophets," namely, Enoch and Daniel, who prophesied of the general judgment of the last day, and of the destruction of Jerusalem, then at hand. Observe, 3. How St Peter here joins the prophets and apostles together, as concurring harmoniously in their doctrine; what was foretold by the prophets was confirmed by the apostles; hence they are said to have but one mouth, St Luke i. As he spake by the mouth of all his prophets, not by the mouths; for, though the prophets and apostles were many, yet had they all but one mouth, speaking all the same things."

4 And saying, Where is the promise of his coming? for since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation.

Observe here, 1. The persons foretold, or what sort of men should be found in these last days; namely, scoffers. These are the dregs of mankind, found in the dregs of time; they scoff sometimes at the word of God, sometimes at religion and the ways of good men; sometimes at sin, and the follies of those that are bad. The scoffing spirit, is a vile spirit; it is better to be a fool than a flouter; better to have a dull spirit than a deriding spirit; to deride God and religion is the height of impiety. Such as are in the chair of the scooner are in the highest form in the devil's school. Observe, 2. What it was that these men scoffed at: namely, at the prediction of our Saviour's coming to judge the world; they say, "Where is the promise of his coming?" because Christ did not come, when some looked for him, they concluded he would not come at all, but that all things should go on in a constant course, as they had done from the beginning of the creation. Observe, 3. The character of the persons who are called scoffers; they are said to walk after their own lusts, men of sensual spirits, and licentious lives. No wonder, that they who give themselves up to all manner of sensuality, to deny a judgment to come; for, as it is expedient for them that there should be none, so they endeavour to persuade themselves that there shall be none, and are glad to find arguments to fortify themselves in that persuasion. But surely God scorneth the scorners, he will laugh at their calamity, and mock when their desolation cometh. Lord! what a black and horrid ingratitude is this, to scoff at the Author of our beings, and the Patron of our lives; to live in defiance of him in whom we live? Is it not time for God to come and judge the world, when men begin to doubt whether ever he made it?

5 For this they willingly are ignorant of, that by the word of God the heavens were of old, and the earth standing out of the water, and in the water:

6 Whereby the world that then was, being overflowed with water, perished:

7 But the heavens and the earth which are now, by the same word are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment, and perdition of ungodly men.

These scoffers had declared in the former verse, that the world was the same it was from the beginning; that nature always bad, and therefore ever would keep its course. But says the apostle here, these scoffers know better; if they be ignorant, they are willingly ignorant what a change God made in the world since the first creation of it, and that he can as easily destroy it, as he did at first create it. To evidence this, the apostle shows how God by water drowned the old world, and therefore all things had not continued as they were from the beginning of the creation; and that this present world shall, when God's time is come, be ruined by fire, as the old world was by water. The same omnipotent power of God which created the world, upholds it and preserves it, and will at last destroy it, namely, at the final judgment, when all wicked persons, especially profane scoffers at, and deriders of Christ's coming, shall be condemned and perish. Hence learn, That those great and awful works of God, the creation, preservation, and final destruction of the world first by water, and next by fire, none ought to be ignorant of, but all ought to meditate frequently upon, and be continually prepared for. Note, 2. That the day of judgment will be a day of perdition to ungodly men, they shall then be utterly and eternally destroyed. The wicked are called in scripture sons of perdition; they are so actively, they make it their work to destroy others; and they are so passively, they shall be destroyed at that day, when they and their works shall be burnt up.

8 But, beloved, be not ignorant of this one thing, that one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years, as one day.

9 The Lord is not slack concerning his promise (as some men count slackness) but is long-suffering to us-ward, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance.

Our apostle here answers the cavil and objection of the fore mentioned scoffers, namely, that if Christ intends to come to judgment, why does he so long defer his coming? To this our apostle replies, 1. By assuring them that this delay ought not to be judged according to our sense and apprehension of things, for God does not measure time as we do, but a thousand years, which seem so long to us, are but a day, yea, but a moment to him who is eternal, and inhabiteth eternity. To the eternity of God no finite duration bears any proportion; to eternity all time is equally short; God does not measure time by our pole, nor cast up years by our arithmetic. 2. He assures them farther, that God's delay of judgment did not proceed from slackness, but from divine patience and goodness. He delays his coming, on purpose to give men time to repent, and by repentance to prevent their own eternal ruin. Learn hence, 1. That God's delay of judgment is no ground for sinners to conclude that he will not come to judgment, for our Saviour has now here fixed and determined the time of it. We can neither be sure when our Lord will come, nor certain when he will not come. Learn, 2. That the true reason why God defers judgment is, to give sinners opportunity for repentance, if this be not complied with, he reserves those who are incorrigibly bad to a more remarkable ruin, condemning them that will not be saved, but obstinately destroy themselves.

10 But the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night, in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also, and the works that are therein shall be burnt up.

Our apostle having asserted, that this solemn day of judging the Jews, at the destruction of Jerusalem first, and then of all mankind at the end of the world, will certainly come: he next shows the manner how, and that although this great day of the Lord comes slowly, yet it will come unexpectedly, like a thief in the night, surprising the secure and unprepared part of the world. The thief cometh without warning, and without noise, so shall the coming of the Son of man be. Rev. xvi. 15. "Behold I come as a thief, blessed are they that watch." Observe next, the apostle declares what a great change there will be when Christ comes to judgment, namely, a total dissolution of the whole frame of nature, "The heavens shall pass away with a great noise, the elements shall melt, and the earth be burnt up;" that is, say some, totally consumed and utterly abolished: for when there is no more need of sun and stars, of earth and water, why should they be any more? And when the saints see God face to face, what need of the glass of the creatures to behold the face of God in? Others conceive that the heavens and the earth shall not be annihilated, but bettered and improved, their substance continued, but their qualities changed: that out of this conflagration God will bring forth a new edition of heaven and earth, and of what is contained in them, to be the everlasting monuments of his own power and goodness, and the delightful objects of his saints' contemplation.

11 Seeing then that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness.

These words are St. Peter's practical improvement of the foregoing doctrine, concerning the certain, sudden, and terrible judgment of Christ to come. If the whole frame of heaven and earth shall be so wonderfully changed, and a new world made, how holy should they be, and how great a degree of purity should they labor to attain unto, who expect to live in this new world? Learn hence, That the firm belief of Christ's coming to judgment, and the dissolution of this sinful world by fire, should convince all christians of the necessity of, and engage them in their pursuits and endeavours after, a life of universal holiness, and that with the utmost care and possible diligence; "Seeing all these things, what manner of persons ought ye to be?" Heaven is an holy place, has holy company, holy employments, holy enjoyments; we must be qualified for it, before we can be admitted into it, and begin that life of holiness upon earth, which will never end in heaven; without a present meetness for heaven, we must never expect to be admitted into it, Col. i. 12.

12 Looking for and hasting unto the coming of the day of God, wherein the heavens being on fire shall be dissolved, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat?

Having exhorted persons by holiness to prepare for Christ's coming to judgment in the foregoing verse, he now directs them to expect and look for it, to desire and long after it, "looking for, and hasting unto the coming of the day of God," that joyful day of our perfect deliverance and salvation, when the lower heavens and earth shall be dissolved, and the elements melt with fervent heat. Learn hence, That there is or ought to be in all believers a vehement desire after, and a fervent longing for, the coming and appearance of our Lord Jesus Christ. O christian! long intensely for Christ's company, for know assuredly he longs for thine.

13 Nevertheless, we (according to his promise) look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness.

14 Wherefore, beloved, seeing that ye look for such things, be diligent, that ye may be found of him in peace, without spot, and blameless.

Observe here, 1. What is the subject matter of the christian's expectations, he looks for new heavens, and a new earth in which dwelleth righteousness, that is, only righteous persons, and perfectly righteous persons, where sin shall no more prevail. Observe, 2. What is the ground and foundation of this hope in the christian, it is the promise of God, "we (according to his promise) look for new heavens and a new earth." To hope for any thing that God has not promised, is presumption. Hope is the expectation of some future good which God has promised and faith believed. Observe, 3. How christians should qualify and fit, make ready and prepare themselves for this joyful hour, this desirable place and state: "Be diligent, that ye may be found of him in peace, without spot and blameless." Give all diligence that ye may be found at that day in a state of peace and reconciliation with God by justification, and without spot, and blameless, without any allowed spot or blame, by pressing now after the highest measures of sanctification, that so an entrance may both joyfully and abundantly be administered to you into that kingdom wherein dwelleth righteousness.

15 And account that the long-suffering of our Lord is salvation, even as our beloved brother Paul also, according to the wisdom given unto him, hath written unto you;

16 As also in all his epistles, speaking in them of these things: in which are some things hard to be understood, which they that are unlearned and unstable wrest, as they do also the other scriptures, unto their own destruction.

In these words St. Peter advises them to make an holy and wise construction of the forbearance of God in his delaying to come to judgment, not to think that God neglects them under sufferings, or is well-pleased with the perverseness of the wicked world in sinning; but his patience and long-suffering towards them is hereby displayed, in order to the bringing of them to repentance, and by repentance to salvation. "Account that the long-suffering of God," that is, the design of God in his long-suffering, is the sinner's salvation. Here note, That patience and long-suffering in God is an ability or power in him, not only to delay the execution of his wrath for a time, by a temporary suspension of it towards them that perish, and shall feel it at last; but to delay the execution of it towards others, in order to their eternal salvation, that they may never feel it. Observe, next, How this apostle, to add to the strength and authority of what he had spoken concerning the certainty of Christ's coming, and their duty to be in a ready preparation for it, doth make mention of St. Paul as bearing witness, in several places of his epistles, thereto. "Even as our beloved brother Paul hath written unto you in all his epistles, speaking in them of these things." As the prophets had all one mouth, so had the apostles also, speaking all the same things. Observe lastly, The testimony given by St. Peter to St. Paul's epistles. He acknowledges, 1. That there were some things in them hard to be understood. Mark, He doth not say many things, much less that all things in St. Paul were hard to be understood, but some things only. How vainly then doth the church of Rome produce this text, to prove the obscurity of the whole scripture? whereas the great and necessary things to our salvation are so plainly revealed in scripture, that even babes in Christ do apprehend and understand them. And though there be difficulties in other points, more remote from salvation, yet they are so far our exercise and trial, to excite our most intense study and diligence. Note farther, Who the persons are to whom the scriptures are hard to be understood, to the unlearned and unstable, who wrest and pervert them to their own destruction. The original word rendered to wrest, is a metaphor taken from torturers, who put a man upon the rack, they torment him so long till they make him speak what he never meant to speak; so these wrest a sense out of scripture which the Holy Ghost never intended. Scripturæ obscuritas non novæ regulæ necessitatem, sed spiritus illuminantis et ministerii exponentis necessitatem ostendit. Bishop Davenant.

18 But grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ: to him be glory both now and for ever. Amen.

Our apostle concludes his epistle with an exhortation to watch against the errors and false doctrines of seducers, lest we, being led away thereby, do fall from our own steadfastness in the faith of the gospel. It ought to be our care not only to be sound in the faith, but steadfast in the faith; and, that we may be so, we are here directed, 1. To grow in grace, in all grace, in faith, hope, and love; for grace establishes the heart, and, accordingly, steadfastness and increase of grace are here joined together. 2. To grow in knowledge; the way to be kept steadfast is to grow in grace; and the best way to grow in grace, is to grow in the knowledge of Jesus Christ, to know him in his person, in his offices, in his undertaking, in his doctrine, in his example; such a knowledge as this is of Jesus Christ, is fundamental to all graces. They all begin in knowledge, and are increased by knowledge. "Grow in grace and in the knowledge of Jesus Christ;" behold how these two keep equal pace in the soul of a christian, namely, grace and knowledge; in what degree one increases, the other increases proportionably. To the author and finisher of which grace, to the fountain and foundation of which knowledge, be ascribed all honor and glory both now and for evermore. Amen.

SAINT JOHN.

As touching the author and penman of this epistle, the church of God has in all ages concluded it to be St. John the apostle, the same person that wrote the gospel, though we do not find his name prefixed to either, which is looked upon as an evidence of his great humility; he that was so high in Christ's favor as to be called, The disciple whom Jesus loved, how little and how low was he in his own sight.

The time when he wrote this epistle is concluded to have been a little before the destruction of Jerusalem, because he speaks of the last hour now at hand, which is generally understood to be the last times of the Jewish state; and because of the many Antichrists and false Prophets, which were then amongst them, such as Christ tells us, Mat. xxiv. 24. were to be the immediate forerunners of that destruction.

The occasion of writing it seems to be twofold, partly to arm the Jewish converts against those loose doctrines, that faith without works, believing without doing righteousness, was sufficient to salvation; that men might be children of the light, and yet walk in darkness, the favorites of God without obedience to his laws, or love to his children or servants; and partly to fortify them against the impious errors of the Gnostics, who sprang from Simon Magus, and pretended to extraordinary measures of knowledge and divine illumination, from whence they had their name; but notwithstanding all these glittering appearances, they allowed themselves in all manner of impious and vicious practices.

Now that St. John particularly aims at these men, is evident from the frequent and plain allusions throughout this epistle, to those names and titles which the sect assumed to themselves; thus chap. ii. 4. He that saith I know him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him. This sect also pretended that, whatever they did, they could not sin. Hence is that of the apostle, chap. i. 8. If we say that we have no sin, the truth is not in us. In a word, these men not only held it lawful to renounce christianity, that they might avoid persecution, but also joined with the heathens in persecuting the christians; for which reason the apostle taxes them with hatred of their brethren, and calls them murderers; therefore to show the inconsistency of these principles and practices with christianity, the apostle writes this excellent epistle now before us, asserting, that nothing is more essential to a true christian than the love and practice of universal holiness; and let men pretend to what knowledge and faith they please, wickedness is a plain mark and character of the children of the devil. This is the general scope and design of John's epistle.

CHAPTER I.

THAT which was from the beginning, which we have heard, which we have seen with our eyes, which we have looked upon, and our hands have handled, of the Word of Life ;

It is first observable, that whereas St. John began his gospel with a description of Christ's divinity, as God, he begins his epistle with a demonstration of the truth of his human nature, as man ; for the certainty of which he appeals to the judgment of sense, because the senses, when rightly circumstantiated, are the proper judges of all sensible objects ; accordingly St. John here, to show the certainty of Christ's incarnation, and manifestation in the flesh, brings in three of the five senses, to wit, hearing, seeing, feeling, to bear witness to it, the latter still carrying a stronger testimony than the former : to see is more than to hear : to feel is more than to see : "that which we have heard, which we have seen, which we have handled." Observe farther, That to make the testimony yet more strong, St. John adds two words more, by way of confirmation, 1. That which we have looked upon ; now this is more than to see ; to see may be but a transient sudden act, but to look upon is a fixed and deliberate act, and usually a pleasing and delightful act ; we looked upon him as the rarest object, as the desire and the delight of our eyes. 2. It is added as the surest ground of certainty, that their hands had handled the word of life ; as they daily conversed with Christ, so they handled and touched him, both before his resurrection and after it ; so that from hence we may remark, that God has given us the highest and fullest assurances, that can be desired, of his Son's manifestation in our flesh, and appearing in our nature : he was heard and seen, looked upon, and handled, by those that conversed with him, which are evident demonstrations of the truth of the human nature assumed by him. Observe farther, That our apostle takes notice of Christ's divine nature, as well as asserts the reality of his human nature ; he styles him the word ; the word of life, and the word which was from the beginning : in the beginning, when all things received their being, then the word was, and did actually subsist, even from all eternity. Learn hence, That Jesus Christ, the eternal word, not only antecedent to his incarnation, but even before all time, and the beginning of all things, had an actual being and subsistence. Prov. viii. 23. "I was set up from everlasting, then was I by him as one brought up with him ;" thus was this Jesus, in whom we trust, both God and man, having two distinct natures in one person.

2 (For the life was manifested, and we have seen it, and bear witness, and show unto you that eternal life which was with the Father, and was manifested unto us.)

As if the apostle had said, "Christ Jesus, that eternal life which was with the Father from eternity, as being his eternal Son, was in the fulness of time manifested in the flesh, and we his apostles saw him in his assumed human nature, and do now testify, publish, and declare him unto you ; he was pleased to subject himself to the notice of our senses ; and what we have heard, seen, and felt, and has been manifested unto us, that we do with all integrity declare and manifest unto others." Note here, 1. The title given to Christ, he is life, eternal life, he is so in him-self, and he is the fountain of life to us ; we now live by him a life of justification : we derive from him a life of holiness and sanctification ; and we hope to live with him a life of glorification. Note, 2. This eternal life was from all eternity with the Father, and distinct from him ; he was with the Father, not as an instrument, but as an agent, in making of the world, Heb. i. 2, 3. And as his Father's delight, Prov. viii. 31. Note, 3. This eternal life, which from the beginning was with the Father, in the fulness of time was manifested to the sons of men ; manifested, not as he was to the prophets by faith, so they rejoiced to see him, John viii. nor in the similitude and likeness of flesh, so he sometimes manifested himself to the patriarch, Gen. xviii. but manifested in the flesh to his apostles, who eat and drank, discoursed and conversed with him. Note, 4. That what the apostles saw of Christ they made manifest to others : they had themselves sufficient satisfaction of the verity of Christ's human nature, and of the certainty of his doctrine, and therefore with mighty assurance they declare it unto others, and the reason of that declaration follows in the next verse.

3 That which we have seen and heard, declare we unto you, that ye also may have fellowship with us : and truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ.

As if he had said, "We declare unto you that of Christ which we ourselves have seen and heard, and what we had by sight and hearing you are to receive from our testimony ; and our design and end herein is sincerely this, that you may have fellowship, and be of one communion with us, and not with false teachers, and by virtue of your communion with us may partake of the same faith and grace, and all spiritual benefits and privileges which Christ has purchased for us ; and you will have no cause to repent of your coming into our communion and fellowship ; for verily we, and all that have sincerely embraced the doctrine of the gospel with us, have fellowship with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ, and with each other." Learn hence, That believers have communion with the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, and one with another. Quest. What doth this communion include? Ans. 1. Real union ; believers are united to God and Christ morally, conjugally, mystically. 2. Reciprocal community ; and community of enjoyments ; the Lord is theirs, and they are his ; a community of affection ; there is mutual love, mutual delight, mutual desires, and mutual hatred ; a community of interests ; they have the same designs and ends, the same enemies and friends ; a community of privileges ; the Lord visits them, and they visit him ; the Lord walks with them, and they with him ; the Lord observes them, and they observe him ; they impart the secrets of their hearts to him, and he imparts the secrets of his word and of his providence to them. Gen. xvii. 17. "Shall I hide from Abraham the thing that I do?" Quest. 2. What are the benefits and advantages of this communion? Ans. It affords the highest honor, the sweetest pleasure, and the chiefest happiness; it is heaven on this side heaven, our happiness and theirs differ only in degree, not essentially, but gradually. Blessed privilege!

4 And these things write we unto you, that your joy may be full.

Observe here, The great end for which the apostles penned and wrote the doctrine of the gospel, namely, that their joy may be full who do believe it and obey it. The joy which good men experience in the word of God, is a solid joy, a substantial joy, a full joy, a lasting joy. Worldly joy is nauseating but not satisfying; gluttony, but not filling: but that joy that is found in the holy scriptures, in the word and promise of God, is better experienced than expressed. Christianity doth not extirpate our joy, but regulate and refine it; it shows us the proper object of our joy, what to rejoice in, and the manner how, that we may not sin in rejoicing.

5 ¶ This then is the message which we have heard of him, and declare unto you, that God is light, and in him is no darkness at all.

That is, "This is the sum and substance of the gospel of Christ's doctrine, and our message, to teach us to know what God is, namely, light, that is, a being of infinite knowledge, wisdom, and purity; and that there is no darkness in him, no darkness of error, no darkness of ignorance, no darkness of falsehood, impurity, and sin, found with him, or can be pleasing to him. Note here, 1. The gospel is a message, a special and gracious message, sent by God to a lost world. The ministers of the gospel are messengers sent of God, to make known this message; and if so, then they must receive their mission from God, then their message depends not upon their own, but God's authority; then their people are to receive it, not as the message and word of man, but as it is indeed the word of God. "This is the message that we have heard, and declare unto you." Observe, 2. The metaphor which St. John makes choice of, to set forth the nature of God by. He describes him, 1. Affirmatively, God is light, his nature and attributes are (though darkly and imperfectly) resembled by it; the light, as it was the first of all creatures, shadows forth the eternity of God's being, who is the First and the Last; light, of all bodies, is the most immaterial and uncompounded, denoting the spirituality and simplicity of God's nature. Is the light diffusive, and cannot but impart itself, for the benefit of others? so is God communicative of his goodness to all persons, shining upon the just and upon the unjust. But according to the apostle's intendment here, light is of a pure and undefiled nature, it is a bright and spotless splendor; though it shines upon a dunghill, it contracts no pollutions; this represents the perfect purity and unspotted holiness of God. 2. Negatively, in him is no darkness at all; that is, God is so pure, that not the least impurity can cleave unto him; so holy, that no sin can be found in him, and consequently no darkness of sin or impurity can proceed from him. Learn we then, always to entertain high and holy thoughts of God, and to conceive of him as a being that hates sin, and all the works and workers of darkness, Psal. v. 4. "Thou art not a God that hath pleasure in wickedness, neither shall evil dwell with thee: sinners shall not stand in thy sight: thou hatest all workers of iniquity."

6 If we say that we have fellowship with him, and walk in darkness, we lie, and do not the truth.

7 But if we walk in the light as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another,—

Observe here, 1. What great plainness of speech St. John uses with and towards such persons as call themselves christians, and pretend to fellowship with God, but yet hold communion with sin, he says they lie. O how well do fervor, vehemency, and impartiality, become the ministers of Christ in reproving sin! health is found in those smart wounds which ministerial reproof makes. Observe, 2. St. John speaks in the first, not in the second person plural; if we say, not if you; if we apostles and ministers, as well as if you disciples and members of Christ, be guilty of this hypocrisy, we lie, and do not the truth; he does not say, and speak not the truth, but do it not; there is a twofold lie, the lie of the lip, and the lie of life, and the latter is the louder of the two; they lie, because they do not the truth, the same is, that a profession of piety and religion, accompanied with sin and unsuitable walking, is odious hypocrisy abhorred by God and man. Observe, 3. The practice of the sincere and serious christian, he walks in the light; that is, in the clear knowledge of the gospel, and in the exemplary and exact performance of his duty. Walking implies motion, it is a voluntary motion, an uniform and even motion, a progressive motion, a constant motion. To talk of religion is easy, but to walk wisely before God and man in the practice of our whole duty, requires diligence and circumspection. Observe, 4. The pattern after which the christian walks, and that is God; he walks in the light, as he is in the light; God is in the light, that is, all his actions are exactly pure and holy, and our walking must, for the quality of it, be holy, though for equality it cannot be so holy as God is holy. Observe, 5. A double privilege secured to such as walk in communion with God, we have fellowship one with another; justification by Christ, the blood of Jesus Christ, cleanseth from all sin. Note, 1. Such as walk in the light have a certain fellowship and communion with God and Christ, and the Holy Spirit, and they with him, and likewise an intimate fellowship and communion one with another. Oh! How great is our dignity! How gracious Christ's dignation! How high are we exalted? How long is he abased? The second privilege follows:

—And the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin.

Note here, 1. The pollution and uncleanness of sin implied and supposed in the word cleansing; sin is the great pollution and defilement of the soul, an universal pollution, an abiding pollution, a mortal pollution, and yet an insensible pollution. Note, 2. The remedy which the wisdom of God has provided against this malady, the soul's pollution by sin, and that is the blood of his Son; this cleanseth meritoriously, called therefore the blood of God, as being the blood of him that is truly and really God. Note, 3. The extent of the efficacy and virtue of this blood. 1. In regard of the universality of the disease, it cleanseth from all sin. 2. In regard of the permanency of the remedy, which is expressed in the present tense, it cleanseth; implying, that this blood doth never lose its efficacy; it cleanses still no less than it did the first moment it was shed; nay, it cleanseth virtually before it was shed; all the patriarchs and prophets were justified, and saved by faith in his blood, who was the Lamb slain from the beginning of the world, in the decree and purpose of God. Eternal thanks to our Lord Jesus Christ the Son of God, whose blood cleanseth from the guilt and filth of all sin.

8 If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us.

If we say, we apostles, we cannot say we are free from sin; much less can the proud Gnostics say so, who suppose and assert themselves to be in a state of perfection; and observe, he doth not say, if we say we had no sin, we deceive ourselves; but that if now we say we have none; intimating, that christians, as well after as before conversion, continue sinful persons; a perfect freedom from all sin being altogether unattainable in this life, not only by ordinary christians, but by the most eminent saints. The church of Rome will have it that this is magis humiliter quam veraciter dictum, rather spoken humbly than truly; but the apostle doth not say, humility is not in us; but, the truth is not in us; he saith not, we extol ourselves, and there is no lowliness in us; but, we deceive ourselves, and there is no truth in us; no truth of knowledge in our understandings, no real holiness in our hearts. Who can say, he has made his heart clean? We can neither ascribe what purity we have to ourselves, nor yet attribute perfection to our purity; and if so, how should we long for the day of redemption, when no sin shall affect us, no sorrow afflict us; when we shall be clothed with unspotted purity, perfect felicity, and that to all eternity.

9 If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness.

Behold here, 1. A double blessing promised and insured, namely, justification and sanctification, forgiveness of sin, and cleansing from it, yea, from all iniquity; when God pardons sin, no sin is left unpardoned; the sea can as easily drown a thousand men as a single man; God's act of pardoning grace is free and full. Observe, 2. The certainty of the mercy promised, God is faithful and just to forgive; not merciful and gracious, though so he is in himself, but faithful with respect to his promise to us, and just with respect to the satisfaction given by Christ for us. Almighty God in pardoning sin performs an act of strict justice with respect to Christ, as well as an act of grace and mercy, in regard of us, he is faithful and just, as well as gracious and merciful. Observe, 3. The indispensable duty required on our part, and that is confession of sin, if we confess. Now confession of sin is a penitent sinner's voluntary accusing himself to God, and condemning himself before God, with hatred of, shame and sorrow for, and a full resolution against his sin, together with an earnest desire of, and some good hope in divine mercy. Observe, 4. What relation confession stands in to remission, not as a meritorious cause, satisfaction, not confession merits pardon, but it is an exclusive condition, there is no remission without confession; God will not pardon without it: and it is an inclusive condition; God will, certainly will, forgive them that confess: there is not only a possibility or probability, but an infallible certainty of obtaining remission upon confession.

10 If we say that we have not sinned, we make him a liar, and his word is not in us.

Note here, The impiety and blasphemy of those who affirm themselves to be in a state of sinless perfection: they do not only lie themselves, but interpretatively, and as much as in them is, they make God a liar, by contradicting what he has asserted in his word, that all are sinners: so that upon the whole it appears, that to affirm we have no sin, is the highest pride, the greatest deceit, the loudest lie, the prophane blasphemy; it is to make the God of truth a liar, and to turn the truth of God into a lie, which evidences that his word is not in us.

CHAPTER II.

MY little children, these things write I unto you, that ye sin not. And if any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous:

2 And he is the propitiation for our sins: and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world.

Observe here, the compellation. First, My little children. The apostle calls the christians to whom he wrote, children, little children; his little children. He calls them children, because converted to christianity; little children, because young and tender christians, of a low stature in religion, and far short of manly perfection; and his little children, to denote that spiritual relation which was between him and them, and that endeared affection which he bore towards them. St. John by a loving compellation, makes way for a faithful admonition, which follows in the next words: These things I write, that ye sin not. This must be understood in a qualified sense, thus: 1. Sin not, That is, as the wicked sin; take heed of scandalous enormities, though you cannot shake off daily infirmities. 2. Sin not, as in the same kind that others sin, so abstain either in the same manner that you yourselves before sinned; sin not with that fulness of deliberation, with that freedom of consent; sin not with that strength of resolution, with that frequency of action, with which you sinned before you were called to christianity. 3. Sin not; that is, as far as human nature will admit, abstain from all sin; let it be your care, prayer, study, endeavour, to keep yourselves from every evil thing. Thus Zachary and Elizabeth were blameless, Luke, i. 6. that is, they lived in no sin known to the world, or known to themselves; so it is said of Job, chapter i. ult. he sinned not; that is, had no sin prevailing in him; no sin indulged by him. Observe, 3. As the cautionary direction, sin not; so the comfortable conclusion, but if any man sin, that is, through infirmity and weakness, through the policy of the tempter, or by the surprise of a temptation, we have an advocate, a mediator and an intercessor in heaven, who is absolutely sinless, even Jesus Christ the righteous. It is a metaphor taken from courts of judicature, where are the guilty person, the accuser, the judge, and the advocate: thus here heaven is the court, man is the guilty person, satan the accuser, God the judge, Christ the advocate. The proper office of an advocate is, not to deny the fact, or disown the guilt, but to offer something to the judge, whereby the law may be satisfied, and upon which the judge may, without any unrighteousness, discharge the accused. Observe, 4. An invaluable privilege here discovered, that Christ our advocate became a propitiation for us, and for the whole race of mankind, for all that lived before us, or shall live after us, for Jews and Gentiles; there is a virtual sufficiency in the death of Christ for all persons, and an actual efficacy as to all believers. Learn hence, That our Lord Jesus Christ, suffering death upon the cross for our redemption, did by that one oblation of himself once offered, make a full, perfect, and sufficient sacrifice, oblation, and satisfaction for the sins of the whole world. The original word propitiation, signifies a propitiatory covering, an allusion to the mercy-seat that covered the ark in which the law was: in allusion to which, Christ is here called our propitiatory covering, because he hides our sins, the transgressions of the law, from his Father's sight.

3 ¶ And hereby we do know that we know him, if we keep his commandments.

4 He that saith I know him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him.

5 But whoso keepeth his word, in him verily is the love of God perfected: hereby know we that we are in him.

Observe here, 1. That a christian may be assured of his salvation; to know that we know, is to be assured that we know, not only to have the vital, but the fiducial act of faith. Some christians can say, "We know that we know him." Observe, 2. The nature of true christian knowledge discovered: it is an obedient knowledge; it is not sufficient to profess that we know Christ, except we yield sincere obedience to him: for this is a certain mark and proof that we know Christ effectually, if we love him; and keep his commandments. The true knowledge of God consists in keeping of the word of God, the whole word of God, and because it is his. Observe, 3. That to say we know God, when we do not keep his commandments, and to say we keep his commandments, when we do not know him, is a lie. Sad will their condition be who perish for want of the knowledge of God, but much sadder theirs, who perish in the neglect or abuse of that knowledge. Observe, 4. That a conscientious care, and constant endeavour to observe the word, and keep the law of God, is a certain mark and evidence that he that doth it has the love of God perfected in him, and towards him; "Whosoever keepeth his word, in him verily is the love of God perfected."

6 He that saith he abideth in him, ought himself also to walk, even as he walked.

Observe here, 1. An high and honorable privilege supposed to be claimed, and that is union with Christ, and abiding in him; he that saith he abideth in him. The abiding in Christ is a great privilege, and the true and real christian doth truly and really abide in Christ. Observe, 2. A great and important duty belonging to all those that do abide in Christ, and that is to walk as Christ walked; to set his example daily before them, and to be continually correcting and reforming of their lives by that glorious pattern. Every christian is bound to an imitation of Christ, under penalty of forfeiting his claim to Christ; for no claim to Christ is or can be valid without a careful imitation of him. The temper of our minds, and the actions of our lives, must be a lively transcript of the mind and life of the holy and innocent Jesus; we must be like him, or we can never love him, nor hope another day to live with him.

7 Brethren, I write no new commandment unto you, but an old commandment, which ye had from the beginning; the old commandment is the word which ye have heard from the beginning.

8 Again, a new commandment I write unto you, which thing is true in him and in you; because the darkness is past, and the true light now shineth.

Our apostle here exhorts christians to the great duty of brotherly love, assuring them, that it was no new commandment which he enjoined them, but that which they were taught, not only in and by the Old Testament, but at the first preaching of the gospel amongst them; and in these respects the command of love might be called an old commandment, it being a branch of the law of nature, and a known precept of the Jewish religion; although in other respects it might be called a new commandment, because urged from a new motive, and enforced by a new example. Learn hence, 1. That the doctrine of christian love is a divine commandment, that which christians are not only allowed, but enjoined to practise; and it is called the commandment, in the singular number, to intimate, that in the one commandment all the rest were contained, so that in keeping this we keep all. What are all the commandments indeed but love enlarged? And what is love but the commandment contracted? Learn, 2. That the commandment of love is an old commandment; it is as old as Moses, yea, as old as Adam, being a part of the law of nature written in Adam's heart. The evangelical command of love was from the beginning of the law, and nothing new enjoined by Christ, which was not before by Moses. Learn, 3. That yet this command of love may, in some respect, be called a new commandment; not substantially, but circumstantially; not in the essence of the doctrine, but in the manner of the discovery; not in respect of the truth delivered, but in the way of delivering. New, not in regard of institution, but restitution, because purged from the old corrupt glosses of the pharisees, who had limited this duty of love, and confined it to their own countrymen; whereas Christ obliges his disciples to love mankind, even our very enemies. In a word, it may be called a new commandment, because it was never to wax old, but to be always fresh in the memory and practice of Christ's disciples to the end of the world. Observe next, The arguments to enforce the observation of this new commandment; 1. In those words, which thing is true in him and in you; that is, as there was in Christ a true and sincere love towards you, so look that there be a true and sincere love in you towards him, and one towards another. 2. "Because the darkness is past, and the true light now shineth;" that is, the darkness of ignorance in general, and the darkness of the Mosaic state in particular, is now past, and the true light of the gospel now clearly shineth.

9 He that saith he is in the light, and hateth his brother, is in darkness even until now.

10 He that loveth his brother abideth in the light, and there is no occasion of stumbling in him.

11 But he that hateth his brother is in darkness, and walketh in darkness, and knoweth not whither he goeth, because that darkness hath blinded his eyes.

Two things are here to be considered, namely, the grace and duty proposed and enforced, and the sin or vice specified and opposed. Observe, 1. The grace proposed, or the duty recommended, namely, the love of our brother; "he that loveth his brother abideth in the light, and there is no occasion of stumbling in him." Where note, 1. The nature of brotherly love; it is a gracious propensity of heart, which a christian bears, for Christ's sake, to his neighbour, whereby he will, and, to his power, procures all good for him; or it is that brotherly affection which every true christian chiefly bears to all his fellow members in Christ, for grace sake. Note, 2. The benefits attending the practice of this grace and duty, 1. His condition is happy, he abideth in the light: that is, he is in a state of grace. Charity is an evident demonstration of sanctity; and accordingly, St Paul, Gal. v. reckoning up the fruits of the spirit, placeth love in the front of them. 2. His conversation is holy, there is no occasion of stumbling in him; that is, he walketh inoffensively in a state of grace, and neither stumbleth himself, neither is there occasion given by him, that others should stumble, or be drawn into any sin. Observe, 2. The sin specified, and the vice opposed, namely, hating of our brother. He that hateth his brother is in darkness, and walketh in darkness." Where note, 1. It is not any hating, but hating our brother, that is forbidden, and that this hatred is not only forbidden whilst he is our friend, but when he becomes our enemy. To hate a friend is inhuman; to hate an enemy is unchristian. And further, it must be noted, that whatever falls short of the duty of loving, cometh within the compass of hating our brother; for every departure from love is a degree of hatred. Note, 2. The dismal character given of those persons who hate their brother; they are described by their wicked disposition; they are in darkness: by their vicious conversation; they "walk in darkness: by their miserable condition; they know not whither they go, because that darkness has blinded their eyes." From the whole learn, That we must love all, in the various kinds and manners, in the various measures and degrees, according to which God appeareth in them: that is, we must love all men, a men, above the brutes; and we must love all professed christians, above all other men; and we must love real christians, especially such of them as are eminent for wisdom, goodness, and usefulness, above all other christians. The light of knowledge and the heat of love must be inseparable.

12 I write unto you, little children, because your sins are forgiven you for his name's sake.

13 I write unto you, fathers, because ye have known him that is from the beginning. I write unto you, young men, because ye have overcome the wicked one. I write unto you, little children, because ye have known the Father.

14 I have written unto you, fathers, because ye have known him that is from the beginning. I have written unto you, young men, because ye are strong, and the word of God abideth in you, and ye have overcome the wicked one.

Observe here, 1. The care which God has taken, not only to have his word preached, but written; I write unto you, partly to supply his ministers' absence, that their writings might be instead of vocal instructions, partly to perpetuate truth unto posterity, and to transmit divine revelations to future ages. Observe, 2. The subject or persons whom our apostle writes to; fathers, young men, and children; where, in general, the great wisdom of the apostle is to be observed, and taken notice of, that he contents not himself with generals, but directs his discourse particularly to old and young; plainly intimating, that none are too young to receive instruction, none are old enough to reject it, and if St. John wrote to persons of all ages and conditions, then the sacred writings are to be read to, and read by, persons of every age and condition soever. And if the scriptures be perverted by some, that is not a natural effect, but only an accidental consequent of reading the scriptures. Now, as evil must not be done that good may come of it, so good must not be left undone, though evil come of it. Observe, 3. The duty which all sorts of christians ought to be exhorted and excited to, and that is love; love to God, accompanied with obedience; and love to all christians, in obedience to the command of God. It belongs to all sorts of christians, weak and strong; to all ages of men, young and old, children and fathers, to expel the poison of anger and hatred out of their bosoms, and mutually to embrace one another. Observe, 4. The reasons of our apostle's writing to all christians in general, and to each age in particular. Note, 1. The reason assigned for writing to children, ver. 12. "Because your sins are forgiven you for his name's sake:" therefore ought you mutually to forgive, and cordially to love one another. Note, 2. The reason assigned for writing to fathers; "Because ye have known him that is from the beginning;" that is, Jesus Christ, who in respect of his divine nature, had a subsistence from the beginning; that is, from all eternity: and if so, then our blessed Saviour had a being antecedent to his conception, and before he was born of the Virgin Mary; he then began to be man, but he did not then begin to be; for before Abraham was he was; and he prays to his Father, John xvii. 6, to glorify him with the glory which he had with him before the world was. Mark, it is not said, with the glory which thou preparedst for me in thy decree and purpose before the world was, as the Socinians would have it, but the glory which I had with thee. He that gave being to all things, must have a being before all things. Note, 3. The reasons assigned for writing to young men, "Because ye are strong, and have overcome the wicked one, and the word of God abideth in you." Here we have observable, 1. The enemy described, satan, called the wicked one: not that he was so by creation, but by his apostasy and defection. Because the first wickedness, because most industriously wicked, and because most obstinate and persevering in wickedness. 2. The conquest ingeminated: Ye have overcome the wicked one. Mark, he doth not say, You have made a league with him, but overcome him: there is no way to accommodate or compound matters with satan, no way to deal with him, but by victory: we are said to overcome him, because we are sure to overcome him; resist him, and he will flee; and because we have overcome him in God's account, and because we have begun to overcome him. Yield to him, and you will find him an imperious tyrant; resist him, and you will find him a timorous coward. 3. The combatants, young men. Youth is the warlike age; young men are fit for action, old men for advice; young ones should begin this spiritual war betimes, possibly they may never live to be old; or if so, victory will be the more difficult, by how much the longer it is delayed; and God may deny thee that grace which now thou deniest thyself. The proverb says, "A young saint, but an old devil;" but it is very hard for a young devil to become an old saint: whereas a young christian soldier is most amiable in God's eye, and most terrible in the devil's. 4. The aid, helps, and assistants by which this victory is attained, ye are strong, that is, made partakers of divine strength; ye have your second in the field, the Holy Spirit, you are strong in the Lord, "And the word of God abideth in you." By the strength of God, and the abiding of his word and grace in us, we overcome the wicked one, and prevail against him. God's word is the richest treasury to supply our wants, and the strongest armory to oppose our enemies. "I write unto you, young men, because ye are strong, and the word of God abideth in you, and ye have overcome the wicked one."

15 Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him.

16 For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world.

17 And the world passeth away, and the lust thereof: but he that doeth the will of God abideth for ever.

Observe here, 1. That our apostle doth not, as he did before, direct his advice to any one particular sort or rank of christians in special, but unto all in general; Love not the world, &c. Observe, 2. That the prohibition here is not absolute, but comparatively only. It is not an ordinata charitas, but inordinata cupiditas, that is here forbidden; we may look upon the world, and desire it, delight in it, and in the enjoyment of it, provided we do not choose it for our portion, delight in it as our chief good. Observe, 3. St. John doth not say, Leave the world, but Love not the world; he doth not say, use not the world, but Love it not; that is, seek not after the world inordinately, and delight not in it immoderately: seek it we may, but not in an undue manner; delight in it we may, but not in an undue measure. Observe, 4. The arguments which our apostle makes use of to enforce his dehortation. 1. The contrariety of the love of the world to the love of God; "If any man love the world" (in an undue manner and measure) "the love of the Father is not in him;" that is, the worldly lover has no interest in the Father's love; the world's darlings are none of God's friends, and the world's lover has no love of the Father in him: there is no positive love of God in him in whom there is a superlative love of the world. Lord, how desperate and dangerous a sin then is worldly love? If the love of the Father be not in him, the hatred of the Father is toward him, James iv. 4. "Know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity with God." A second argument to dissuade from worldly love is contained in the 16th verse: For all that is in the world; that is in esteem and vogue with the men of the world, is either the lust of the flesh, that is all sensual delights and enjoyments, which occasion intemperance: or the lust of the eye, the desire of gold, silver, stately houses, rich gardens, which tend to gratify the eye: and the pride of life, or the desires of honors and dignities, high titles, and places of advancement, which tend to gratify our pride, all these are not of the Father; that is, they are not desires excited by him, nor are they pleasing to him, but are the desires of the men of the world, and proceed from that corruption which is in them. The third argument is taken from the world itself, and its short continuance, in the 17th verse, the world passeth away, that is, all the things of the world, which the men of the world doat upon, and are in love with, are of a fading transitory nature in themselves, and they pass away from their possessors and owners. And the Lusts thereof: that is, the pleasure which they had in gratifying their lusts passeth away, but the sting remaineth, and the torment abideth. It is added, "But he that doeth the will of God abideth for ever." Behold here the permanent felicity, not of the knowing, but obedient christian. He abideth for ever, not in this, but in the other world, in a state of endless happiness. Although eternity, in its most comprehensive notion, be peculiar to a Deity, and incommunicable to a creature, yet it is that which God has made rational creatures capable of; and as he abideth for ever, so will he grant to them that do his will to abide with him for ever also; "The world passeth away, and the lusts thereof; but he that doeth the will of God abideth for ever."

18 ¶ Little children, it is the last time; and as ye have heard that antichrist shall come, even now are there many antichrists: whereby we know that it is the last time.

19 They went out from us, but they were not of us: for if they had been of us, they would no doubt have continued with us; but they went out, that they might be made manifest that they were not all of us.

Our apostle having warned them against the danger of covetousness in the foregoing verses, he cautions them against the danger of deceit in these; he tells them, that this is the last time of the Jewish dispensation, and that the destruction of their city, temple, and polity, was now at hand; and as they had heard that antichrist should come, accordingly now there were many antichrists come; that is, opposers of Christ, and deniers of him to be the Christ; and by the swarming of these seducers and false teachers now, according to our Saviour's prediction, Matth. xxiv. they might well conclude it was the last time. Observe next, These antichrists are described by the communion which they once were of, to wit, the christian communion: They went out from us, from us apostles, and from us christians, being false brethren, and unsound christians: for if they had been of us, as members of the same body, and had joined with us apostles, in planting and propagating the same christian faith, "They would no doubt have continued with us," professing the same faith, and preaching the same doctrine which we do; but they left us, that it might be made manifest that they were not all of us. Here note, That these antichristian impostors had been in the bosom of the church, and made a profession of the christian faith: so did the false apostles, the judaizing teachers, mentioned Acts xv; so did Simon Magus, Nicholas, and Cerinthus. The church's seeming members prove her worst friends, the foxes within do more mischief than the wild boar without. Quest. But is it not then lawful to depart from the communion of a church whereof we have been formerly members? Ans. Yes, if she departs from herself: if she degenerates and grows so corrupt a body, and be so far infected, that we cannot communicate with her without sin, which was the case between us and the church of Rome, her doctrines were erroneous, her worship idolatrous; we went out from them, because they went out from the ancient apostolical church. Non fugimus; sed fugamur: Not we, but they made the separation, and consequently the schism lies at their door.

20 ¶ But ye have an unction from the Holy One, and ye know all things.

As our apostle had said, "Although there are many antichrists and seducers abroad in the world, yet the most holy God hath anointed you with his Holy Spirit, which will preserve you from pernicious error, and lead you into all necessary truth, if you obey and follow him." Observe here, 1. A privilege enjoyed. "Ye have an unction from the Holy One." By which understand the Holy Spirit in its sanctifying gifts and graces, which consecrates believers as kings and priests unto God. Observe, 2. The advantage of that privilege declared. Ye know all things: not absolutely, but with restriction and limitation: All things: that is, all divine things, all divine things revealed, and all things revealed that are necessary to salvation: All things needful to be known, and as far as needful for you to know: all things relating to God, Christ, the Holy Spirit, ourselves, sin, satan, the law, the gospel, grace, and glory; ye know all these things by virtue of your unction.

21 I have not written unto you because ye know not the truth: but because ye know it, and that no lie is of the truth.

22 Who is a liar, but he that denieth that Jesus is the Christ? He is antichrist, that denieth the Father and the Son.

23 Whosoever denieth the Son, the same hath not the Father; [but] he that acknowledgeth the Son, hath the Father also.

Observe here, 1. The character given of the gospel; it is the truth, the word of truth, the way of truth, confirmed by real miracles. It is divine truth, universal truth, effectual truth, and no lie; for Almighty God would never have set the seal of his omnipotence to a lie, and have confirmed it by signs and wonders, miracles and gifts of the Holy Ghost, had it been false. Observe, 2. The character given of the heretics in St. John's days, and in our days also, they denied that Jesus is the Christ, and therein deny the Father and the Son: "For whosoever denieth the Son, the same hath not the Father;" that is, he denieth the Father's well as the Son; for not having the Father, and denying the Father, is the same thing, ver. 22. "He is antichrist that denieth the Father, and the Son." This is a text in which every Socinian may see himself an atheist; he that denies the divinity of the Son, denies the Deity of the Father: for such is the nature of the Godhead, that one of these cannot be alone; the Father is not without the Son, nor can be; nor can the Son be without the Father; this coherence is inseparable and inviolable; therefore he that denies the eternal

Son, denies the eternal Father; and if it be atheism to deny the divinity of the Father, it is no less to deny the Deity of the Son; for he that denieth the Son, denieth the Father also. There is such a connection between these two, the Father and the Son, they being co-essential and co-eternal, that if you deny the divinity of the one, you deny that of the other: therefore they are atheists that deny the divinity of Christ, as well as they that deny the being of a God: "For he that denieth the Son, denieth the Father also."

24 Let that, therefore, abide in you which ye have heard from the beginning. If that which ye have heard from the beginning shall remain in you, ye also shall continue in the Son, and in the Father.

These words are an exhortation to hold fast, and not to forsake the doctrine of christianity, which from the beginning they have received, and not to turn to novelties. "Let that abide in you which ye have heard from the beginning;" that is, from the first preaching of the gospel. Note here, What is truth and true doctrine, namely, that which was delivered from the beginning. Truth is error's elder, though error is not much truth's younger. Note, 2. By what means they received the evangelical doctrine, namely, by hearing; let that which you have heard abide in you. No sense more needful than that of hearing, for the benefit and advantage of man; both as he is by nature a reasonable creature, by converse a sociable creature, and may be by grace a new creature; faith cometh by hearing. Note, 3. The duty required with reference to what they had heard; "let that which ye have heard abide in you," namely, by a careful remembrance of it, and by resolute adherence to it. The sum of this exhortation is, that we retain and maintain the ancient catholic and apostolic faith; and verily when we consider how tenacious heretics are of their novel errors, it may bring a blush into our faces to consider how ready we are to be withdrawn from primitive truths. Observe next, The motive with which our apostle doth enforce and back his exhortation.—"If that which ye have heard remain in you, you shall continue in the Son, and in the Father;" that is, in the love and favor of the Son, and of the Father, and in communion with both. Quest. But why is the Son put before the Father here? Partly to insinuate, that the Son is no less in essence and dignity than the Father, but equal in both; accordingly, the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ in the apostolical benediction, is mentioned before the love of God the Father: and partly, because no man cometh to, or continueth in the Father; but by the Son; "He is the way, the truth, and the life." The doctrine of the gospel comes from Christ; it leads to Christ, and by him unto the Father. See John xiv. 23. "If a man keep my word, we will make our abode with him."

25 And this is the promise that he hath promised us, even eternal life.

Observe here, 1. How gracious Almighty God is to enforce his commands with promises of reward; he required of us adherence to the truth, and perseverance in it, in the former verse; here he promises eternal life, by way of encouragement in this verse. Observe, 2. The benefit promised, life, eternal life; the greatness of this life is immeasurable, the worth of this life is inestimable; the joys of this life innumerable, the duration of it is interminable. Observe, 3. The certainty of the conveyance; this is, the promise promised. Mark, he doth not say purposed, but promised. A purpose is a secret and a hidden intention of the mind, but a promise is a revelation of that intention; yea, it is more than a declaration. A promise makes sure, as well as makes manifest; especially God's promise, which has his oath for the confirmation of it, Heb. vi. 17. Observe, 4. The peculiarity of the persons to whom the promise is made, he hath promised us: not to us as apostles only, but to us as christians; all that are born of God are begotten to a lively hope of an inheritance, incorruptible and undefiled, and that fadeth not away: again, he has promised us, not promised all eternal life, but us, who are thus and thus qualified, who keep his commandments, and walk as he walked. Observe, 5. The eminency of the author by whom this promise is made, in the relative he; "This is the promise which he hath promised us." Here note, That eternal life was promised by God to good men under the Old Testament; Heb. xi. 16. tells us, that the Old Testament saints desired a better country, to wit, an heavenly; now how could they have desired it, if they had not known it? And how could they have known it, if God had not revealed it? And Christ bade the Jews search the scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life: intimating, that in the writings of Moses, eternal life was made known typically and darkly, not so clearly and fully as by the gospel, 2 Tim. i. 10. He is holy, and cannot lie; righteous, and cannot deceive; immutable, and cannot repent.

26 These things have I written unto you concerning them that seduce you.

27 But the anointing which ye have received of him, abideth in you: and ye need not that any man teach you: but, as the same anointing teacheth you of all things, and is truth, and is no lie, and even as it hath taught you, ye shall abide in him.

Observe here, the pious care which St. John expresses for the preservation from heretics and seducers, "These things have I written to you concerning them that seduce you." That is, to arm them against the seducers then amongst them; intimating, that men are naturally prone to error, yea, to fundamental errors. 2. That to be seduced by, and led into such errors, is dangerous and destructive. 3. That it is the special duty, and ought to be the singular care of the ministers of Christ, to warn their people of, and arm them against errors and erroneous persons, against seducers and seduction; "These things I write concerning them that seduce you;" that is, those who endeavour to seduce you. Observe next, The encouragement which St. John gives them against the seducers, and their seduction, the anointing which ye have received from Christ, that is, from the special illumination of his spirit, this abideth in you, teaching you all things necessary for you to know, so that you need not any man to teach you; that is, any new doctrine, any new fundamental principles of faith. Note here, That christians, savingly enlightened by the Spirit of God, need no new gospel or doctrine to be instructed in; but they need farther teaching still in order to their better improvement in what they know: vain therefore are the Quakers, and other sectaries' arguments drawn from hence, against all ministerial teaching; because the Spirit teaches, man must not teach; whereas the Spirit teaches mediately, by man, and not immediately by itself. When those seducers can show that they have such an immediate and extraordinary afflatus of the Holy Spirit, as was vouchsafed to the primitive christians, then let them cry down the necessity of ministerial teaching, not before.

28 And now, little children, abide in him; that when he shall appear, we may have confidence, and not be ashamed before him at his coming.

Still our apostle reinforces his foregoing exhortation to abide fixedly in Christ; that is, in the doctrine of Christ, in true christianity: "and now, little children, abide in him:" and the argument which he makes use of is forcible and cogent, namely, "That when Christ shall appear, we may have confidence, and not be ashamed before him at his coming." Here note, 1. Something supposed, namely, the coming and appearance of Christ; he shall appear. 2. Something implied; namely, our appearance before Christ in the day of his appearance. 3. Something expressed, namely, the confident appearing before Christ, of all those who abide in him; "That we may have confidence, and not be ashamed before him at his coming." Whence learn, That the persevering christian shall have confidence before Christ at his coming; shall lift up his head without shame or blushing, from the testimony which conscience bears of his sincerity, and from the interest he has in the Judge: but, on the other hand, they that do not persevere and abide in Christ shall be ashamed before him at his coming; ashamed of their gross hypocrisy, of their vile unfaithfulness, of their manifest folly.

29 If ye know that he is righteous, ye know that every one that doeth righteousness is born of him.

Our apostle concludes the chapter with an exhortation to holiness and righteousness; assuring them, that if they be sensible (as they must necessarily be) that God is righteous, essentially and infinitely holy and righteous; they may and ought to know also that whosoever is born of him, and doth receive a new nature from him, doth certainly endeavour to live unto him, and to walk before him as his child in a way of obedience, and to expect favor and protection from him as from a father. Learn hence, That all that sincerely have a righteous life towards God and man, are certainly born of God: and such as are born of God do certainly live that righteous life: then, and only then, may we know that we are indeed God's children, when the image of our heavenly Father is instamped upon us, and the disposition of his children wrought in us: when there is a happy conformity in creatures to the holiness of God's nature, and in our lives to the righteousness of his law; when he beholds his own face in the glass of our souls, and loves us for his own image instamped and impressed upon us.

CHAPTER III.

BEHOOLD, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God!

Our apostle begins this chapter with wonder and admiration at the astonishing goodness and condescension of Almighty God towards believers, in taking them into his family, and adopting them into the number of his children: that strangers and enemies should be dignified with the honorable and amiable title of his sons; it is the same relation that Christ has, "I ascend to my Father and your Father;" there is indeed a diversity in the foundation of it: Christ is a Son by nature, we by favor; he by generation, we by adoption: however, not only crowns and sceptres are beneath his dignity, but the honor of our innocent state was not equal with it; well might the apostle then break out with an heavenly astonishment, and say, "Behold, what manner of love is this, that we should be called," accounted and acknowledged, for the children of God! Here note, 1. That it is the high and honorable privilege of all true believers, that they are now the sons of God. They are so, 1. By regeneration: they are made partakers of the divine nature; not in the essence of it, but in the gracious qualities of it, which enables them in some measure to resemble God their Father; they receive a principle of spiritual life from God which enables them to live unto God; and this principle received in regeneration: it is an inward principle, an universal principle, a God exalting principle, and an abiding principle. 2. They are children by adoption also: adoption is the acceptance of a stranger into the relation and privileges of a son; it was a rare condescension in Pharaoh's daughter to rescue Moses, an innocent and forsaken stranger, from perishing by the waters, and adopt him for her son; but, O! how much greater kindness was it for Almighty God to save guilty and wretched man from eternal flames, and to take a rebel into his family! This privilege of being the sons of God by regeneration and adoption, is a choice and gracious privilege, an high and honorable privilege, a free and undeserved privilege, a lasting and abiding privilege. Observe, 2. As the privilege itself, so the fountain cause of it, the fountain from whence it doth proceed and flow, namely, from the gratuitous love and free favor of God; what manner of love has the Father bestowed upon us? He cannot say what, nor how great it was; he admires it, but cannot declare it; yet though adoption was the effect of God's free love, it was the fruit of Christ's rich purchase; he of a Son became a servant, that we of slaves might become sons. Observe, 3. In a word, Behold! a note of attention and admiration both; God expects, the gospel requires, and the privilege of adoption deserves, that it be beheld with love and wonder, taken notice of with joy and thankfulness, and improved for growth in grace and advancement in holiness: "Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us?"

—Therefore the world knoweth us not, because it knew him not.

Note here, 1. That the believer's dignity, though real and great, is altogether unknown to the unbelieving world; they are so far from acknowledging them to be God's children, that they mock and scoff, jeer and deride them, for pretending so to be; and as they little know them, so do they less affect and love them, but hate and persecute them. The world knoweth us not. Note, 2. The reason assigned why the world knows not the children of God, Because it knew not him: God once made himself manifest to the world in and by his Son; Christ, in whom dwelt the fulness of the Godhead, came and dwelt among us, but the world knew him not, received him not; and if they saw no beauty in him who had strength of grace, and no corruption in him, is it any wonder that they see no excellency in them in whom is much weakness of grace, and too great strength of corruption? "Therefore the world knoweth us not, because it knew him not."

2 Beloved, now are we the sons of God; and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is.

As if the apostle had said, "Although the world knows us not, affects us not, esteems us not, because of the weakness of our grace and the strength of our corruptions, yet notwithstanding both these, we are now the sons of God; this is the happiness of our present condition, we are as children in their minority; we are not grown up for the inheritance, but we are growing; we are not what we would be, we are not what we should be, we are not what we shall be; but blessed be God we are what we are; now are we the sons of God." Observe, 2. As to the honor and dignity of the christian's privilege in this life asserted, we are now the sons of God, so their happiness and glory in the next life described, 1. By way of negation. "It doth not yet appear what they shall be;" the glory which God has prepared for all his adopted children and people, is an hidden glory, a glory that doth not yet appear; what the saints shall be in their perfect state of glory doth not yet appear to them in this imperfect state of grace. 2. By way of positive asseveration, "But we know that when he shall appear we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is." Here note, 1. The certainty of Christ's appearance declared, He shall appear. 2. A double benefit which believers may expect at his appearing. 1. They shall be like him, as well in holiness as in happiness, as well in purity as in immortality; like him in a perfect freedom from sin, like him in the ardor and intense fervency of their love; like him in the perfection of grace, and the unspotted purity of his holy nature. 2. They shall see him, That is, his glory, with a clear and immediate sight, with a full and comprehensive sight, with an assimilating and transforming sight, with an appropriating and possessive sight, with a satisfying and everlasting sight.

3 ¶ And every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure.

Every one that hath this hope, that is, the hope of seeing and enjoying Christ in glory, he now endeavours to purify himself according to the pattern and copy which Christ hath set before him, laboring to imitate it, though he cannot reach it. Observe here, 1. The character of a christian by this hope, every man that hath this hope in him. Learn, That a christian is a person of high hopes, and raised expectations, as to future blessedness; the author of this hope is God; the object of this hope is some future good promised and expected; the grounds of this hope are the promise and oath of God, the purchase and undertaking of Christ, and the sanctifying work of the Spirit in and upon his soul. Observe, 2. A description of this hope by its inseparable effect, it purifies the christian; he that has this hope purifies himself; where it is implied, 1. That sin is a pollution which we must be purified from. 2. That the holiest of saints here on earth, are not perfectly purified from the pollution, but are daily endeavouring to purify themselves more and more. Observe, 3. The pattern after which the sincere christian doth conform in this work of purification, and that is Christ: he purifies himself, even as he is pure; intimating, that the Lord Jesus Christ was a perfect pattern of purity; and that it is the christian's duty to eye this pattern, and to endeavour to conform himself thereunto, by purifying himself, even as Christ is pure.

4 Whosoever committeth sin transgresseth also the law: for sin is the transgression of the law.

5 And ye know that he was manifested to take away our sins: and in him is no sin.

Whosoever committeth sin, that is, whosoever lives in the allowed commission of it, lives in rebellion against, and in a flat opposition to the law of God, sin being a transgression of God's laws; and such a person as thus commits sin, not only violates the law of God, but also frustrates the death of Christ; for Christ, in whom there was no sin, was manifested in the flesh to take away sin, the guilt of it by his blood, the power of it by his Spirit, and consequently we must purify ourselves from it, if we hope to see him as he is. Learn hence, That nothing can be more unreasonable and absurd, than to expect salvation with God in heaven by a sinless Saviour, if we allow ourselves in a course of sin; nothing being more contrary than this to the design of Christ's death, which was not only to deliver us from the danger, but from the dominion of our sin; not only to expiate our sins, but to make us sinless like himself.

6 Whosoever abideth in him sinneth not: whosoever sinneth hath not seen him, neither known him.

That is, "Whoever lives in sin, and goes on in a course and trade of sinning, is the servant and slave of sin: and although his reason condemns him, his conscience boggles at it, and his will is something averse to it, yet if he yields his members instruments of unrighteousness unto sin, he is the servant of sin; and whatever his pretence may be, he has no right knowledge of Christ, nor any true faith in him; for whosoever abideth in him thus, sinneth not." Learn hence, That the sincere christian, so far as he is in Christ, and by faith united to him, and is taught and ruled by him, sinneth not; that is, he makes it his constant care, and continual endeavour to shun and avoid all sin. 2. That such persons as go on in a course of sin, let their pretences to christianity be what they will, they never had any experimental knowledge of Christ, no fellowship of communion with him; nor can ever hope to be happy in the fruition and enjoyment of him: "Whosoever sinneth hath not seen him, neither known him."

7 Little children, let no man deceive you. He that doeth righteousness, is righteous, even as he is righteous.

As if the apostle had said, "Let no man deceive you by making you believe, that a right faith may consist with an unrighteous life, for only he that doeth righteousness is righteous. Note here, 1. That there is a twofold doing of righteousness. 1. In a legal sense, which stands in an exact obeying and fulfilling the law: and thus there is none righteous, no not one. 2. In an evangelical sense, a walking uprightly, according to the rule of the gospel, conscientiously avoiding all known sin, and performing every commanded duty; it is not a single action, but a constant course of holy actions, that denominates a person holy; a righteous man makes righteousness the business of his life; his daily care is how to please God in all he does. Note, 2. That it is the duty of every christian, that would not be deceived as to his spiritual state and condition, to try himself by this infallible mark and rule of trial; "He that doeth righteousness is righteous; he that doeth not righteousness is not of God." Christian, inquire not so much what thy affections are, what thy desires are, what thy joys and comforts are, as what thy actions are; not what thy peace is, but what thy paths are, for God doth not measure men's sincerity by the tides of their affections, but by the constant bent of their resolutions, and the general course and tenor of their conversation: He that doeth righteousness, is righteous, and only he.

8 He that committeth sin is of the devil; for the devil sinneth from the beginning—

That is, "So far as a man sinneth, so far he is of the devil, and like unto him, in whom sin is predominant; he having been an old sinner; soon after the beginning of the creation, and a bold tempter to sin all his days. Learn, 1. That satan has kept in a constant and continued course of sinning against God from the beginning of his apostacy, and first moment of his revolt from God; the devil sinneth from the beginning. Learn 2. That such as make sin their work, do make themselves the devil's children; they are his children by imitation: St. John viii. 44. Ye are of your father the devil, and the works of your father ye will do.

—For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil.

As if he had said, "The Son of God came purposely into the world to destroy sin, the work of the devil; in all that he will save. Note, 1. The odious character where-with sin is branded, it is the work of the devil; that work which he is always doing himself; and which he is continually tempting and soliciting others to do, that they may be as miserable as himself. Note, 2. Our Saviour's manifestation in the flesh asserted; the Son of God was manifested, namely, to the world, and in the world: he appeared in our nature, and was seen in our flesh; it was a real exhibition, and not an imaginary manifestation of him. Note, 3. The great end of this gracious manifestation of the Son of God in our nature, it was to destroy the works of the devil, to loose and dissolve; so the original: this supposes mankind to have been in bonds and fetters; we were in durance and captivity, shut and locked up in the prison-house: we were under the dominion of sin, and power of satan, but the Son of God came to rescue us, to knock off our fetters, and to set us at liberty: by the works of the devil understand all sin in general. 2. Those sins in particular, which have most of the devil's image upon them, and render persons most like unto him; such are malice and envy, rejoicing at the calamities, and delighting in the evils that befall others, rage and passion, bitter strife, and contention, schism and faction, lying and falsehood, craft and treachery; but especially pride and haughtiness, which was the sin that turned satan out of heaven, and made him a devil in hell. 3. By the works of the devil here are meant in particular, idolatry, and all idolatrous worship, even to the worshipping of the devil himself; this, and all other kinds of idolatry, had strangely prevailed and overrun the world before the coming of Christ, who came on purpose to deliver mankind from this slavery, and to put down the kingdoms of satan, and beat him out of those strong-holds which he thought had been impregnable; "The Son of God was manifested that he might destroy the works of the devil."

9 Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin; for his seed remaineth in him: and he cannot sin, because he is born of God.

Observe here, 1. The character of a true christian, he is born of God; he has in the work of regeneration passed under a blessed change by the operation of the Holy Spirit, renewing his nature, and reforming his life; yet this denotes not a single transient act of regeneration, but rather a continued course and permanent state; one that is born of God is the same with him that leads a pious and godly life, and continues so to do. Observe, 2. What is here asserted concerning him that is born of God, namely, that he doth not commit sin, and that he cannot sin. 1. He doth not commit sin, he is no evil-doer, no worker of iniquity, no habitual or customary sinner: he goes not on in any way or course of sin, as the wicked does, who makes a trade of it; yea, he does not tolerate or allow himself in any single act of sin; not that he is absolutely free from sin. 2. It is said he cannot sin: but how? And why? How can he not sin? Has he not a natural power to sin? Has he not corruptions within, and temptations without, inclining and disposing him to sin, as well as other men? And has he not opportunity to sin; the same expectations of advantages by sin with other men? Yes, no doubt; but he has not a will bent for sin, or a heart and mind set upon sin, as the wicked have; nay, he has a heart and will opposite to sin, and set against all sin. A gracious person then, though he hath not a natural impossibility, yet he has a moral impossibility to sin. He that is born of God hath a power to do that evil which he hath not a will to do; he hath always a natural power, and sometimes a civil power, as being in authority; but his blood and pedigree are so high, being born of God, that he disdains to meddle with, or to trade in so base a thing as sin is. Note, That a child of God has a blessed impotency in the unregenerate part, that he cannot sin strongly, though as yet he has not that ability in the regenerate part, as not to sin at all. Observe, 3. The reasons assigned why a regenerate person cannot sin as the wicked sin, because "his seed remaineth in him, and because he is born of God;" that is, he has an inward principle inclining and disposing him to hate and oppose all sin, to wit, the sanctifying grace of God; and he has that mortifying Spirit, which causes him daily more and more to die unto sin, and enables him to mortify the deeds of the body. Learn hence, That although sin remaineth in him that is born of God, yet he that is born of God doth not remain in sin, either as to a sinful state, or a sinful conversation; God's word and Spirit, by which he was regenerate, still remain in him; and so far as he is under the ruling power and governing influences of them, he cannot sin, much less live in wilful sin.

10 In this the children of God are manifest, and the children of the devil; whosoever doeth not righteousness is not of God, neither he that loveth not his brother.

Our apostle in these words gives us the distinguishing character of a good and bad man; those who in their dispositions and actions, in the temper of their minds, and in the actions of their lives, do imitate God, are his children; and those who addict themselves to sin and impiety are of another race and descent, they are the children of the devil; they resemble him, and belong unto him. By doing righteousness is meant the practice of universal goodness, and a thorough conformity to the law of God in opposition to sin, which is the transgression of the law. Learn hence, 1. That every man may come to the certain knowledge of his own condition, whether he be a good or a bad man? "By this the children of God are manifested;" that is, hereby good and bad men are really distinguished; the Scripture has laid down real marks of difference between them. Learn, 2. That the love and practice of universal righteousness, and nothing short of it, will denominate a person a child of God, and evidence to his own conscience, that he is brought into a state of grace and favor with him: "In this the children of God are manifested, whosoever doeth righteousness is of God."

—Neither he that loveth not his brother.

This discovers a farther difference between the children of God and the children of satan, namely, Brotherly love; he doth not say, he that hateth his brother is a child of the devil, but he that loveth not his brother; intimating, that not only hatred and malice against, but want of brotherly love towards each other, is the mark and sign not of a child of God, but of the devil. He that doth not unfeignedly love men as men, and all christians as christians, is no child of God, no lover of God; for he that loveth not God's image, loveth not God himself.

11 For this is the message that ye heard from the beginning, that we should love one another.

12 Not as Cain, who was of that wicked one, and slew his brother. And wherefore slew he him? Because his own works were evil, and his brother's righteous.

13 Marvel not, my brethren, if the world hate you.

Our apostle comes now to enforce his exhortation unto brotherly love, by many weighty arguments. 1. He assures them, that this precept concerning brotherly love was given them by Christ and his apostles, from the beginning of the preaching of the gospel; "This is the message ye heard of him from the beginning." Note here, 1. That the word of God is a message sent from God unto us, a message for our information and instruction, a message for our guide and direction. 2. That the duty of brotherly love is an ancient message that God has sent, and has continued to send us, from the beginning; God help us to learn this lesson, so anciently taught us, and so long pressed upon us by God himself! "This is the message which ye have heard from the beginning." A second argument to excite brotherly love is drawn from the evil of hating our brother, which appears in the person and practice of Cain, whom our apostle describes, 1. By his pedigree, He was of that wicked one; that is, the devil, of his diabolical disposition, of his envious and malicious inclination, and, as such, was not so much Adam's son as the devil's son. 2. By his practice, he slew his brother; He first hated him, and then slew him. His hatred was causeless and unjust, implacable and deadly, and ended in his brother's death, and his own destruction. 3. The reason is assigned why he slew him, "Because his own works were evil, and his brother's righteous;" not for any harm he had done, or for any evil he had deserved, but because Cain was bad himself, and his works bad; to hate godliness, and to persecute the godly, is the very nature and disposition of a wicked man. Observe, lastly, The inference drawn by the apostle from this example of Cain's hating his holy and innocent brother: "Marvel not my brethren, (says he,) if the world hate you;" intimating that the world always did, and ever will hate God's children; and that the children of God are not to marvel or wonder at it, but to prepare for it; it is no new thing, but what has been from the beginning: though Cain be dead, the spirit of Cain is alive; the prosecutor goes about with Cain's club in his hand, redded with blood; marvel not then if the world hate you.

14 We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren. He that loveth not his brother abideth in death.

Observe here, 1. Our apostle's description of a carnal unregenerate state; it is a state of spiritual death. 2. Of a christian's renewed state by the Spirit of Christ, it is a state of spiritual life; we are passed from death to life. 3. Here is the mark and token by which this translation from death to life may be known, namely, by love; for love being the great work of God's renewing spirit on the soul, it is by the production of that, we come to the knowledge, that we are changed from a Cainish corrupt state of death, into a state of holy life; whatever grace men pretend unto, if they want this grace of love, they are yet dead in sin. Observe, 4 The characteristic note of that love which will be an indubitable evidence of this our translation from death to life, it must be a love of the brethren; that is, of all christians, as such; particularly it must be an extensive and universal love, that reaches all the children of God, all good men, of what judgment and opinion soever, otherwise it is the love of a party only, and a love for opinion sake, not for grace sake, Colos. i. 4. "We give thanks since we heard of your love to all saints:" that is, to all of what nation and kingdom soever, of what estate and condition soever, of what judgment and opinion soever, though differing from you in some lesser things. It must also be an holy love that will evidence our christianity; though all men must be loved as men, yet the brethren must be loved for the likeness of God in them, we must love God's holiness in holy persons: it is one thing to love the brethren, and another to love them as brethren, and because they are brethren; a gracious person may be loved only for carnal respects, and sinister ends; again, it must be active and operative, a costly and expensive love; that cheap love of some men, which will wish a poor christian well, but will be at no pains, no cost, or expence, to help and succour him, because they love their money better than they do their brother, is the hypocrite's love, not the saint's; see James ii. 15. "If a brother or a sister be naked, and we say unto him, 'Be thou clothed, &c.'" this is a cold sort of love, which will profit neither our brother nor ourselves. From the whole learn, That the love of grace in another, is a good evidence of the life of grace in ourselves; unfeigned love to the children of God as such, is an undoubted evidence of our regeneration and adoption; "We know that we are passed from, &c."

15 Whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer; and ye know that no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him.

Observe here, 1. The nature of the sin condemned, it is a secret sin of the heart, not an open sin of the life; he that hateth his brother, that is, in his heart, is a murderer, though he doth not smite him either with his tongue, or with his hand. Learn hence, That sins of the heart are damning as well as sins of the life; a man may be an adulterer in the sight of God, and yet never touch a woman, Mat. v. 28. an idolater; and yet never bow his knee to an image, Eph. v. 5. a murderer, and yet never hurt his brother; if he hates him in his heart, it is recorded murder in God's account. What need have we to put up David's prayer, Psal. xix. "Cleanse thou me from my secret sins?" Observe, 2. The sad and deplorable condition of such as are guilty of this sin, namely, of murdering their brother by hatred in their hearts: "He that hateth his brother, abideth in death, ver. 14, and hath not eternal life abiding in him," ver. 14. that is, he hath no spiritual life, nothing of the life of grace abideth in him, which is the seed and principle, the original and beginning of eternal life. Note thence, That the life of grace in the heart of a regenerate person, is the beginning and first principle of a life of glory, whereof they cannot but be destitute who hate their brother in their hearts. So much hatred in a man, so much death; and so much want of love, so much want of life.

16 Hereby perceive we the love of God, because he laid down his life for us: and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren.

Here our apostle presses brotherly love from another argument, namely, from the example of Jesus Christ, who being God, as well as man, laid down his life, as man, for us. Where note, That the intimate union betwixt the divine and human nature in Christ, gives ground for the calling Christ's life, as man, the life of God: as his blood is said, Acts xx. 28. to be God's own blood: Hereby perceive we the love of God, that is, of Jesus Christ the Redeemer, in that he laid down his life for us. Thence learn, That the death of Christ for us is a special manifestation of his singular love unto us. Observe farther, The inference which our apostle draws from Christ's love in laying down his life for us, namely, that we therefore ought to lay down our lives for the brethren: That is, in a time of persecution, when the glory of God, the edification of the church, and the eternal salvation of our brethren, do require it, and stand in need of it; we must never stick at laying down our lives when God calls us to it, as needful for better ends than our lives. It is not needful that we live, but needful and necessary that we glorify God, both in life and death.

17 But whoso hath this world's good, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?

Our apostle here draws an argument from the greater to the less, after this manner: "If, says he, we ought to be ready in some cases to part with our lives for the brethren, surely we much more ought to impart and communicate our worldly goods to them in the time of their necessity, and he that refuses so to do, can never think there is any thing of that love in him, which God requires of him towards his children." Learn hence, That there certainly dwells no love of God in that man's heart, who having this world's goods, stretcheth not out his hands to help the necessities of his brother. Here note, 1. The fountain from which all charitable distributions are to proceed and flow, namely, from the compassion of the heart. 2 That the compassion of the heart must draw forth the help of the hand; he that is a christian indeed will open both heart and hand to the distressed, and they shall partake of his purse as well as of his pity. 3. It is not said, he that has abundance of this world's goods, let him of his great superfluity give; but he that hath this world's goods; that is, in any measure, yea, though he has no more than he works for, yet is he required, Eph. iv. 28. that worketh with his hands, to give to him that needeth. The world is greatly deceived who think charity and almsgiving a duty that only concerns the rich; indeed it concerns them eminently, but not exclusively. And oh! the dreadful account that some rich men have to give, who expend more upon a lust in one day, than they give to the poor in a whole year. But yet, after all, every one that hath this world's good, though he has but what he labors and sweats for, yet must he in proportion to what he has, give to him that needeth. Note, 4. The object of this our compassion and charity; a brother, a brother in need, and every brother in deed; not only such as are cast down, but such as are falling, are the proper objects of our pity and help. Note, 5. The circumstance of time when we must give, namely, when we see our brother in need. What a vanity is it to leave our alms till after our death, to be beholden to the justice of others for their distribution! Let us see our charity bestowed with our own eyes, and given out with our own hands, when the loins of the poor will bless us, but their prayers will do us no good when we are dead. "Whoso seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?" From the whole learn, That when we are in a capacity, and enjoy an opportunity of expressing our charitable benevolence towards our poor and indigent brethren, the omission of it is a certain evidence that there is nothing of the love of God residing in us.

18 My little children, let us not love in word, neither in tongue: but in deed, and in truth.

19 And hereby we know that we are of the truth, and shall assure our hearts before him.

Having laid down several motives to brotherly love before, by way of excitation, as an help to their affections, he comes now to propound some directions to them as an help to their endeavours. And the first is this, to take special care that their love is sincere, and not hypocritical. Let us not love in word, that is, in word only, but in deed, and in truth. As if he had said, "Let our deeds speak the truth of our love; sincere love is fruitful; true affection will put forth itself into action; it doth not rest at the tongue's end, but will be seen at the finger's end, rendering us laborious in works and offices of friendship; as faith, so love without works is dead; and as faith is justified by works, so is our love also. Observe next, The encouragement which our apostle gives to the exercise of this true love, hereby we shall know that we are of the truth, and shall assure our hearts before him: That is, "By such efficacy and real fruits of our love we shall know that we are true christians, who live by, and walk according to the rule of the gospel, which is emphatically styled the truth, and shall have the assured testimony of our consciences, that we are sincere in the sight of God." Learn hence, 1. That the love of christians one to another ought not to be verbal, or in word only, but in deed, and in truth. 2. That the sincerity of our love to our brethren is the security of our consciences and estates before God. A christian may be assured of his good estate, and may build his assurance upon the sincerity of his love to God and christians.

20 For if our heart condemn us, God is greater than our heart, and knoweth all things.

21 Beloved, if our heart condemn us not, then have we confidence towards God.

By heart, here is undoubtedly meant conscience; and it is as much as if the apostle had said, "If our consciences tell us that our love is barren and fruitless, and so condemn us for hypocrisy, God is greater than our consciences, both in holiness to condemn, and in knowledge to perceive the evil of them, for he knoweth all things; whereas if we have the witness of our consciences touching the sincerity of our love by the fruits of it; if, after a most strict examination of our consciences, and an exact comparing of our lives and actions with the law of God, we are not condemned of insincerity in our obedience to God, and love to our neighbour, then have we an humble confidence with God in all our addresses to him." Learn hence, 1. That the consciences of men have a self-condemning and a self-absolving power. 2. That the consciences of men are much better known to God, than they either are or can be known unto themselves. 3. That if our hearts or consciences do condemn us, it is an evidence of greater condemnation from the heart-searching God. 4. That if our consciences do absolve us, it is an argument of our acceptance with God, and a ground of confidence in all our addresses to him. 5. That according to the verdict or testimony of men's consciences rightly informed, and truly testifying, God will either acquit or absolve them at the great day.

22 And whatsoever we ask we receive of him, because we keep his commandments, and do those things that are pleasing in his sight.

Observe here, 1. An extraordinary favor and privilege insured, Whatsoever we ask, we receive of him; that is, whatsoever we ask according to his will, we are sure to receive, either in kind or equivalency. It shall either be given in mercy, or denied in love; for verily God is as kind in denying some of our requests, as in answering others; we often cry for that which it would be cruelty for God to give; we know not what is best to beg, but an infinitely wise God knoweth what is fittest to give. Dat pro jocundis aptissima. Observe, 2. The qualification of the persons to whom this precious privilege does belong. They keep God's commandments, and do the things that please him. According to our hearing God's commandments, so he hears and answers our prayers; with what measure we mete to God, God will measure to us again. If God's commands be trod under our feet, no wonder that all our prayers fall to the ground. God hears not us if we hear not him. "If we keep his commandments, whatsoever we ask, we receive of him."

23 And this is his commandment, That we should believe on the name of his Son Jesus Christ, and love one another, as he gave us commandment.

Observe here, 1. What is the sum of the christian's duty, faith and love, to believe on the name of Jesus Christ; that is, to rely upon him as our Redeemer, our Teacher, our King, our Intercessor, and to obey his great command of loving one another with a pure heart fervently. Observe, 2. What a mighty encouragement it is to faith, that believing on Christ is constituted a duty by a plain gospel-precept, This is his commandment, for this command cuts off that vain pretence and plea of presumption. What! such a vile wretch as thou presume to believe on Christ? says Satan. Yes, says the christian, here is a command to me so to do, yea, a command from the highest sovereignty, the contempt whereof I must answer at my utmost peril. Observe, 3. How the command of faith, and the command of love, are linked and knit together, as if the weight of our salvation hung equally and alike upon both; as without faith it is impossible to please God, so without love it is impossible to please him also. Will no duty profit without faith? In like manner can we neither profit ourselves nor others without love: as whatever is not of faith is sin, so whatever duty we perform towards our brother, if we do it not out of love, we miss our reward. 1 Cor. xiii. 3. "If I give all my goods to feed the poor, and have not love, I am nothing." Lord! can we ever think this command of love small and inconsiderable, when thou hast joined the love of thine image with faith in thy dear Son? "This is his commandment, that we should believe on the name of his Son, and love one another."

24 And he that keepeth his commandments dwelleth in him, and he in him: and hereby we know that he abideth in us, by the Spirit which he hath given us.

Observe here, 1. The benefit of obedience to God's command. God dwelleth in us, and we in him. God's dwelling in us implies, 1. Right and property; what a man dwells in is his own. 2. Command and authority; the master and owner is the commander and disposer of the house. It also, 3. Implies residence and continuance, settlement and fixedness of abode; there a man dwells where he constantly resides. And our dwelling in God imports, 1. Reconciliation with God. Can two dwell together except they be agreed? 2. Affiance and trust in him. 3. An upholding constant communion with him; it is one thing to run to God for refuge in a storm, and another thing to make him our dwelling-place at all times, and in all conditions; he that keepeth God's commandments thus dwelleth in God, and God in him; it follows, "And hereby we know that he abideth in us, by the Spirit which he hath given us." Learn hence, That the Spirit of God, bestowed upon us in his sanctifying gifts and saving graces, is an evident sign of God's dwelling in us, and we in him.

CHAPTER IV.

BELOVED, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God; because many false prophets are gone out into the world.

Our apostle having in the last verse of the foregoing chapter, mentioned the abiding of the Spirit of God in the soul of believers, lest the christians to whom he wrote should be deceived by such as might pretend to be actuated by the Spirit, when indeed they were not; he comes in this chapter to caution and counsel all christians to take heed of being seduced by such as should pretend to be inspired by the Holy Spirit of God, saying, Believe not every Spirit; that is, every teacher who pretends to be inspired, and every doctrine that lays claim to the authority of divine revelation: but try the spirits; that is, examine their doctrines by the rule of the word of God, and try from whom they come, whether from the Spirit of God, or satan; for many false prophets, or impostors, and deceivers, are gone abroad into the world. Learn hence, 1. That men from the beginning of christianity have, and still do, falsely pretend to divine inspiration. 2. That christians ought not to believe every one that thus pretends to be divinely inspired; for every one that has but enough of confidence, and little enough of conscience, may pretend to come from God. Learn, 3. That neither are we to reject all that pretend to come from God; for when the apostle bids us not believe every spirit, he supposes that we are to believe some; and when he bids us try the spirits whether they be of God, he supposes some to be of God, and that such as are so, ought to be believed by us. Learn, 4. That there is some way to discern mere pretenders to inspiration from those who are truly and divinely inspired; it were in vain to make the trial, if there were no way to discern the truth. Learn, 5. That it is the duty of all christians to examine the doctrines propounded to them by the word of God; they having a judgment of discretion, though not a judgment of decision; a power to judge for themselves, not to impose upon others; nor does this allowed liberty of every one judging for himself take away the necessity and use of our spiritual guides and teachers, or exempt us from a due submission and obedience thereunto, but, in concurrence with them, "we are to try the spirits whether they be of God."

2 Hereby know ye the Spirit of God: Every spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is of God:

3 And every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is not of God: and this is that spirit of antichrist, whereof you have heard that it should come, and even now already is it in the world.

In these words our apostle lays down a plain mark and rule of trial, how they might know a teacher that was acted and inspired by the Spirit of God, from one that was not: such a one as durst truly and openly in the face of danger own and profess, teach and preach Jesus Christ in his person, nature, and offices, as the incarnate word, or Son of God, sent from heaven, ascribing virtue and efficacy to the sacrifice of his death, and attributing to him alone the whole glory of a perfect Saviour: this doctrine is of the Spirit, and this Spirit is of God. But such teachers as will not hazard themselves, but for fear of sufferings and persecution will deny either the Godhead or manhood of Christ, and disown either his incarnation, death, or resurrection; such teachers, and such doctrines, are not of God, but are the very spirit of antichrist, which says he, you have been foretold, should come, and is now already in the world. Learn hence, That such a teacher as disowns either of the natures of Christ, or denies any of the offices of Christ, that either denies the divinity of his person, or the merit-riousness of his satisfaction, is not of God, he is antichrist, against Christ, and shall find Christ against him in the day that he appears before him.

4 Ye are of God, little children, and have overcome them: because greater is he that is in you, than he that is in the world.

Observe here, 1. A character and description given of these christians to whom our apostle writes. He tells them they were of a nobler descent, of a more excellent pedigree, and higher offspring, than their false teachers; Ye are of God, regenerated by the Spirit of God, quickened by his renovation, led by his manuduction, actuated by his influences, animated by his assistances: Little children, ye are of God. Observe, 2. What is affirmed of these christians, Ye have overcome them; that is, you have resisted their temptations, withstood their seductions, and all their arts and endeavours to mislead you, when others have been perverted by them. Learn hence, That by steadfastness in the doctrine of Christ, christians do overcome impostors and seducers, when unstable souls are overcome by them. Observe, 3. The reason assigned why, and the means declared by which they overcome, namely, because greater is he that is in you, than he that is in the world; that is, Christ, who by his Spirit and doctrine dwells in you, is greater and more powerfully efficacious, than the spirit of error, which influences these vile impostors and seducers that are abroad in the world.

5 They are of the world: therefore speak they of the world, and the world heareth them.

6 We are of God: he that knoweth God, heareth us: he that is not of God, heareth not us. Hereby know we the Spirit of truth and the spirit of error.

Here we have, 1. The character given of these seducers and false teachers, They are of the world; that is, men of worldly minds and interests, They speak of the world; that is, they preach a doctrine suitable to the lusts and inclinations of worldly men, who greedily hear them, and easily believe them; ordinarily our words are such as we are; they who are of the world must needs speak of the world, for they have nothing else to speak of. The covetous man speaks covetously, and the proud man proudly. Observe, 2. The character which the apostle gives of himself and his fellow-apostles, we are of God; that is, taught and instructed by God. We have our mission and our message from God, and he has given us his attestation, by opening the ears and hearts of those that attend upon our ministry, to receive and embrace our doctrine; but such as are not taught of God, reject both it and us. Observe, 3. The inference and conclusion which our apostle draws from hence, namely, that by the doctrine and writings of the apostles and evangelists, the truth or falsehood of doctrines may and must be judged; for, says he, "Hereby we know the spirit of truth, and the spirit of error; he that knoweth God, heareth us: he that is not of God, heareth not us."

7 Beloved, let us love one another: for love is of God; and every one that loveth is born of God, and knoweth God.

8 He that loveth not, knoweth not God; for God is love.

Our apostle here resumes his exhortation to brotherly love, and urges and reinforces it with fresh arguments. 1. He assures us, that love is of God: that is, the fruit of his good spirit in us: common love is his common gift, and holy love is his special grace: Love is of God. 2. It is an evidence that we have a right knowledge of God, both of his nature and will, and that we understand both what he is, and what he requires; he that has not the grace of love in his heart, has not the right knowledge of God in his head, whatever he may think of himself, or pretend to others. 3. The apostle assures us, That love is not only commanded, but exemplified by God himself: God is love. He had said before, Love is of God, as a quality; here he says, God is love: not as a mere quality, but his essence. God is love; 1. Essentially; love in the creature is an accidental quality, in God an essential property. 2. God is love, casually, the efficient cause of whatever is loving or lovely in us: all our love to him, and one another, is but a reflection of his love to us. 3. God is love, objectively; he is, or ought to be, the supreme object of our love; and we must love him above all, or he accounts we love him not at all. 4. God is love, declaratively; all his works, as well as his word, are a declaration of his love to us, and ought to engage us to steadfastness in our love to him. Let us, therefore says the beloved disciple, love one another, for love is of God, and God is love.

9 In this was manifested the love of God toward us, because that God sent his only-begotten Son into the world, that we might live through him.

Observe, 1. That God doth not only bestow love upon his people, but it is his good pleasure to manifest that love. Quest. Wherein has God manifested his love towards us? Ans. 1. In our creation, making us out of nothing in such a wonderful manner: our bodies curiously wrought as with a needle, our souls beautified with understanding, will, and judgment. 2. In our apostacy and degeneration, when no eye pitied us, and when we had no hearts to pity ourselves, then were his bowels of love and compassion yearning towards us; then he said unto us, Live, when he might have said, Die and be damned. 3. In our redemption, recovery, and restitution, in sending his only begotten Son into the world, that we might live through him. Observe, 2. A threefold evidence of God's love to mankind in the work of redemption, that great and glorious work. 1. It was a wonderful instance of the love of God, that he should be pleased to take our case into consideration, and to concern himself for our happiness; as nothing is more obliging to human nature than love, so no love obliges more than that which is exercised with great condescension after a provocation; such was God's love to offending man. 2. That he should design so great a benefit to us, as is here expressed, even life, That we might live through him. 3. That God was pleased to use such a mean for the obtaining and procuring of this benefit for us. He sent his own Son into the world, that we might live through him. Where note, 1. The person sent, his own Son, and only begotten Son. 2. The persons sent to, the men of the world, who were spiritually dead, and judicially dead. 3. The manner of his being sent voluntarily and freely, not constrained by necessity, not prevailed upon by importunity, not obliged by benefit or kindness from us; but out of his mere pity and goodness towards us, he sent him into a wicked world, and into an ungrateful world, that we might live through him. From the whole learn, That God's bestowing his Son upon a lost world, was a manifest evidence of his great and wonderful love unto them: "In this was manifest the love of God towards us, &c."

10 Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that he loved us, and sent his Son to be the propitiation for our sins.

Herein is love; that is, the clearest, the fullest, the highest expression of free and undeserved love that ever the world was acquainted with. Observe, That the wisdom and power of God did not act to the utmost of their efficacy in the work of creation; he could have framed a more glorious world had it pleased him; but the love of God in our redemption by Christ could not be expressed, or set forth, in an higher degree, when Almighty God would give the most excellent testimony of his favor to mankind, he gave them his eternal Son, the son of his love; and verily the giving of heaven itself, with all its joys and glory, is not so full and perfect a demonstration of the love of God, as the giving of his Son to die for us; Herein is love. Observe next, The priority of God's love to mankind; he loved us, not we him; he loved us antecedently to our loving him, and he loved us, that we might love him, when there was nothing in us either to deserve, or to engage his love. Observe lastly, The great intent and gracious design of God in sending his Son, namely, To be a propitiation for our sins; that is, to die as a sacrifice for our sins, and thereby atone divine displeasure. Herein is love; that is, the triumph, the riches, and glory of divine love, that God gave Christ to die for us. "But is there love in nothing else but this?" Y sure, to have a being among rational creatures, therein is love; to have our life carried so many years in the hand of providence, like a burning taper, in the midst of winds and storms, and not burnt out, this is love to have food and raiment convenient for us, relations and friends to comfort us, in all these is love, great love; but comparatively none at all to the love expressed in giving Christ to die for us: herein was love, the flower of love.

11 Beloved, if God so loved us, we ought also to love one another.

12 No man hath seen God at any time. If we love one another, God dwelleth in us, and his love is perfected in us:

13 Hereby know we that we dwell in him, and he in us, because he hath given us of his Spirit.

Observe here, 1. The genuine inference which our apostle draws from the doctrine laid down concerning the greatness of God's love to us; namely, "that seeing God so loved us, we should love one another, and be like him according to our measure, and in our degree." Observe next, The apostle's argument to provoke us thereunto; he tells us, That God himself is to be loved by us for his astonishing love unto us: but as God is not to be seen in his essence, but in man his image, so must we love God in man, his creature, made after his own image and likeness: and if we love the holy image of God in each other, it is an evidence that God dwelleth in us, and we in him; namely, by the inhabitation of his Holy Spirit, which being a Spirit of love in us, draws forth our love towards himself, and one towards another. And further he assures us, That this will be a sign, that love is perfect in us; namely, that this grace is in its vigor and perfection in our souls, sincere and entire, having all its essential parts, though it be not absolutely perfect in all degrees. Note, That perfection here is not opposed to imperfection, but to insincerity. Our love is then said to be perfected, when it is considerably heightened and improved. Blessed be God! the hour is coming when this, and all other graces, shall be perfected, when this spark of love shall be blown up into a seraphic flame. Observe lastly, The rule which our apostle lays down, whereby we may know assuredly, that God dwelleth in us, and we in him; namely, If he has given us his Spirit, which is a spirit of holy love. Learn thence, That the Holy Spirit, (not in its extraordinary gifts, which are long since ceased) but in its sanctifying operations and gracious fruits, (of which sincere love is the first and chief) is an undoubted evidence of God's dwelling in us by a special inhabitation, and of our dwelling in him: that is, resting in his love and favor, and under his protection and care; "Hereby we know that we dwell in him, and he in us, because he hath given us of his Spirit;" namely, as a Spirit of holy and universal love.

14 And we have seen, and testify, that the Father sent the Son to be the Saviour of the world.

15 Whosoever shall confess that Jesus is the Son of God, God dwelleth in him, and he in God.

16 And we have known and believed the love that God hath to us. God is love; and he that dwelleth in love, dwelleth in God, and God in him.

As if the apostle had said, "Though no man hath seen God at any time, yet the apostles, who preach the doctrine of faith unto you, and press the duty of love upon you, have seen with our bodily eyes the Lord Jesus Christ, and do testify, that God the Father glorified his love, by sending his Son to be the Saviour of a perishing world; not of Jews only, but of the Gentiles also. And we further declare, That whosoever, believing this our testimony, shall confess with his mouth, and believe in his heart, that this Jesus, whom we preach is the Son of God, and shall evidence the truth of his faith by the sincerity of his love, and other good fruits, it is certain that God dwelleth in him by his Spirit, and he dwelleth in God by repeated acts of love. And finally, we apostles well knowing, and firmly believing the love, the wonderful great love, which God hath manifested towards us, in and through his Son Jesus Christ, we again affirm and conclude that God is love. Love originally, the fountain from whence all love flows. Love efficiently, the producing cause of all love in the hearts of our people. Love subjectively, a God full of love and mercy, of goodness and pity towards his creatures. Love objectively, he is deservedly the first and chief object of our love, as he is the first and chief good. Love declaratively, both his word and works declare the purposes of his love unto us, and give demonstrations of innumerable instances of his beneficence towards us. But especially God is love essentially. Love in us is an adventitious and accidental quality; in God it is an essential property, it is his very essence and nature, inseparable from his being; he can as soon cease to be, as cease to love. And as God is love, so we again affirm, that he that dwelleth in love, that is, he who has love, as the prevailing habit in his heart, and as the governing principle of his life, dwelleth, by communion, in God, as the eye dwells in the light, and as one friend by love dwells in another; and God, by his Spirit of love, dwelleth in him.

17 Herein is our love made perfect, that we may have boldness in the day of judgment: because as he is, so are we in this world.

18 There is no fear in love; but perfect love casteth out fear; because fear hath torment. He that feareth is not made perfect in love.

Still our apostle proceeds by way of argument to enforce upon us the obligation of our duty to love one another; he assures us here, that if our love be made perfect, that is, heightened and improved by an exact corresponding with the divine pattern and precept; if we love one another in obedience to God's command, and in conformity to Christ's example, it will give us boldness in the day of judgment, and we may think and speak of, we may expect and look for, the approach of that day without fear and consternation of mind; the reason is added, because as Christ was, so are we in the world; that is, as he was full of holiness and purity, of love and charity, so have we endeavoured to be in imitation of his example, according to our measure, in some proportion and degree. Learn hence, 1. That such as are sincerely gracious, and do excel in the grace of love, are in the world in some sort as Christ was in the world; such as walk in love, walk as Christ walked. Learn, 2. That such as are in the world, as Christ was in the world, shall have boldness when Christ comes to judgment, and need not fear the condemnation of that dreadful day: "herein is our love made perfect, that we may have boldness in the day of judgment;" the reason of this freedom from the fear of wrath is added, verse 18. There is no fear in love; that is, no slavish or distrustful fear, whereby we question the favor of God; but only a filial and reverential fear, whereby we stand in awe of offending him as a father: But perfect love casteth out fear; that is, either the actings of our perfect love to God, or the apprehensions of God's perfect love towards us, do cast out all that fear which has torment in it. Yet note, That although perfect love casteth out tormenting fear, it calls in obeying fear, Eccl. xii. 13. "Fear God and keep his commandments, for this is the whole duty of man;" an awful fear of God is all duty, and every grace. Note also, The true reason of our disquieting and tormenting fear is the imperfection and weakness of our love; fear may stand with faith and love, but not with perfect faith, nor perfect love. "He that feareth is not made perfect in love;" and because he is not made perfect in love: therefore he feareth. Blessed be God, as there will be no torment, so no fear, in heaven; that is, no tormenting fear; yet there is a fear of reverence, which will undoubtedly remain with glorified saints in heaven; they shall have an everlasting awe of the majesty and holiness of God eternally fixed upon their hearts and spirits, even in the kingdom of glory in heaven, as well as in the kingdom of grace here on earth; the saints "serve God acceptably with reverence and godly fear;" Lord, hasten the perfecting of thy grace in us, particularly the perfection of our love, that perfect love may cast out tormenting fear, and cherish such a reverential fear as will both prepare us for heaven, and accompany us in heaven, to all eternity.

19 We love him, because he first loved us.

There is a double reading of these words according to the original. 1. They may be read, let us love him because he first loved us, by way of motive, denoting, that believers have great reason to love God with their choicest and highest affections, forasmuch as he has loved them, and first loved them. 2. They are here read by way of causality, we do love him, because he first loved us; intimating, that God's love to us is the root and spring of our love to him, and to one another; all our love to saints is the effect of his preventing love to us, and but a reflection of those beams of love which God has first cast upon us; if God's love to us had been a mere dependant consequence of our love to him, how uncertain should we be of its continuance? but his love to us was the antecedent cause of our love to him; we therefore love him because he first loved us.

20 If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar: for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?

Our apostle in these words prevents an objection. Some might be ready to say, "Who is it that doth not love God? is there any that live who doth not love him?" The apostle replies, That whosoever says he loves God, and yet hateth his brother, is plainly a liar: for it is impossible truly to love God, and not to do what God commands: and if we do not exercise love to our brethren, whom we daily see and converse with, how can it be imagined that we love God, whom we never saw? Learn hence, first, That as God is infinitely above us, so he needeth not our love, but it is wonderful condescension in God to give us leave to love him, and to suffer himself to be embraced by those arms which have embraced sin and lust before him. Learn, 2. That though God needs not us, or our love, yet we need him, and stand in need of one another, and for that reason must and ought to love each other. Learn, 3. That if we love not God's visible image, it is certain we never loved the invisible God; if when we have our christian brethren in our daily view, and the objects of our senses are their miseries and wants, and yet we shut up the bowels of compassion from them, can we, or dare we, pretend at the same time to love God whom we have not seen, and who is only present to our minds by raised expectations; as the sight of our brother is a strong inducement to love him, so the not loving him at sight, is a strong argument that we love not God himself; For he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?"

21 And this commandment have we from him, That he who loveth God, love his brother also.

This commandment: This great and chief commandment, above the rest, this summary and comprehensive commandment, including all the rest, namely, to love God above all, for his own sake, and to love our brother as ourselves, for God's sake, this command, so full of wisdom, so agreeable to right reason, and so much our duty and interest to comply with, have we received from God; and it is most certain that we love him not, if we keep it not; "this commandment have we from God, that he who loveth God, loveth his brother also." Learn thence, 1. That the great God, by his gracious command, requires that we love him, and place the supremacy of our love upon him. 2. That as God requires us to love him above ourselves, so does he oblige us, by virtue of his command, to love our brother as ourselves; as sincerely, though not so intensely as ourselves. Learn, 3. That the same commandment that requires us to love God requires love to our brethren also; God interprets the neglect of our duty to our brother, as a neglect of our obligation to himself.

CHAPTER V.

Our apostle in this chapter prosecutes the design of the whole epistle, which is to excite and inflame in christians the love of God, and their brethren, two comprehensive duties, and our principal perfections in heaven and earth; these he recommends by the most affectionate and obliging persuasives, namely, the superlative love of God to us, and our communion with the saints both in nature and grace: and accordingly thus he writes:

WHOSOEVER believeth that Jesus is the Christ, is born of God: and every one that loveth him that begat, loveth him also that is begotten of him.

Observe here, 1. The grand proposition laid down as the object of our faith, namely, that Jesus is the Christ; that is that Jesus of Nazareth, who was born with, and lived amongst the Jews, was the Saviour of the world, the person whom Moses and the prophets foretold to be the Messiah. Observe 2. The duty required of us, namely, to believe that Jesus is the Christ; that is, not historically only, to assent that Jesus is the predicted and promised Messiah, but to express the truth of that faith in a suitable conversation. Observe, 3. How evidential such a faith is of our regeneration; whosoever thus believes that Jesus is the Christ, is born of God; faith in Christ Jesus, as the great King, Priest, and Prophet of his church, accompanied with a holy life, is a sure mark and undoubted evidence of our new birth. "Whosoever believes that Jesus is the Christ, is born of God." Observe, 4. The affection which every person that is born of God bears unto God, He loveth him that begat! this is the ingratiating and endearing quality; it is this that commends both our persons and performances to God's acceptance; the service of love is therefore most acceptable, because most honorable to God, and most durable and lasting from us; the obedience of love will be lasting. Observe, 5. What is the genuine effect, and natural product of this love to God, namely, a sincere affection to all the children of God: "whosoever loveth him that begat, loveth him also that is begotten of him," every christian that sincerely loves God, certainly loves the image of God in his saints and children; he that loves the father for his own sake, cannot but love the child for his father's sake, if like him: and the more like him, the more he loves him: "he that loveth him that begat, loveth him also that is begotten of him."

2 By this we know that we love the children of God, when we love God, and keep his commandments.

Observe here, That the sincerity of our love to the children of God is best discovered by our love to God, and obedience to his commands. Quest. 1. What kind of love is required towards the children of God? Ans. A love of esteem, a love of desire, a love of delight, and a love of service and beneficence. Quest. 2. What kind of obedience towards God is that which springs from love? Ans. It is uniform and universal; love regardeth the whole law in all its injunctions and prohibitions, and studieth to please the law-giver; it is pleasant and delightful, not a melancholy task, but a pleasing exercise; it is accurate and exact, it produces a severe circumspection over our ways, that nothing be done or allowed by us that is displeasing to the divine eye: and it is constant and persevering; that motion which is caused by the outward prizes will cease when the weights are down, but that which proceeds from an inward principle, or life, is continual; and such a principle is the love of God planted in the christian's breast: "by this then may we know that we love the children of God, if we love God and keep his commandments."

3 ¶ For this is the love of God, that we keep his commandments: and his commandments are not grievous.

Our apostle in these words gives a threefold description of a sincere christian. He describes him, 1. By his inward affection to God and Christ, and that is love: this is shed abroad in his heart. 2. By the action which flows from this affection, namely, obedience to God in keeping his commandment. 3. By the disposition and inclination from which that obedience doth proceed and flow, namely, a delight and cheerfulness in the doing of our duty. "His commandments are not grievous;" that is, they have nothing in them heavy or burdensome, but every thing that may render them at once both our duty and delight. Learn hence, 1. That obedience is the most natural and necessary product of love; where love is the governing principle, it rules all the inclinations of the heart and actions of the life. Learn 2. That love makes our obedience to God cheerful and constant, delightful and lasting. Love is seated in the will, and that obedience which proceeds from it is out of choice, and purely voluntary. No commandment is grievous that is performed from love, and makes obedience also constant. That which is forced from impressions of fear is unsteady, but that which flows from delight is lasting. Learn hence, That the service of Christ is a very gracious, a most desirable and delightful service, not to sinners, whose minds the God of this world has blinded, whose consciences are canterized, who have not only grieved, but quenched the Holy Spirit of God. But, 1. It is not grievous in itself. 2. Nor is it grievous to a regenerate person: a sound eye never complains of light, but a sore eye is uneasy under it. The commands of Christ cannot be grievous, because they exact things of us which are agreeable to our reason, suitable to our natures, consonant to our rational desires. We cannot give an instance of any one of the commands of Christ which is in itself grievous; that command of his, to do to others as we would have others do by us, is a dictate of nature as well as the law of Christ.

4 For whatsoever is born of God overcometh the world: and this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith.

Two things are here observable, namely, a proposition, and the explication of that proposition. Observe, 1. The proposition, "Whosoever is born of God, overcometh the world." Every regenerate christian is a victorious christian, he is a conqueror, yea, the greatest of conquerors, he conquers the whole world. Observe, 2. The exposition of this proposition, "This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith." It is a spiritual conquest, and spiritually obtained, even by faith. Note here, 1. That the world is a christian's grand enemy. A conquest supposes a combat, and a combat supposes an enemy. 2. That every regenerate christian is a victorious conqueror over this enemy. The christian is a soldier as soon as he is a believer, and he is a conqueror as soon as he is a soldier. This is the victory: he hath his enemy under his feet, even whilst he is in the fight. Note, 3. That the special weapon by which the christian conquers the world, and his spiritual enemies, is his faith. Many warriors have done great things in conquering kingdoms, but this is a greater conquest than all theirs; their conquest was but poor and partial, only of some small parts of earth, but the christian's conquest is universal; those conquerors whilst they prevailed abroad were slaves at home; whilst they were lords of nations, they were vassals to their own lusts; but these conquerors, which the text speaks of, begin their victories at home, and enlarge their triumphs over all enemies abroad: "This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith."

5 Who is he that overcometh the world, but he that believeth that Jesus is the Son of God?

6 This is he that came by water and blood, even Jesus Christ; not by water only, but by water and blood: and it is the Spirit that beareth witness, because the Spirit is truth.

Our apostle having spoken of the usefulness of faith in the former verse, that it overcometh the world, next discovers the object of this faith, which is this proposition, that Jesus is the Son of God. "Who is he that overcometh the world, but he that believeth that Jesus is the Son of God?" That faith which overcomes the world, is faith in the divinity and sonship of Jesus Christ. We overcome the world by believing in him that overcame it, even Jesus Christ, who hath purchased, promised, and prepared a better world than what we do see, or can see, with our bodily eyes, and has made us heirs of eternal glory. Observe next, The argument by which the apostle proves that Jesus is the Son of God, the true Messias and the Saviour of mankind, namely, because he came by water and blood; that is say some, by the testimony given him when he was in the water, at his baptism, both by John the Baptist, and the voice from heaven; he came by his Spirit, say others, as by water, to sanctify those that believe in him; and by his blood to make a full atonement for them: an admirable symbol of both, which was the flowing of water and blood both out of Christ's side, when he hung upon the cross. It is a sweet meditation that Christ comes by water as well as blood, by way of sanctification as well as by way of justification; his death not only discharges from guilt, but cleanses also from pollution and filth: blessed be God there is a fountain opened in the side of our Saviour for sin, and for uncleanness to wash in, and to be purged from. Sanctification is as great, and in some respects a greater privilege than justification! for justification frees us only from misery and punishment, but sanctification frees us from sin, which is worse than punishment. Again, real perfections are above relative perfections; now justification by Christ's blood is only a relative perfection, it makes us stand in a new relation to the law, by which before we stood guilty, and condemned: but sanctification by the Spirit of Christ, signified here, and set forth elsewhere frequently, by water, is a real moral perfection, it changes the heart and nature, and makes us like unto God, yea, like unto him in his highest perfection, which is that of holiness. Come then, O blessed Redeemer, by water and blood into our souls, with thy renewing grace and sanctifying Spirit, to purge our consciences from dead works, and to deliver us not only from the danger, but from the dominion of our sins.

—And it is the Spirit that beareth witness, because the Spirit is truth.

Some by the Spirit's bearing witness understand the testimony which the Holy Spirit gave to Christ here upon earth, as touching the truth of his doctrine, the reality of his miracles, and the certainty of his mission; others understand by it, the Spirit's testimony in the Holy Scriptures, and in the consciences of believers, that Jesus Christ is a divine person and came by water and blood, both to save us at once from the wrath of God, and the rage of our lusts. Learn thence, That the Holy Spirit of God speaking in the scriptures, and breathing in the consciences of believers, bears witness to their soul, that Jesus Christ came to save them by the water of sanctification, as well as with and by the blood of redemption: and that the spirit thus witnessing is a Spirit of truth.

7 For there are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost: and these three are one.

That is, "There are three in heaven which do bear record to this truth here upon earth, namely, that Jesus is the Christ; that is to say, the three persons in the Holy Trinity, The Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost; the Father bore witness both at Christ's baptism and transfiguration also, when with an audible voice he declared, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." The Word bore record of himself, affirming frequently, plainly, and directly, that he was the Son of God, and making it manifest by his doctrine and miracles, that he came from the Father; the Spirit bore witness to this, partly by descending on Christ at his baptism in the shape of a dove, and partly by descending on his apostles in the feast of pentecost in the figure of fiery tongues, Acts ii. Learn hence, 1. That it was no easy matter to believe the truth of our Saviour's mission and miracles, and that Jesus Christ was the essential and natural Son of God. Though by the mouth of two or three witnesses every truth is established, yet in this and the next verse we have no less than six witnesses produced to prove our Jesus to be the Son of God, three heavenly, and three earthly witnesses — It is added, these three are one, one in testimony, say the adversaries of the Trinity, but not one in essence. One in both, say we, as one in testimony, so one in essence. But suppose that we should grant that the oneness spoken of in the text is to be expounded of consent in testimony, agreement, and will, principally, yet will it prove the Godhead of Christ, and of the Holy Ghost; for in free agents, where there is the same will, there is the same nature: with men it is the same specific nature; but with God, because there is but one only God, therefore it must be, the same numerical nature. Learn, 2. That there are three persons, yet but one God, that do bear witness to the divinity of Christ, and of the plentiful redemption wrought by him.

8 And there are three that bear witness in earth, the spirit, and the water, and the blood: and these three agree in one.

As if the apostle had said, "As there are three in heaven who have given us their testimony to the divinity of Christ and his doctrine here on earth, so there are three witnesses here below testifying the same thing, namely, the Spirit, in the preaching of the gospel, and in the souls of believers: the water, or sacrament of baptism, wherein we are baptized in the name of the Son, as well as of the Father, and the blood, that is, the death of Christ, and the sufferings of those who have sealed this truth with their blood; all these do give testimony on earth to Christ's divinity from heaven." Note here, That though much of these two verses be left out in many ancient copies of the Bible, as the learned Dr. Hammond takes notice, yet in copies more ancient they are found, and we have more reason to believe that the Arians left them out, than that the orthodox put them in, other texts that assert the truth being so abused. It has been the common course of heretics to disown the authority of such texts as do gall and pinch them. Note, farther, That the doctrine of the blessed Trinity stands built upon holy scripture, as a firm basis, an impregnable rock, and the doctrine of the Anti-Trinitarians falls to the ground like Dagon before the Ark. Lord, let our understandings evermore stoop and yield to this divine revelation, though it contains such a doctrine as doth exceed the comprehension of human reason.

9 ¶ If we receive the witness of men, the witness of God is greater: for this is the witness of God which he hath testified of his Son.

10 He that believeth on the Son of God hath the witness in himself; he that believeth not God hath made him a liar, because he believeth not the record that God gave of his Son.

Our apostle's argument in these words is taken from the less to the greater, thus: "if, says he, for the believing of any thing it be ordinarily thought sufficient to have the testimony of two or three credible men, then surely the testimony of the faithful and infallible God, given from heaven, is much more worthy of belief; but the testimony given concerning Christ, that he is verily the Son of God, is evidently the testimony of the faithful God that cannot lie: therefore he that, after all the assurance which God has given of his Son's being a true and real Saviour, shall yet reject and disown him as such, does in effect accuse God of falsehood, and make him a liar, because he believes not the record which God has given of his Son: whereas the person that believes on Christ as the Son of God, and the true Messiah, is safe, having the testimony of God the Father without him, and the testimony of the Holy Spirit within him as the Spirit of holiness, wisdom, and power: "he that believeth on the Son hath the witness in himself;" he that believeth not the Son, has made God a liar. Learn hence, 1. That every testimony which God gives us is infallibly true, 2. That the testimony which God has given us concerning his Son Jesus Christ being the true and promised Messiah, has had its confirmation abundantly above and beyond other testimonies. 3. Therefore such as do not believe on our Lord Jesus Christ as the Saviour of the world, they disbelieve the most undoubted and infallible testimony of God, and in his account make him a liar. Lord! what a bold, presumptuous, and daring sin is unbelief? it gives God the lie, and makes the God of truth a liar.

11 And this is the record that God hath given to us eternal life; and this life is in his Son.

12 He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life.

As if our apostle had said, "The sum of God's testimony recorded in the gospel is this, concerning his Son Jesus Christ, namely, that God for his sake has made a free deed of gift, of pardon and salvation to the world, assuring them of grace here, and eternal life hereafter, upon condition of their believing acceptance, that is, of faith and obedience; and accordingly he that thus has Christ, he that accepts the merit of his blood, and submits to the authority of his law, hath eternal life, that is, he has an undoubted right unto it, and assurance of it, yea, he has it already initially, and in the first fruits; but he that, either by unbelief or disobedience refuses Christ shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him. Learn hence, 1. That eternal life is the gift of God. 2. That this gift of eternal life is laid up for us in his Son. 3. That upon our having or not having union with, and interest in the Son, depends our having or not having eternal life. "He that hath the Son hath life, and he that hath not the Son, &c."

13 These things have I written unto you that believe on the name of the Son of God; that ye may know that ye have eternal life, and that ye may believe on the name of the Son of God.

Our apostle entering now upon the conclusion of his excellent epistle, acquaints them with his design and end in the writing of it, namely, 1. That they might know they had eternal life, that is, both a right and title to eternal life, and might also attain to the knowledge and assurance of it. Learn thence, That believers may in this life, without the help of extraordinary revelation, attain to a knowledge and well-grounded assurance of life eternal. "These things have I written unto you that believe, that ye may know that ye have eternal life. There is a threefold knowledge; notional, which is barely the work of the understanding; experiential, which is seated in the heart, and visible in the life; fiducial, when a person is ascertained and assured of what he knows; thus here these things I write, that ye may know that ye know, that is, be assured that ye know; a christian may believe, and yet not be assured that he does believe; many have a vital act which have not a fiducial act of faith; many have a faith of adherence that want a faith of evidence; faith and assurance in a saint, differ as much as reason and learning in a man; every man has reason, but every man that has reason has not learning, which is the improvement of reason; thus every good man has faith, but every one that hath faith has not assurance, which is the special fruit of faith. This therefore was the first design and end of St. John's writing, that they might know they did believe; the second follows, that those that did believe, might believe on the name of the Son of God; the meaning is, that they might more firmly believe, be more rooted, grounded, settled, and confirmed in the faith, so as to remain unshaken by all the storms of persecution that might fall upon them; this seems to be the sense of the apostle when he exhorts "believers to believe. These things write I unto you that believe, that ye may believe on the name of the Son of God." The strongest believers may be exhorted to strengthen their faith, and to persevere in the faith, which they are strengthened and established in.

14 And this is the confidence that we have in him, that if we ask any thing according to his will, he heareth us.

15 And if we know that he hear us, whatsoever we ask, we know that we have the petitions that we desired of him.

To enforce the foregoing exhortation to believers, namely, to be confirmed and constant in the faith, he shows them here what a special advantage believers have above other persons, namely, confidence in all their approaches to God: and a full assurance, 1. In general, that whatever they ask in faith according to his will, they shall obtain. 2. In particular, that our several petitions which we present unto God, shall in his own time, in his own way, and after his own manner, be granted by him, provided our persons and our prayers be qualified according to the gospel for the receiving of his promise. Hence learn, That through our interest in Christ, and for the sake of his meritorious satisfaction and prevailing intercession, our prayers are certainly heard by God, and we shall assuredly have what God has promised to give, and we are fit to receive. God indeed does not always, nay, not often, come with an answer of prayer at our time, but he never stays a moment beyond his own time. Learn, 2. That in all the prayers we present and put up to God, a special eye and regard must be had to the will of God, if we expect to be heard and answered, If we ask any thing according to his will, he heareth us. The will of God is the rule, not only of things to be done by us, but also of those things which we crave of God to do for us. The will of God under a threefold revelation is the rule and matter of prayer. 1. The will of God in his commands; whatever God hath required us to do, we may pray for power that we may do. 2. The will of God in his promises; what God hath said he will give, we may pray that we may receive. 3. The will of God in prophecies; what God hath foretold shall come to pass, we may and ought to pray that it may come to pass. The prayer of man gives birth to the prophecies of God, yea, and to the promises of God too. Ezek. xxxvi. 37. I will be enquired of, to do it for them. Though God be a sure paymaster, yet he expects that we should put his bond in suit before he pays. Learn, 3. That a prayer made according to God's will, shall certainly be granted according to our will. If we ask any thing according to his will, he heareth us. When we pray for any thing in obedience to God's will, and with submission to his will, we know that we have the petitions that we ask of him.

16 If any man see his brother sin a sin which is not unto death, he shall ask, and he shall give him life for them that sin not unto death. There is a sin unto death : I do not say that he shall pray for it.

17 All unrighteousness is sin : and there is a sin not unto death.

Our apostle informed us in the foregoing verse of the comfort which believers have in their prayers for themselves, all that is requested by them is granted by God : now in the verse before us, he relates the benefits which others receive by their prayers as well as themselves, assuring them, that if any of them did pray for an offending brother, they should be heard in what they desired, unless the person they prayed for had sinned the unpardonable sin, the sin unto death, by which we are to understand apostasy from the christian religion unto idolatry, as appears from the following words, Keep yourselves from idols, which caution has no manner of dependance upon what went before, unless we understand the sin unto death in this sense ; or if (with others) he call it the sin against the Holy Ghost, it comes to the same : for what is that sin but a renouncing of christianity, denying the truth of the christian faith, after illumination and conviction by the Holy Ghost, and maliciously persecuting the sincere professors of it ? Here note, 1. That a believer is not to hide his eyes from observing, but may and ought to take notice of the sins and miscarriages of his brethren : If any man see his brother sin, which he cannot do if he neglect to observe him. Note, 2. That a believer discerning and observing the sin of his brother, may and ought to pray for him. Let him ask, that is, importune God on his behalf. Note, 3. That a believer's prayers may prevail with God for us, when our own prayers will not prevail for ourselves. Let him ask, and he shall give him life, temporal life at least, and upon his repentance and faith eternal life also. Note, 4. That the state of some wicked men may be such, that were it certainly known, it might be a christian's duty to cease praying for them. There is a sin unto death, that is, which doth not only deserve death, as all sin doth, and bespeak a person in a state of death, but a sin that argues a person to be twice dead, dead in respect of unregeneracy, and dead in respect of wilful and sinful apostacy. I do not say, that ye shall pray for it, that is, for the person guilty of it, seeing God never intends to forgive it. Lord ! how deplorable is the condition of those whose sins are past prayers, who give over praying for themselves, and others are stopt from praying for them ! How sad is it, when the Lord shuts up the hearts of any of his from praying for us ! It shows the sin of that man to be apprehended as being the sin unto death, when the faithful cease praying for him. Yet note, 5. The apostle doth not here explicitly and simply forbid praying for such wretched persons, but only says, I do not say that ye shall pray for them ; that is, I cannot give you any encouragement to pray for such, nor dare I promise you any good success in praying for them who have sinned unto death. I do not say ; that is, I give you no warrant, I lay you under no command, I give you no promise, that your prayers for such shall be heard and answered.

18 We know that whosoever is born of God sinneth not : but he that is begotten of God keepeth himself, and that wicked one toucheth him not.

That is, we are all well assured that sincere christians, who are begotten and born of God, do not commit this sin unto death, namely, apostasy from Christianity to the Heathen idolatry : "But he keepeth himself and the wicked one toucheth him not," that is, he preserveth himself from the contagion of idolatry, into which the devil was so busy to seduce a great part of mankind. It may be further added, that he that is born of God, so far as he is a partaker of the divine nature, sinneth not ; that is, suffers not any sin to have dominion over him, but takes care to preserve himself through the assistance of divine grace, from Satan's deadly wound. He toucheth him not ; that is, doth not touch him so as to leave an impression of his devilish spirit upon him. Non tangit tactu qualitativo, vel tactu lethali et mortifero ; "He shall not mortally touch them, to make them sin unto death."

19 And we know that we are of God,—

That is, do belong to the true God, and are worshippers of him, we are guided by his spirit, we are obedient to his laws, we please him on earth, and do hope to enjoy him in heaven.

—And the whole world lieth in wickedness.

That is, the far greater part of the world are under the dominion of that wicked one, being sunk into idolatry, and become worshippers of the devil, continuing in the midst of their impurity and malignity, and wholly set upon mischief and wickedness. See here the darkness and horror of an unregenerate and unconverted state. Persons in it are under the dominion of satan, that wicked one. But behold the blessed change that christianity makes, not in the profession, but in the practice of it, it delivers from the power of darkness, and from the power of satan, the prince of darkness, and translates us into the kingdom of God's dear Son.

20 And we know that the Son of God is come, and hath given us an understanding, that we may know him that is true : and we are in him that is true, even in his Son Jesus Christ. This is the true God, and eternal life.

21 Little children, keep yourselves from idols. Amen.

As if the apostle had said, "We christians are better taught by our religion, to acknowledge and worship the only true God by his Son Jesus Christ our only Mediator, and therefore exhort you to keep from idols ; intimating hereby, that the worshipping of any other besides this only true God, and by any other Mediator, besides Jesus Christ, is idolatry, or the words may be sensed thus : "We are sure that the Son of God is come, and that Christ is he, who by his doctrine and spirit hath enlightened us to know the true and living God, whilst the greatest part of the world worship false gods, yea, adore the devil himself." And farther, "We are in him that is true, even in his Son Jesus Christ ;" that is, we are by faith implanted into Jesus Christ, who is the author, purchaser, and disposer of eternal life, and therefore is true God. This text, which proves undeniably the divinity of Christ, the Socinians pervert by applying these words, this is the true God, not to Christ but to God the Father. But this makes the apostle guilty of a grand tautology, by saying, "The true God is the true God." Besides, it is here said of the same person that he is the true God, and eternal life. Now, eternal life is thrice in this very chapter attributed to Jesus Christ, as the author and dispenser of it, ver. 11, 12, 13. If then Christ be meant by eternal life he must be also meant by the true God, for they are spoken of together when the apostle says, This is the true God and eternal life. Lastly, our apostle concludes his epistle with this cautionary direction Little children, keep yourselves from idols. As if he had said, "My advice to you is that of a father to his own children, having received by the gospel the knowledge of the true God, keep yourselves from idols, or false gods of the heathen, among whom ye live; abandon all idolatry, superstition, sacrificing to idols, frequenting idol feasts, and all idolatrous communion, these things being inconsistent with the worship of the true God, and real christianity. Little children, keep yourselves from idols. Amen."

SAINT JOHN.

That St. John, the Apostle and Disciple of our Saviour who wrote the first, did also write this second epistle, seems very evident from the exact agreement of several passages in this with the former epistle, even word for word, and accordingly it has been agreed, that the same person was the author of both epistles.

But as touching the person to whom it was wrote, there have been different opinions: Some think that it was a church whom he directs it to under the title of the Elect Lady; and that some Jewish Church, and particularly the church of Jerusalem, the mother of all, and from whence came forth the word to all other churches; the reason upon which this conjecture is grounded, is, because the rest of the epistles, called catholic, were written to the Jews, (excepting that to Gaius) and therefore probably this was written to some Jewish church; and because all the Jewish churches received their spiritual things from the church of Jerusalem, she may therefore, say some, be fitly styled the Lady, as she was the mother of all other churches. Others conceive this epistle to be wrote to a particular person, some eminent and religious matron, of a great estate, and a great reliever and supporter of the members of the church in her days. Which opinion of these two has the greater probability, is a matter of no great importance: let us rather attend to the subject-matter of this divine epistle, which speaks thus:

THE elder unto the elect lady and her children, whom I love in the truth: and not I only, but also all they that have known the truth:

2 For the truth's sake which dwelleth in us, and shall be with us for ever:

3 Grace be with you, mercy, and peace, from God the Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of the Father, in truth and love.

Observe here, 1. The person writing and directing this epistle, St. John, styling him the elder, partly with respect to his age, he being, as it is thought, the only person at that time living upon the earth, who bore the name of an apostle; and partly with respect to his office in the church; the word elder being a name of honor and dignity, we find both St. Peter elsewhere, and St. John here, making use of it. Observe, 2. The person to whom this epistle is directed. The elect lady, and her children; either some particular church, with its religious members, according to some; or some honorable person of eminent piety and usefulness in the church according to others; and to her children, who had been religiously educated by her. Observe, 3. The solemn profession which he makes of the sincerity of his love to herself and her children, together with the ground and attractive cause of that his cordial affection to her and hers, Whom I love in truth, and for the truth's sake. Mark, St. John here loved the lady for the truth's sake, but how many in our days love the truth for the lady's sake? I mean for sinister ends and bye respects. It is a blessed thing when a religion, and a grace of God shining in the lives of christians is the special loadstone of our love and affection toward them; The elder to the elect lady, whom I love in the truth. She had embraced the truth of the gospel, and he was confidently persuaded that she would continue in the profession and practice of it for ever. Observe, 4. The salutation sent to her and her children, namely, increase of grace, and an abundance of mercy and peace from God the Father, and Christ the Redeemer; earnestly wishing that they may continue steadfast in the profession of the truth, and in the exercise of love one to another, "Grace, mercy, and peace, from God the Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ the Son of the Father, in truth and love."

4 I rejoiced greatly that I found of thy children walking in truth, as we have received the commandment from the Father.

Observe here, 1. The person rejoicing, St. John the apostle and minister of Christ Jesus. I rejoiced greatly. 2. The mercy rejoiced in, their walking in the truth. It was not their speculative knowledge of the truth, and their taking upon them a bare profession of christianity, that he rejoiced in, but their walking in the truth, and framing their conversation according to the commandments which they had received from the Father. Christianity is not a speculative science, but a practical art of holy living: and the most exalted knowledge is insufficient to salvation, without a suitable and correspondent practice; therefore, says St. John here, I rejoiced greatly to find of thy children, not barely professing of the truth, but walking in the truth. Observe, 3. The persons rejoiced for, or in the behalf of, the youth in that church or family to which he now wrote, "I rejoice to find thy children walking in the truth:" the hopes which the holy apostle had of a succession of saints, and that the children in his time would walk in their religious parent's footsteps, was matter of singular joy and rejoicing to the blessed apostle. Yet observe, 5. With what caution, restriction, and limitation, our apostle speaks, "I rejoiced greatly to find of thy children;" that is, some of them, perhaps many of them, it is to be feared not all of them; to have seen all was no doubt the apostle's desire, but to find any was unquestionless matter of exceeding joy: "I rejoiced greatly to find of thy children walking in the truth." Learn hence, That there is no greater joy to the ministers of Christ, than to see the youth, or rising generation in their day, walking in the paths of holiness and religion, and treading in their religious parents' footsteps.

5 And now I beseech thee, lady, not as though I wrote a new commandment unto thee, but that which we had from the beginning, that we love one another.

Observe here, the duty required, together with the profession of the gospel, namely, to live in unity and peace, in amity and concord one with another. This he calls a commandment, in the singular number, to intimate, that in this one commandment all the rest are contained, and in keeping this we keep all: and he tells them, it is no new commandment, but an old one, from the beginning: it is as old as Moses, yea, as old as Adam, being a part of the law of nature written in Adam's heart; yet in some respects love may be called a new commandment, because urged from new motives, and enforced by a new example; and because it is never to wax old, but to be always fresh in the memories, and found in the practice of Christ's disciples to the end of the world; "I write no new commandment, but what we had from the beginning, that we love one another."

6 And this is love, that we walk after his commandments. This is the commandment, That, as ye have heard from the beginning, ye should walk in it.

As if our apostle had said, "By this we shall make it evidently appear that there is the true love of God in us, if we endeavour to frame our lives according to his commandments;" and this, he assures them, was the great commandment, which they heard from the beginning, when the gospel was first preached unto them, namely, that they should believe in Christ, and love one another, and constantly persevere in the practice of these duties. Learn hence, That as obedience is the natural effect, and necessary product of love, so is it the best evidence, the surest mark and sign of it, This is the law of God; that is, the surest evidence that we love him, if we keep his commandments. Learn, 2. That it is not sufficient that we profess love to God and our neighbour, but we must walk in love, and be found in the exercise, yea, in the persevering exercise, of that grace and duty: "this is the commandment, That as ye have heard from the beginning, ye should walk in it."

7 For many deceivers are entered into the world, who confess not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh. This is a deceiver and an antichrist.

Having exhorted them to perseverance in the faith before he subjoins a reason for that exhortation now, because many deceivers are entered into the world, &c. Many impostors were gone forth abroad, who denied, some the divinity, others the humanity of Christ, and so rased the very foundations of christianity, and thus discovered themselves to be antichrists, or persons that set themselves to oppose Jesus Christ. Learn hence, That even from the beginning our Lord Jesus has had those who have disowned his natures, and denied his offices, the divinity of his person, the meritoriousness of his satisfaction; these are antichrists, persons maliciously set against Christ, and they shall find him righteously set against them in the day when they shall be summoned by him solemnly to appear before him.

8 Look to yourselves that we lose not those things which we have wrought, but that we receive a full reward.

Here our apostle resumes his exhortation to them to constancy and perseverance in the faith and obedience of the gospel, from this argument, lest they should lose the fruit of their faith professed, the profit of their afflictions, which for the sake of christianity they had suffered, and their works of piety and charity which they had performed, but continuing faithful to the death, might receive a full reward, even a crown of life. Learn hence, That it is both lawful and needful, even for the best of saints, in what they do in the service of God, to have an eye to the promised reward, by way of encouragement to them in the course of their obedience. We may with Moses have respect to the recompence of reward, but not only, or chiefly, yet as a spur to provoke us to duty. Perseverance in goodness has its reward belonging to it; that reward has a fulness belonging to it, a fulness of compensation, and a fulness of satisfaction, and that it is both lawful and laudable to have an eye in our working to this full recompence of reward.

9 Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God: he that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son.

Observe here, 1. The character given of the gospel, it is the doctrine of Christ; that is, the doctrine relating to Christ, and the doctrine taught by Christ. Observe, 2. What is affirmed of those that apostatize from, and abide not in the doctrine of Christ, they have not God; that is, some say, they have not God to be their Father, nor the Spirit to be their guide and sanctifier; they have, say others, no knowledge of God, no interest in God, no influences of grace and holiness derived from God. Observe, 3. The happy condition of those that abide in the doctrine of Christ, they have both the Father and the Son; he that has one, hath both; and he that hath not both, has neither; and this having may admit a threefold interpretation, thus; he has the Father and the Son by way of abode and inhabitation; he dwelleth in God, and God in him; they have the Father and the Son with them by way of society and communion "We will come unto them, and make our abode with them." Lastly, They have the Father and the Son, by the way of assistance and approbation; they have God to assist them, to accept them, to reward them.

10 If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed:

11 For he that biddeth him God speed is partaker of his evil deeds.

In these words our apostle directs them how to carry themselves towards those wicked apostates and heretical seducers, that deny the gospel, or any essential part of christianity, by no means to give any countenance or encouragement to them, or to hold any familiarity or communion with them, nor to entertain them, nor so much as courteously to salute them, but, by showing them disrespect, manifest a dislike and disapproving of their errors. This form of interdict, Bid him not God speed, seems to be an imitation of the Jewish practice towards excommunicated persons, who were not only excluded from all commerce, but also from all kind of common civilities, and ordinary salutation. Learn hence, That even civil courtesy, and common respect, is not, ought not to be paid to those that seduce others, or attempt to seduce us from the christian faith.

12 Having many things to write unto you, I would not write with paper and ink; but I trust to come unto you, and speak face to face, that our joy may be full.

Here our apostle concludes his epistle with an apology for the brevity of it, declaring, that he hoped to come shortly to them, and see them. And though he had many things to write, yet all things were not fit to be written; but besides, a lively voice affects more than a written letter; and he hoped that they should be filled with mutual joy at the sight of, and converse with each other. Presence of friends, and familiar converse with each other, is preferable to all writing to each other. By the children of the elect sister, some again understand the members of another church, who now sent salutations to them. The concluding word, Amen, imports his sincerity in what he had written to them, and his hearty wishes for the happiness and welfare of them.

SAINT JOHN.

THE elder unto the well-beloved Gaius, whom I love in the truth.

Observe here, 1. The penman and writer of this epistle, St. John, who wrote the two former, as appears by the agreement of them in words and phrases, which are peculiar to this apostle, he styles himself not an apostle, though he was so, but an elder: that word being a name of honor and dignity belonging to the chief of their tribes, agrees very well with the office of the apostle, set over the twelve tribes of the house of Israel. Observe, 2. The person to whom this epistle is directed, Gaius, we find three persons of this name in the New Testament, to wit, Gaius of Macedonia, Acts xix. Gaius of Derbe, Acts xx. and Gaius of Corinth, Rom. xvi. whom St. Paul calls his host, and of the whole church, who being eminent for his hospitality, especially to the ministers who went out to preach the gospel among the Gentiles, taking nothing of them; this man seems to be the person who had the honor of an epistle sent to him from the pen of an eminent apostle; such as do excel in their kindness to the faithful ministers of Jesus Christ, having oftentimes in this life some special marks of honor and respect put upon them by God, as a token of his gracious acceptance of them. Observe, 3. The interest which Gaius had in St. John's affections, he styles him the well-beloved Gaius, and shows also what was the motive and attractive of that his love, namely, the truth, that is, the gospel of Christ, called eminently the truth; he loved Gaius in the truth, that is, in great sincerity, and for the truth; for his sincere professing and practising the doctrine of the gospel, "The elder unto the well-beloved Gaius, whom I love in the truth;" such as love the truth are and ought to be, the special objects of our love.

2 Beloved, I wish above all things that thou mayest prosper, and be in health, even as thy soul prospereth.

Observe here, 1. This holy man, Gaius, who was so hospitable an host to the ministers and members of Christ, had but a weak and sickly body, he wanted health; strength of grace and dearness of respect, even from God himself, cannot prevail against diseases; such as are most holy are sometimes most weak and sickly. Observe, 2. That though Gaius had but a weak and consumptive body, yet had he a very thriving and vigorous soul; it is a very common yet a very sad and true observation, that men of strong, healthy, and active bodies have weak, lame, sickly and sinful souls. Ah wretched sinner! when under obligations to serve thy God best, thou forgettest him most, and prostitutest thy health to the service of thy lusts; how does the health and ease of one day deserve the service and thankfulness of thy whole life! But alas; instead of that, thou makest him to serve with thy sins, and layest the first-fruits of thy time and strength upon the devil's altar. Observe, 3. Our apostle's wish on the behalf of Gaius, namely, that his body were as healthful as his soul was holy, that he had as much health in the one, as he had grace in the other; "I wish above all things that thou mayest prosper and be in health, even as thy soul prospereth." Behold here such an improved and well-grown christian was this holy man Gaius, that our apostle makes the prosperous state of his soul the measure of all that prosperity which the one could wish, or the other desire; as thy soul prospereth, so may thy bodily health, for the service of God and of thy soul.

3 For I rejoiced greatly when the brethren came, and testified of the truth that is in thee, even as thou walkest in the truth.

4 I have no greater joy than to hear that my children walk in the truth.

Observe here, 1. The commendable testimony which the brethren that came from Gaius gave to St. John concerning his holy and unblameable conversation, according to the direction of the gospel, "the brethren testified of thee that thou walkest in the truth;" good reports of our brethren, without detracting any thing from their worth, is a manifest duty. Observe, 2. With what joy and rejoicing St. John received the notices of Gaius' adherence to the truth; and of his answerable walking thereunto. "I rejoiced when the brethren came and testified of thee;" he did not envy the grace of God so largely conferred on Gaius, but rejoiced in it, and no doubt blessed God exceedingly for it; soul mercies are the greatest mercies, and matters of the greatest joy to gracious souls. Observe, 3. That additional joy which St. John expresses to hear that his children, that is, those persons whom he had converted to christianity, and begotten to Christ through the gospel, did walk in the truth, that is, in the sincere practice as well as in the outward profession of religion; "I have no greater joy than to hear that my children walk in the truth;" the faithful ministers of Christ rejoice more in the welfare of their people's souls, than in all their worldly wealth or honor.

5 Beloved, thou doest faithfully whatsoever thou doest to the brethren, and to strangers;

6 Which have borne witness of thy charity before the church: whom if thou bring forward on their journey after a godly sort, thou shalt do well;

7 Because that for his name's sake they went forth, taking nothing of the Gentiles.

8 We, therefore, ought to receive such, that we might be fellow-helpers to the truth.

Observe here, How our apostle at once commends the great charity of Gaius, and at the same time excites him to the farther practice of it. Where note, 1. How charity towards christians is here styled fidelity to Christ, because shown to them upon Christ's account, "Beloved, thou doest faithfully whatsoever thou doest to the brethren." Acts of charity are acts of righteousness and fidelity; he that is uncharitable is unjust. Note, 2. The extensive nature of Gaius' charity, it was to brethren, yea not only to brethren, but to strangers: that is, not only to the brethren of the church with him, but to strangers in their travels to and fro, as they came near him; more particularly to such faithful ministers as came out of foreign parts to preach the gospel, whom Gaius had hospitably and charitably entertained. Note, 3. How he exhorts Gaius farther to furnish and help these ministers in their travels with all things necessary for their journey; because, 1. They preached the gospel freely, taking nothing of the Gentile christians for their pains. 2. Because it was for Christ's name sake they went abroad; to preach the gospel say some: to avoid persecution, say others, 3. Because to entertain such is to farther, as much as in us lies, the propagation of the gospel of Christ; such as contribute towards the maintenance and support of the ministers of Christ for his sake, shall have the present comfort and future reward of co-operating and contributing their parts towards the propagating and spreading of the gospel of Christ.

9 I wrote unto the church; but Diotrephes, who loveth to have the pre-eminence among them, receiveth us not.

10 Wherefore if I come, I will remember his deeds which he doeth, prating against us with malicious words; and not content therewith, neither doth he himself receive the brethren, and forbiddeth them that would, and casteth them out of the church.

Observe here, The pious care which St. John took for the relief and succour of such faithful christians as now travelled amongst them, both to avoid persecution, and to preach the gospel; he wrote to the church on their behalf, desiring their reception, and advising their relief; I wrote to the church; that is, I wrote for them, and sent my testimonial to the church on their behalf; every one has a pen to plead for himself, happy he that has both tongue and pen to intercede for others. Observe, 2. The opposition which St. John met with in so good a work; Diotrephes, a proud man, regarded not his letters, acknowledged not his authority, yea, slighted the apostle, "prating against him with malicious words;" the holiest men may meet with opposition in the holiest and best of actions, wherein the glory of God and the public good are most concerned: "I wrote to the church but Diotrephes received us not." Observe, 3. The holy apostle's resentment of this indignity, and wise resolution thereupon; when I come I will remember his deeds; that is, I will sharply rebuke him, and use that severity towards him which his crimes deserve, according to the authority which God has given me. Learn hence, That though private offences against Christ's ministers must be forgiven and forgotten by them; yet when an offence is prejudicial to the church, it must be exposed, and openly censured.

11 Beloved, follow not that which is evil, but that which is good. He that doeth good is of God: but he that doeth evil hath not seen God.

Here St. John adviseth his beloved Gaius, and those with him, not to imitate and follow this evil example of Diotrephes, (who not only refused charity towards the christian Jews, that wanted it himself, but would not permit the Gentile christians to receive them or relieve them) but to follow the example of God, who is good to all; and accordingly, he that is merciful is born of God, but he that is malicious hath no true knowledge of God, but is a mere stranger to him. Behold here the eulogy and high commendation which the Spirit of God gives to a charitable and good man: He that doeth good is of God, he is allied to heaven, born of God, and his offspring, but the uncharitable evil man is a composition of spite, envy and malice, born from beneath, and the devil's offspring.

12 Demetrius hath good report of all men, and of the truth itself; yea, and we also bear record; and ye know that our record is true.

Having propounded the example of God in the former verse, he propounds in this the example of Demetrius, as a pattern to them for their imitation in works of piety and charity; not only common report, and the apostle's testimony, but his own good works, did justly recommend him as an extraordinary pattern to their imitation. Note, That the commendation, which our own good works do give us before the world, are more valuable than all the praises and applause which can be given us by men, yea, by the best of men; "Demetrius hath a good report of all men, yea, of the truth itself."

13 I had many things to write, but I will not with ink and pen write unto thee.

14 But I trust I shall shortly see thee, and we shall speak face to face. Peace be to thee. Our friends salute thee. Greet the friends by name.

Thus our apostle concludes his epistle with an apology for the brevity of it, hoping in a short time to see him, and to speak face to face unto him; he concludes with his apostolical valediction, Peace be to thee; unto which adding the brethren's salutations, it teaches us, that kind remembrances and greetings are suitable to christian friendship; "Our friends salute thee. Greet the friends by name."

S A I N T J U D E.

The design and scope of this Epistle appears to be much the same with that of the second of St. Peter, and was written probably about the same time; the intent of both is this, namely, to fortify the christian Jews against the errors and corruptions of those seducers, who, by their wicked lies and worse doctrines, attempted to seduce persons from the plainness and simplicity of the gospel, and to bring upon them the same condemnation and judgment with themselves.

JUDE, the servant of Jesus Christ, and brother of James, to them that are sanctified by God the Father, and preserved in Jesus Christ, and called:

2 Mercy unto you, and peace, and love, be multiplied.

Here we have observable, the person saluting, the person saluted, and the salutation itself. Observe, 1. The person saluting described three ways. 1. By his name, Jude, called Thaddeus and Lebbeus, to distinguish him from Judas Iscariot; behold an holy apostle and a perfidious traitor, bearing the same name, Judas an apostle, and Judas an apostate; it is not an holy name, but an holy nature, that commends us unto God. 2. By his office, a servant of Jesus Christ; he might have styled himself near kinsman of Jesus Christ, or a brother of the Lord; but he mentions not his natural, but his spiritual relation to Christ, alliance in faith, or a spiritual relation to Christ, is much dearer and nearer than alliance in flesh: there is a peculiar honor and excellency in the title of Christ's servant above that of Christ's kinsman. 3. By his kindred and alliance; brother of James, this is added to distinguish him from Judas Iscariot; it is the duty of the servants, but especially the ministers of Christ, to prevent all scandalous exception against their persons, and to be of untainted reputations; "Jude the servant of Christ, and brother of James." Observe, 2. The persons saluted, these also are three ways described. 1. "They are sanctified by God the Father;" the apostle judges of them by their profession, and by their obligation; they had, by assuming the christian name, obliged themselves to be saints, or holy persons; and by their profession did own and declare themselves so to be; and no doubt many of them were inwardly sanctified, as well as outwardly holy. 2. They are preserved in Christ Jesus; that is, in the faith of Christ Jesus, when many for fear of persecution, have apostatized from it; he that will approve himself a true christian, must show himself a steadfast christian; instability is an argument of insincerity; again, preserved in Christ Jesus; that is, preserved in a state of grace and holiness, by Christ Jesus, by the merit of his death and passion, by the prevalence of his intercession, and by the Holy Spirit's efficacy and operation. 3. They are called all of them externally by the ministry of the word; internally, many of them by the effectual operation of the Spirit, renewing the nature and reforming the life; these are the persons saluted, "Them that are sanctified by God the Father, preserved in Christ Jesus and called." Observe, 4. The salutation itself, Mercy, peace, and love, be multiplied unto you; Mercy from God, the Father of mercies; peace from Jesus Christ, who is our peace; and love from the Holy Ghost, by whom it is shed abroad in our hearts: and his praying that these graces may not be barely given and granted, but be multiplied and increased, intimates to us our duty, which is not barely to seek grace at the hands of God, but the multiplication and augmentation of it: to labor after grace in growth, as well as grace in truth: Mercy, peace, and love be multiplied; thankful we may and ought to be for the least measures of grace received, but not satisfied with the greatest measures, short of our heavenly perfection; he was never truly good that does not desire daily to grow better.

3 Beloved, when I gave all diligence to write unto you of the common salvation, it was needful for me to write unto you, and exhort you, that ye should earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints:

Observe here, 1. A courteous and loving compellation, Beloved, people should study to render themselves fit objects of their pastor's love. Observe, 2. How his love towards them put him upon writing to them with all diligence; love must be the spring and fountain of all our ministerial performances: all services without love, are as sacrifices without fire. Christ first inquired after Peter's love, before he urged him to labor; God will reward no services to our people, but what have been done in love. Observe, 3. The excellency and weightiness of the subject about which he was to write, it was concerning the common salvation; so called, not as if it were a salvation common to all persons, good and bad; but because common to all believers who have a joint title to it, and a common interest in it: the salvation which the gospel reveals, is a common salvation; it is common in regard of the purchaser of it; Christ our common Saviour; in regard of the price paid for it, the precious blood of Christ; in regard to the way and means by which it is obtained and secured, and that is faith: and in regard of the earnest of it, and longings after it, the Holy Spirit of God is common to all believers, and gives them a pledge and earnest of it, and sets them a breathing after, and longing for this salvation. Observe, 4. The exhortation itself, "Earnestly to contend for the faith once delivered to the saints;" that is, for the sincere doctrine of the gospel delivered by Christ: once delivered; that is, once for all, so as never to be changed or altered more; no new rule of faith is evermore to be expected; and therefore the articles of faith added to the apostles' creed by the council of Trent, can be no articles of christian faith, because never delivered by Christ, or his apostles, and never known to many christians long after their decease. Learn, That it is the duty of christians at all times, but especially in the times of error and seduction, to contend earnestly for that pure and uncorrupted faith which is contained in the gospel.

4 For there are certain men crept in unawares, who were before of old ordained to this condemnation; ungodly men, turning the grace of our God into lasciviousness, and denying the only Lord God, and our Lord Jesus Christ.

Here we have a reason of the foregoing exhortation assigned, why we should contend so earnestly for the christian faith once delivered by Christ to his apostles, because there were crept, by little and little, such seducers into the church, as would endeavour to adulterate and corrupt it; "There are certain men crept in unawares." Note here, That corrupters and corruptions creep secretly and gradually into the church: and heretics do not broach all their errors and false doctrines at once; vain then and frivolous is the question which the church of Rome asks us, when did their innovations and false doctrines come first into the church? They crept in, and that unawares; it is enough for us that we find them there, though we assign not the time when, nor the manner how they did come in. Observe next, The character and description which our apostle gives of these seducers crept in amongst them. 1. He tells us they were men fore-ordained to condemnation; mark, not fore-ordained to seduction to sin, but to condemnation for sin; the word rendered fore-ordained, signifies before written, or before prophesied of, by Enoch and others, that they would by their great sins and impieties, fall into that condemnation which God hath ordained as a just reward to their transgressions; God never ordaineth or decreeth any man's sin, but he decreeth and foretelleth their condemnation for sin. 2. He styles them "wicked ungodly men; turning the grace of God into lasciviousness; pointing at the Nicolaitans, Gnostics, and other impure heretics, that sprang from Simon Magus, who made the doctrine of the free grace of God, discovered in the gospel, a cloak for their looseness and lasciviousness. Errors in doctrine are usually accompanied with corruption in manners, as being most suitable to man's corrupt vile nature, and will be sure never to want followers. 3. He charges them with denying the only Lord God, and our Lord Jesus Christ: that is, Jesus Christ our only Master, God and Lord, called by St. Peter, the Lord that bought them; lessening the dignity of his person, and invalidating what they could, the merit of his death and sufferings. Learn hence, 1. That Jesus Christ, the Master of the world, the Lord of his church, is truly God; he is called the great

God, and the mighty God, to show that he is not a God inferior to, but equal to the Father; and that by nature, not by office. Learn, 2. That it is an horrid impiety, to deny our Lord Jesus Christ, to deny him in either of his natures, or in any of his offices; to deny him in either opinion, or in practice, is a sin that carries a prodigious appearance with it: "They denied the only Lord God, and our Lord Jesus Christ."

5 I will, therefore, put you in remembrance, though ye once knew this, how that the Lord, having saved the people out of the land of Egypt, afterwards destroyed them that believed not.

In this and the following verses, our apostle, to deter them from following the pernicious ways of these seducers, sets before them the several examples of God's judgments inflicted in former times upon persons guilty of such crimes, as these seducers were stigmatized for, and guilty of; he begins with the Israelites in the wilderness, as they perished through unbelief, after they were brought out of Egypt, so shall revolvers perish, notwithstanding their baptism, and fair beginnings. Learn hence, 1. That God's judgments inflicted on some, are, and ought to be, warnings unto all. 2. That God's ancient judgments were ordained to be our warnings and examples; his holiness is the same as ever, his justice the same, his hatred of sin the same, and his power to revenge it the same as ever; his judgments now may be more spiritual, but they are not less terrible. Learn, 3. That unbelief will as certainly bring destruction upon christians now, as it did upon the Israelites of old. Did God destroy them that believed not in his power then? No less will he destroy them that believe not his promise now.

6 And the angels which kept not their first estate, but left their own habitation, he hath reserved in everlasting chains, under darkness, unto the judgment of the great day.

The next example set before them, is that of the apostate angels, who, for their rebellion against God, were thrown down from heaven, and are reserved as so many prisoners in chains of darkness, to the judgment of the great day, when their condition will be more miserable than now it is. Now, if God did not spare apostatizing angels, surely he will not spare apostatizing seducers. Note here, 1. The sin of the angels; they left their first state, namely, their state of holiness. 2. Their punishment; they left their own habitation, they departed from that place of happiness and glory which before they enjoyed: when they changed their nature, they changed their place: the presence of an holy God is no place for unholy persons. Note, 3. That the angels are kept in chains, and those chains are everlasting; the chain of God's eternal decree holds them; the chain of their own guilt holds them; the chain of utter despair eternally holds them. Note, 4. That the day of judgment will be a great day; and at that day, the punishment of fallen angels will be far greater than now it is: when heaven's joys are full, then heaven's torments will be full, but not before.

7 Even as Sodom and Gomorrha, and the cities about them, in like manner giving themselves over to fornication, and going after strange flesh, are set forth for an example, suffering the vengeance of eternal fire.

Another example of God's severity against sin and sinners, is Sodom and Gomorrha, Adma and Zeboim, who giving themselves up to the lusts of uncleanness, were in an extraordinary manner destroyed by fire from heaven, which was a forerunner of that eternal fire of hell, which they are to suffer to all eternity, and so may and ought to be a terrifying example, and timely warning to all persons, that they fall not into the like sins. Learn, 1. That the sin of uncleanness doth exceedingly displease and provoke God to punish above other sins, because it defiles both soul and body: it makes a sty of a temple; and because it is a sin usually accompanied with final impenitency, none that go unto her return, that is, very few: whoredom is a deep ditch, the abhorred of God do fall into it. Learn, 2. That the sin of uncleanness is remarkably followed with vengeance, even with eternal vengeance: God returns flames for flames, and revenges the fire of lust with the fire of hell.

8 Likewise also these filthy dreamers defile the flesh, despise dominion, and speak evil of dignities.

As if our apostle had said, "Notwithstanding these fore-mentioned examples of God's vengeance upon the unclean Sodomites, and others, yet these heretical seducers whom he calls dreamers, because they vented their own dreams and phantasies instead of God's truth, did defile themselves with their filthy practices, teaching that by their christian liberty they were freed from all civil subjection, speaking evil of those who were set in authority over them." Here observe, 1. That the doctrines which seducers bring, are not the truths of Christ, but their own dreams. Dreams they are in point of opinion, and dreams they will be found in point of expectation; they promise much, but perform nothing. 2. That dreams of error, or heretical principles, do dispose toward filthy and unclean practices. Filthy dreamers defile the flesh. Avoid error in judgment, if you would escape filthiness in conversation. 3. That lust loves not restraint, libertines despise dominion, sensuality makes men unruly: such are sons of Belial, they cast off the yoke. 4. That such as despise government, speak evil of governors; dignities lie open to the lash of the tongue; neither power nor innocence can protect from calumny and imputations, from slander and false accusation: "These filthy dreamers despise dominion, and speak evil of dignities."

9 Yet Michael the archangel, when contending with the devil, he disputed about the body of Moses, durst not bring against him a railing accusation, but said, The Lord rebuke thee.

Our apostle in the preceding verse having charged seducers with contemptuous speaking against governors and government; in this verse he aggravates the impudence and impiety of it, by the carriage of Michael the archangel towards the devil. This argument is taken from the greater to the less, and lies thus: "If Michael, an archangel, so excellent in nature, so high in office, contending with satan, an impure spirit, yet, used great modesty, without the least indecency of expression towards him, who and what are these that despise dominions, and dare speak evil of dignities? Hence observe, That it is our duty to learn this angelical lesson, namely, not to give railing or reviling language to the worst adversary in the best cause, because it proceeds from pride or passion, and because so contrary to the temper and design of christianity; much more is it our duty to watch against the sins of the tongue, with respect to our governors and superiors, remembering it is written, "Thou shalt not speak evil of the rulers of thy people."

10 But these speak evil of those things which they know not: but what they know naturally, as brute beasts, in those things they corrupt themselves.

A double crime is here charged upon these seducers by our apostle, name y, pride, in speaking evil of things they know not; and wickedness, in abusing the knowledge they had. 1. Their sin was great, in speaking evil of what they did not know, (they reviled dignities and magistrates, the usefulness of whom they knew not) and possibly condemned the mysteries of the christian faith which they understood not, understanding they called themselves Gnostics, and pretended to higher degrees, and larger measures of knowledge than other men. Learn, That truth is usually slandered by ignorant and conceited men; because men do not understand the things of God; therefore they do condemn them. 2. Their wickedness was great in abusing the knowledge that they had, and in acting contrary to it. What they knew naturally, or by the light of nature, to be sinful, in those things, as brute beasts, did they corrupt and defile themselves. Here note, 1. That where sin reigneth, it turneth man into a brute beast Psalm xlix. 12. Hence they are compared to dogs for filthiness, to swine for uncleanness, to wolves for cruelty; of the two it is worse to be like a beast, than to be a beast; the beast is what God has made it; but he that is like a beast, is what sin and the devil has made him. 2. That it is a sign of a man turned to a beast, to follow the lusts and passions of corrupt nature. "Like brute beasts they corrupt themselves." It is just with God to leave them to be led by sense, who will not be guided by grace, and to suffer them to fall into the ditch of beastly sensuality, who forget that they are men.

11 Woe unto them! for they have gone in the way of Cain, and ran greedily after the error of Balaam for reward, and perished in the gainsaying of Core.

Our apostle goes on in charging these seducers with several crimes; particularly with the malice and envy of Cain, with the sordid covetousness of Balaam, with the sedition and gainsaying of Core; they hate their brethren, and so are murderers, like Cain; they have adulterated the truth for bare gain, and so have followed the example of Balaam, "who loved the wages of unrighteousness;" and as Corah, Dathan, and Abiram, rose up against Moses and Aaron, so have they seditiously opposed both magistracy and ministry,

Learn hence, 1. That the practice of wicked men now, and from the beginning, is still the same. 2. That satan entices his slaves to divers sins, to the malice of Cain, to the covetousness of Balaam, to the sedition of Core. 3. That such as sin now may read their destruction in the destruction of those that sinned before them. "Woe unto them, they have gone in the way of Cain, and perished, &c."

12 These are spots in your feasts of charity, when they feast with you, feeding themselves without fear: clouds they are without water, carried about of winds: trees whose fruit withereth, without fruit, twice dead, plucked up by the roots;

13 Raging waves of the sea, foaming out their own shame; wandering stars, to whom is reserved the blackness of darkness for ever.

Our apostle having set forth these seducers in the foregoing verses, by sundry examples, he now comes to set them forth by several similitudes and resemblances. 1. He calls them spots in their love-feasts, (the infamy of their lives being a blemish and scandal to their christian assemblies) feeding without fear of offending either God or man. 2. He calls them clouds without water, promising rain, but yielding none; making a show of knowledge, but indeed having none, and they are driven (as clouds by the wind) from one vanity to another. 3. Trees they are, but like them, in autumn, which have neither leaves nor fruit; nay, trees twice dead, in sin, before conversion; and in respect of their apostasy, after their conversion, and so shall be plucked up by the roots. 4. They are like raging waves of the sea, turbulent and tumultuous, foaming out at their mouths the filthiness and impurity that boileth in their hearts. 5. Wandering stars, or teachers unstable, departing from the true faith once delivered to them; but for these illuminated and knowing teachers, "is reserved the blackness of darkness for ever."

14 And Enoch also, the seventh from Adam, prophesied of these, saying, Behold, the Lord cometh with ten thousand of his saints, 15 To execute judgment upon all, and to convince all that are ungodly among them of all their ungodly deeds, which they have ungodly committed, and of all their hard speeches, which ungodly sinners have spoken against him.

The apostle having described the sin of the seducers in the former verses, declares the certainty of their destruction in the verses now before us; assuring us, that Enoch of old by a Spirit of prophecy, did foretel the sins of such persons, and their condemnation also at the general judgment, when Christ shall come gloriously attended to execute judgment upon the ungodly in general, and on such as speak contumeliously on him and his in particular. Here note, 1. That the doctrine of the day of judgment is very ancient, foretold by the prophets from the beginning. Man was made an accountable creature, capable of rendering an account of his actions: and the sentence of death, denounced in paradise against him for his sins, did necessarily imply it; the drowning of the world, and burning of Sodom, were both types and forerunners of it; though there are atheists upon earth that do not believe a future judgment to come, there are none in hell; feeling and experience must teach some men that which the spirit, scripture, reason, and conscience could never learn them. Enoch prophesied, saying, Behold, the Lord cometh. Note, 2. How Enoch here prefixeth a note of incitement to his prophecy, Behold the Lord cometh to Judgment; implying, that great is our natural backwardness to believe and mind the coming of Christ to judgment; and intimating, that we should always realize the day of the Lord to ourselves, and represent it to our thoughts as certain, and near at hand. Note, 3. How royally attended Christ will come to judgment, Behold, he cometh with ten thousand of his saints. Christ will be attended only with holy ones at the last day; such as meet him now in purity, shall meet him then in peace. How cheerfully then may saints think of the last judgment, and observe the number of his attendants? Not a few saints, but ten thousand of them, Rev. v. 11. They are called a number which no man can number. This is a comfort against the paucity and small number of those that are now upright with God; in heaven we shall have company enough; God's family, when it comes together, will be very numerous, or rather innumerable, Heb. xii. 23. Observe, 4. The work of Christ at the day of judgment, namely, to convince and judge. Conscience shall then have an exact view of all that sinners did and said: sin will find them out, and testify against them at Christ's tribunal; and when conscience has convinced, Christ will condemn, and whom he has condemned, he will execute. Observe, 5. The persons whom Christ will convince and judge, the ungodly. The process of the last day lies chiefly, though not only, against the ungodly: these shall not stand in the judgment, because ungodliness doth chiefly provoke; not but that unrighteousness will then be condemned also. Rom. i. 18. and sinners sent to hell for neglecting the duties of the second table, no less than the first. Observe, 6. That not only the deeds of ungodly men, but their words, especially their hard speeches against God and his children, shall be brought into judgment. A wicked tongue is a rugged tongue; it speaks words sharper than swords; pray we for wisdom to make as good an use of the reproaching tongue of an enemy, as of the reproving tongue of a friend; that the sword of the tongue may let out the corruption that is in our hearts, and do us good against the will, and contrary to the intention, of our enemy.

16 These are murmurers, complainers, walking after their own lusts; and their mouth speaking great swelling words, having men's persons in admiration because of advantage.

Our apostle having asserted in the former verse, that Christ will at the great day convince and judge all the ungodly; in this verse he declares that these seducers were of the number of the ungodly, whom Christ will certainly judge, because they were murmurers, complainers; discontented with, and always complaining of their lot, and present condition; because they had not as much as they desired, they murmured against God, as if they had nothing: walking after their own lusts, contrary to the restraint of nature, and the laws of God, their mouths speaking great swelling words. It has been the constant course of heretics to speak high, and talk big, like mountebanks, hoping thereby to set off, and put off the better their counterfeit and false ware; but he is no wise man, whom great swelling words will seduce from the ways of wisdom. Not the words of the speaker, but the weight of what is spoken, is to be minded; yet though they talked these swelling words to their inferiors, at the same time they could flatteringly admire the persons and actions of others from whom they expected any benefit or advantage; having men's persons in admiration because of advantage. Now, from the whole of this large character, which St. Jude here gives of these heretical seducers and false teachers, we learn, That miserable and most deplorable is the condition of the misled followers of seducing teachers; the seducer follows his lust, and the follower is led by the seducer. Here the blind leads the blind; God pity them both! When teachers offer themselves to us, we should consider who leads them, who are so officious to lead us, and follow them only as they follow Christ; no wise man will set his watch by the clock, but by the sun.

17 But, beloved, remember ye the words which were spoken before of the apostles of our Lord Jesus Christ;

18 How that they told you, there should be mockers in the last time, who should walk after their own ungodly lusts, 19 These be they who separate themselves, sensual, having not the Spirit.

Having largely described those seducers, our apostle now comes to exhort those to whom he wrote, to beware of them, assuring them, that the apostles of Christ, St. Paul, and particularly St. Peter, had expressly foretold of those wicked scoffers which would arise in the church in the last times; which mockers and scoffers, he shows were such as without any just cause separated themselves from the church's communion, pretending greatly to sanctify, but addicted to sensuality, and destitute of the Holy Spirit. Note here, 1. That the scripture speaks much of the sin and sinners that should be found in the latter times; we ought not therefore to be troubled at what is foretold, nor be unarmed when we are so often forewarned. It is a shame for them, who have oft heard and known the doctrines of the apostles, to be surprised by seducers. St. Jude expects that these Christians, who know what the apostles had delivered, should vigorously oppose all seducers and seduction. Learn, 2. That a causeless separation from a church, of which we are members, is culpable and sinful; a separation from corruptions, and a separation from them that are corrupt, are two distinct things; the former is always a duty, the latter not so. Learn, 3. That those that separate from the assemblies of the faithful, are usually sensual, and have not the Spirit; they have not the Spirit either to guide them, or to quicken them, or to comfort them. "These are they who separate themselves, sensual, having not the Spirit."

20 But ye, beloved, building up yourselves on your most holy faith, praying in the Holy Ghost.

21 Keep yourselves in the love of God, looking for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ unto eternal life.

Our apostle having, in the former part of the chapter, warned the christians of the danger of seducers, he closes his epistle with directions and advice how they may be preserved from seduction, and what means they should use for their perseverance and establishment in the doctrine of Christ. First, he directs them to build up themselves in their most holy faith; that is, in the doctrine of faith contained in the gospel. Where note, 1. That the faith of christians is a most holy faith; holy in its principles, holy in its pattern, holy in its encouragements and rewards. 2. That it is the duty, and ought to be the endeavour of every christian to build up himself, and others also, in the faith of the gospel: the best way for christians not to be losers of what they have, is to be laborers for what they want: progress in christianity is the best means to preserve us from apostasy. Secondly, He exhorts to prayer, praying in the Holy Ghost; that is, with holy reverence, with humble confidence, with fervent importunity, with those holy affections and desires which the Spirit of God excite in you: the concurrence of the Holy Spirit is necessary both to assistance and acceptance in prayer; it enables us to pray in faith and love, with sincerity and importunity; without the Spirit there is no acceptable praying, and without prayer vain is the pretence of the Spirit. Breathing is the first evidence of life. St. Paul was no sooner converted, but behold he prayed. Thirdly, He directs that they keep themselves in the love of God; no such way to keep ourselves from error, as to preserve ourselves in that love which God bears to us, and in that love we bear to him; take we care that there be no intermission of the acts of love, and no remission of the degrees of love, but that we be rooted and grounded in love, and then we are proof against seducers and false teachers. Fourthly, He directs them to look up to heaven, if they would be steady and steadfast in the faith here on earth. "Looking for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ unto eternal life." Here Observe, That heaven, or eternal life, is the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ. Mercy it is called, because bestowed on the miserable, that could never merit or deserve it, and because it is the effect and fruit of free and special mercy, and because bestowed on the vessels of mercy, and because it is the perfection and consummation of all mercy; and it is the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ, because he purchased it, he prepared it, he exhibits and gives it. Observe farther, That christians are to look for eternal life as the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ; that is, to believe it, to meditate upon it, to have ardent desires after it, and patiently to wait for it; "looking for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ, unto eternal life."

22 And of some have compassion, making a difference:

23 And others save with fear, pulling them out of the fire: hating even the garment spotted by the flesh.

In these words our apostle directs them how to carry and behave themselves towards those who were seduced, in order to their recovery, namely, after a different manner. 1. He advises to christian lenity and gentleness, to compassion and tenderness towards some: Of some have compassion. Learn thence, That though reproofs are to be given to backsliders, yet must they be given in compassion, and with holy grief. Our words must have bowels in them, and proceed not from passion, but from pity. 2. For those that are more entangled, corrupted, and hardened in their errors, he advises that they endeavour to save them with fear: that is, terrify them with the fear of God's judgments and wrath, and by a sharp admonition recover them out of their errors, as Lot was snatched out of the fire of Sodom. There is a time when severity is not only useful, but absolutely necessary, yet necessity must be the mother of severity. Lenity must be first used; if that fails, severity must succeed.

—Hating even the garment spotted by the flesh.

By this the apostle means every thing that doth defile though in the least degree; he forbids all affinity or nearness to the errors and vices of these sinners, implying, That some sinners are so filthy and unclean, that there is no keeping company with them without defilement; and intimating, That christians, in their conversing with erroneous or vicious persons, whom they labor to recover, should take great care that they be not corrupted nor debauched by them, they being only to deal with them as physicians, not as companions; "Hating the garment spotted with the flesh."

24 Now unto him that is able to keep you from falling, and to present you faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy, 25 To the only wise God our Saviour, be glory and majesty, dominion and power, both now and ever. Amen.

Observe here, 1. How our apostle shuts up his exhortation with prayer; having exhorted them to duty, he commends them to the divine grace, intimating, that the fruit of all must be expected from God, without whose blessing all exhortations and endeavours will nothing avail. Observe, 2. The person who is the object of prayer and praise, Christ, described by his power. 1. He is able to keep us from falling; that is, from apostasy: he speaks not of his absolute power, so Christ is able to keep us from all sin, but of such a power as is engaged by promise and office; all believers are Christ's charge, and he will preserve them from final destruction. 2. He is able to present us faultless; it is Christ's office to preserve his church until he presents it spotless to the Father, before the presence of his glory; that is, at his glorious appearance, when he shall come to judge the world with exceeding joy, on both sides no doubt, both on Christ's part and ours. O sweet interview betwixt Christ and believers! He will joy to see us, as well as we rejoice to see him. Learn, That Christ will one day make a solemn presentation of his people unto God. 2. That when he doth present them, he will present them faultless. 3. That the day in which he does present them, will be a very glorious day in itself, and a very joyful day to all his people; when the impenitent world howl, they shall triumph.

—To the only wise God our Saviour, be glory and majesty, dominion and power, both now and ever.

Our apostle shuts up his epistle (as is usual) with a doxology; where observe, 1. The person to whom the praise is given, to God, the wise God, the only wise God, so called because he is originally and independently wise; because he is infinitely and transcendently wise; all the wisdom of the wisest of men is nothing in opposition to his wisdom, nor in comparison with it. Observe, 2. That Jesus Christ our Saviour is worthy to be accounted the only wise God, as he is God, he is called the wisdom of the Father; and in the book of the Proverbs he is represented under that title, and spoken of as a person, chap. viii. As he was a man, all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge were found in him; he received the habit of all created knowledge and wisdom, together with all other graces without measure. Observe, 3. As the person described to whom the praise is given, so the description of the praise which is given to this person, Glory and majesty, dominion and power; by which understand the greatness and eminent excellency of the divine nature, which results from his perfections, and whereby the divine nature is infinitely exalted above all other beings. Learn hence, That we ought to have such a sense of God's transcendent excellencies and perfections as may oblige us to ascribe all things that are honorable and glorious to him, therefore are so many words here used. Observe, 4. The duration, now and ever. Learn thence, That believers have such large and vast desires for the exaltation of God's glory, that they would have him glorified everlastingly, and without ceasing, not only in the present, but to eternal ages. To him be glory now and ever. Amen.

ST. JOHN THE DIVINE.

The title of this book is the Revelation, so called, because it contains in general a discovery of such secrets, as no wisdom of man could have manifested or foreseen, and in particular reveals such divine things concerning the state of the church, which before lay hid in the purpose and counsel of God. Concerning this book, Observe, 1. The penman that wrote it, St. John, the Apostle and Evangelist, (as it is believed) the Disciple whom Jesus loved; his hand held the pen, whilst the Spirit of God indited the mysterious matter of this book. Observe, 2. The time when, and the place where he received the commandment to write what he wrote; the place was in the Isle of Patmos, into which it is said that St. John was banished by the emperor Domitian, and there received and wrote this revelation, after he had, by a miraculous providence, escaped death at Rome, being there put into a caldron of burning oil. As to the time when he had his commandment to write, he tells us it was on the Lord's Day, chap. i. ver. 10. I was in the Spirit on the Lord's Day, and heard a voice, saying, What thou seest write in a book. The more conscientious we are in observing our Lord's Day, and the more zealous and fervent in the religious duties of it, the more receptive we are of divine favors, and the better qualified for receiving discoveries from God; The secret of the Lord is with them that fear him; that is, devoutly worship and perform their duty to him. Observe, 3. The persons to whom this epistle and prophecy is written, namely, to all the servants of God in general, and to the seven churches of Asia in particular, to remain a perfect record for the use of the church to all succeeding ages, the state of the universal church-militant being herein laid open. Observe lastly, The authority of what is here written, it is the revelation of Christ Jesus, chap. xxii. I Jesus have sent my angel to testify these things unto the churches; that is, for the instruction and consolation of the church in all ages are these things written, ver. 7. And blessed is he that keepeth the words of the prophecy of this book; from whence we may infallibly gather, that it is the mind and will of God, that this book should be read by the church in all ages, and by all her members; for how can they keep the words of this prophecy, except they know them? How can they know them, except they read them, and study them! Add to this, that besides the prophetic part of this book, there is such a spirit of holiness breathing through it, the main articles of the christian faith so clearly and plainly held forth in it, and many religious and moral duties so strictly enjoined by it, that it is the unquestionable duty of the ministers of God to study this book with that modesty and sobriety which becomes them as inquirers, and likewise the people's duty to give themselves to the reading of it with fervent prayer, and simplicity of mind to be guided and directed by it as becomes learners.

CHAPTER I.

THE Revelation of Jesus Christ, which God gave unto him, to show unto his servants things which must shortly come to pass; and he sent and signified it by his angel unto his servant John:

2 Who bare record of the word of God, and of the testimony of Jesus Christ, and of all things that he saw.

That is, "This revelation God the Father gave to Christ, his Son, as Mediator; and therewith a commission to impart it to his faithful servants, especially the ministers of his church, and particularly to St. John, who bare record in his gospel, and in his epistles, that Jesus Christ was the essential and eternal word of God, and also bare record of the testimony of Christ; that is, of his doctrine and miracles, of his death and sufferings, declaring all things that he saw, namely, in his visions, and as they were represented to him." Here note, 1. The favor granted to St. John, he had a vision or revelation of future things. Revelations from God were sometimes by vision, sometimes by voice, and sometimes by dreams; this revelation, which St. John had, was of a mixed nature, partly by vision, and partly by voice. Note, 2. The primary Author of this revelation, God the Father, the first person in the Trinity; he revealed it: the revelation which God gave. Note, 3. The order in which God gave forth this revelation; first, it is given to Christ, "The revelation of Jesus Christ which God gave unto him;" next unto the angel, then unto St. John, to reveal it to the church. Christ, as God, knew all things from eternity, but as a man and mediator he received his revelation from God the Father, and imparted it by the angel to his servant John; we see then that Christ in his state of exaltation, continues to execute his prophetic office, by revealing to his servants the mind and will of God. Note, 4. The subject matter of the revelation, Things which should shortly come to pass; mark, not things which were already past, (then this book had been an history, and not a prophecy) but which should certainly and suddenly come to pass: that is, they should shortly begin to be accomplished, and to take effect, not that they should all be immediately performed, but in God's time; in respect of whose eternity, a thousand years are as but one day. Note lastly, The fidelity and great integrity of St. John, in making known to others all things that he saw; that is, he had by his writings told the churches what Christ by his angel told him, even all that he heard and saw in this vision, as St. Paul did not shun to declare the whole counsel of God, Acts xx. (he doth not say he had declared the whole counsel of God, for who but God himself could declare that?) So St. John here "bare record of the whole word of God, and of the testimony of Jesus Christ, and of all things that he saw and heard."

3 Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy, and keep those things which are written therein: for the time is at hand.

Observe here, The great encouragement which the Spirit of God gives to all christians to read and regard, to consider and meditate upon the things contained in this divine book, that is, the necessary parts of christianity, which are here mixed with darker passages; all must read, study, and practise these, that hope for blessedness; "Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy, and keep those things which are written therein." Hence note, That although the book of the Revelation be in itself a very abstruse and mysterious part of Holy Scripture, yet christians ought not to be debarred, much less to debar themselves from reading of it, and consulting with it; blessed is he that readeth, that is, attentively, understandingly, and affectionately, and "blessed is he that keepeth the things that are written," that is, in his mind and memory, in his affection and practice, so as to adhere to the truth, whatever trials and temptations it may expose him to.

4 JOHN to the seven churches which are in Asia: Grace be unto you, and peace, from him which is, and which was, and which is to come: and from the seven Spirits which are before his throne;

5 And from Jesus Christ, who is the faithful Witness, and the first begotten of the dead, and the prince of the kings of the earth.---

Observe here, 1. The persons to whom St. John writes, and the particular churches which he does salute, namely, the seven churches of Asia, which were then the most famous and flourishing churches in the christian world, but now overrun with barbarism. Sin has laid the foundation of ruin in the most flourishing churches and kingdoms. Observe, 2. The apostolical salutation given to these churches, Grace be unto you and peace; by grace understand the free favor and rich love of God, in pardoning, sanctifying, and saving; and by peace, the inward sense of that love, and all outward mercies and temporal blessings whatsoever. Observe, 3. The persons in whose name, or from whom this salutation is sent and given. 1. From God the Father, who is described by his eternity and immutability, which is, which was, and which is to come. 2. "From the seven spirits, which are before the throne;" that is, from the Holy Ghost, who is thus described in regard of the perfection and variety of his gracious operations; the Holy Spirit is called seven, because he is perfect in working; and he is said to be before the throne, because continually present with God, and ready to perform what is needful for the church of God. 3. From Jesus Christ, who is described according to the threefold office of a prophet, priest, and king; his being called the true and faithful witness, points out his prophetic office, that he is the great Prophet of his church, who reveals the will of the Father fully and faithfully to the sons of men: his being styled the first-begotten of the dead, points out his priestly office, and intimates that he died, that he rose again from the dead, and that he first arose, or was the first-begotten from the dead; that is, the first that arose from the dead by his own power, to a state of immortality, and never to die more; some indeed rose before him, but then they were raised by him, he was the first that ever raised himself; others were raised from the dead, as Lazarus, before Christ, but they died again; whereas Christ rose from the dead never to die more; he entered into a state of immortality after his resurrection, and lives forever to make intercession for us. Lastly, Christ is styled the Prince of the kings of the earth, which phrase shows both his influence upon them, (as giving laws and rules unto them) and their dependance upon him, who do receive their power and government, their protection and dominion, all from his hand.

—Unto him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood.

6 And hath made us kings and priests unto God and his Father; to him be glory and dominion for ever and ever. Amen.

In the former verse our Saviour was considered in the excellency of his person, and with respect to what he is in himself; in this verse he is considered in the execution of his office, or with respect to what he is unto his church. And here observe, 1. His affection in general towards us, he hath loved us; our blessed Redeemer has given us full and ample demonstration of his great and wonderful love unto his church and people, and none doth so properly and passionately love the church as Christ himself; before conversion he loves his people with a love of commiseration and compassion; after conversion, he loves them with a love of complacency and delight. Observe, 2. The discovery and manifestation which Christ has made of this his love particularly towards us, "he hath washed us from our sins in his own blood;" that is, he hath given himself a sacrifice for our sins, and by the merit of his blood freed us from the guilt of sin in our justification, and also by the efficacy of that blood cleanseth us from the filth of sin in our sanctification; the blood of Christ has both a pacifying and purifying influence; it pacifies God's wrath, and purges the sinner's conscience; the blood of Christ merited the Spirit of God for our sanctification, and so reconciled us to God, as well as obtained pardon for us, in a way of meritorious satisfaction, and so reconciled God to us; "he washed us from our sins in his own blood." Where note, a great emphasis in the double word of propriety. 1. Our sins, that is, every one of our own sins, without any limitation or exception whatsoever, as to the number or heinous nature of them; the sin against the Holy Ghost is indeed excepted; but this proceeds from the incapacity of the sinner, not from the inefficacy or insufficiency of Christ's sacrifice for sin. 2. There is also an emphasis in the word of propriety with respect to Christ, when it is called his own blood: the Levitical priests sprinkled the people with blood, but it was not their own blood, but the blood of bulls and goats; but Christ spared not his own blood, and he did not barely sprinkle us with it, but washed us in it: it was not the blood of his finger, but the blood of his heart, his very life went with it; "he washed us from our sins in his own blood." Observe, 3. The consequent effect, and happy result of all this love of Christ towards us, and undertaking for us, "he hath made us kings and priests unto God." 1. Kings, not in a temporal but in a spiritual sense; they reign as kings over their unruly lusts and corruptions, over satan, over the world, over death the king of terrors, they begin their reign upon earth, without which it were impossible to perfect and complete it in heaven. 2. Priests, consecrating themselves a living sacrifice holy and acceptable unto God, and offering up, not expiatory, but gratulatory sacrifices unto him, namely, prayer and praise, supplication and thanksgiving. 1 Pet. ii. 5. "Ye are an holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God, by Jesus Christ." Observe, 4. After this description of Christ, follows an ascription of all that glory and honor, dominion and power, which is his due, and our duty to ascribe unto him; To him be glory and dominion, for ever and ever. Amen. Where note, That the same honor and glory, dominion and power, being here attributed and given to Christ, which Christ teaches us to ascribe and render unto God, Matth. vi. it is a sure testimony that Christ is God, and as such to be acknowledged and adored by us: To him be glory, &c.

7 Behold, he cometh with clouds; and every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him; and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him: Even so, Amen.

These words are a majestic description of our Saviour's coming to judgment; they are ushered in with a note of attention and admiration, Behold! which denotes also the truth and certainty of his appearance, and upbraids us likewise for our natural backwardness to believe, mind, and meditate upon the coming of Christ; we are so much guided and governed by sense; what we see nothing of, we believe little of; therefore St. John here begins with a note of incitement, in the word Behold! It follows, "he cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see him, and they which pierced him." This was fulfilled, 1. When Christ came by the Roman armies to destroy Jerusalem, by taking vengeance on his murderers, when his crucifiers might discern that those heavy and direful judgments were inflicted on them for their crucifying Christ, and persecuting Christians. But, 2. It will be more eminently and universally fulfilled at the general day of judgment, when Christ will come riding upon the clouds, as in a triumphant chariot, and all human eyes shall then see him, his persecutors and despisers particularly, beholding him, but not all alike; such as pierced him, but repented, whose hearts were afterward pierced for their piercing of him, these at that day shall see Christ with astonishing joy, though they put him to bitter sorrow; the death of Christ has procured mercy for those whose cruelty did procure his death; but as for such as pierced him, but never repented, both such as pierced him in his person or in his members, they shall also see him to their sorrow, and shall wail, or take on heavily, because of him; that is, because they must be judged by him. Lord! how will the sight of a pierced Saviour then pierce their souls with sorrow, with vexation of heart, and anguish of spirit? To behold Christ with an eye of sense then, will be very grievous to them that do not behold him with an eye of faith now; see him they shall, they must; but alas, they had rather be covered with mountains, and hills falling upon them, than thus behold him! Observe farther, How St. John closes this description of Christ's second coming, with a pathetic option in his own and the church's behalf, in the last words of the verse, Even so, Amen; intimating that the saints, or church of God, do expect and believe that assuredly it will be so, and do also earnestly desire and pray that it may be so. Learn hence, That Christ will undoubtedly come to put an end to the sufferings of his afflicted church, and to punish his and their persecutors; with whose coming the saints are well pleased, and do earnestly desire and long for it; behold he cometh—Even so, Amen. Come, Lord Jesus.

8 I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the ending, saith the Lord, which is, and which was, and which is to come, the Almighty.

Observe here, 1. That what was applied to God the Father, at the fourth verse, namely, that he was, is, and is to come, is here by Christ applied to himself at the eighth verse; "I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the ending, which is, and which was, and which is to come." Alpha is the first, Omega the last letter of the Greek alphabet, and as such they inclose all the rest, Christ calling himself the first and the last, that is, the first cause and the last end, (as nothing began before him, so nothing can out-last him) he does hereby discover his divinity to us, that he is co-essential and co-substantial with the Father, the same attributes being given to both; understand we then that this text plainly speaks the Godhead of Christ, against the Socinians, Christ calling himself the first and the last, takes to himself absolute perfection and power, sovereignty and dignity, and eternity and divinity: he is the first because he was before all beginning, and because from him all things had their beginning; he is also the last, because he shall continue for ever; without end, because he is the end of all things, and because when we have attained him, we are at the highest and last of our attainments; we rest, and have no more to seek when we have found Christ: for he brings us to the Father, in whom we have eternal rest through himself the Son; and the last title Christ assumes to himself, namely, the Almighty, bespeaks his divinity; he is God Almighty, able to accomplish his promises to his people, and to execute his threatenings on his enemies: and if the adversaries of our Saviour's Godhead, in the glass of this text, do not see his divinity, it is not because they cannot, but they will not see. "I am," says Christ, "Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the ending, which is, which was, and is to come, the Almighty."

9 I John, who also am your brother, and companion in tribulation, and in the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ, was in the isle that is called Patmos, for the word of God, and for the testimony of Jesus Christ.

10 I was in the Spirit on the Lord's day; and heard behind me a great voice, as of a trumpet, 11 Saying, I am Alpha and Omega, the first and the last: And, What thou seest, write in a book, and send it unto the seven churches which are in Asia; unto Ephesus, and unto Smyrna, and unto Pergamos, and unto Thyatira, and unto Sardis, and unto Philadelphia, and unto Laodicea.

The preface being ended in the foregoing verses, here begins the body or visionary part of this book; the first vision is here before us, concerning the seven Asian churches,

In which vision we have observable, 1. The person that received it, he is described by his name John. I John; by his spiritual relation, I John your Brother; by his then present condition, your companion in tribulation; undergoing like sufferings with you; your companion in the kingdom of Christ; that is, in expecting of, and hoping for the same kingdom of heaven and glory which ye expect; and I am also your companion in patience, called the patience of Jesus Christ, because in his word he requires it, because by his Spirit he produces it, because in his own example he gave us a pattern of it; and perhaps principally, because the present state of the kingdom of Christ in this world calls for it. Observe, 2. The place where St. John received this vision, in the isle of Patmos, not far from the Asian churches, into which the emperor Domitian banished him. (Having, as is said, cast him first into a caldron of burning oil, out of which he miraculously escaped.) Ecclesiastical history says, St. John was very near an hundred years old, when he was, by that bloody emperor, banished into Patmos, for preaching the word of God, and for bearing testimony to this truth, that Jesus Christ was the Saviour of the world. That the greatest honor which an apostle, an aged apostle, a beloved apostle, can be admitted to the participation of, is to suffer banishment and death for bearing a faithful testimony to Jesus Christ. Observe, 3. The time when St. John had this glorious vision of Christ, communion with him; and communications from him; it was upon the Lord's day; I was in the spirit, that is, in spiritual meditation, in a spiritual ecstasy, in a transporting rapture by the Spirit, under his more immediate illumination and powerful influence; on the Lord's day; namely, the first day of the week, so called, because Christ at his resurrection took possession of it for his own, and because the end of its institution was to commemorate Christ's resurrection, and because applied to his special worship and service, and as such religiously observed by the apostles, Acts ix. 7, and by the universal church, ever since the apostles' days. In that St. John, in a solitary island, kept the christian Sabbath, we learn, that the religious observation of the Lord's day is a duty incumbent upon all persons, and in all places. Learn, 2. How Christ owned his own day, and encouraged St. John in his religious and strict observation of it, by the influences of his Holy Spirit upon him, and by communicating extraordinary revelations to him: "I was in the spirit on the Lord's day, and heard behind me a great voice." Observe, 4. The vision and revelation itself, which began with his hearing a loud voice like a trumpet! that is, the voice of Christ, full of majesty and power, spake unto him, saying, What thou seest, that is, what thou shalt see and hear, write in a book, and send it to the seven churches. Here note, 1. That the book of the Revelation was written by Christ's own direction, therefore warranted to be of divine authority. Note, 2. That what Christ commanded St. John carefully to write; it becomes us heedfully to read; for though what St. John wrote and sent concerned the seven Asian churches at that time, and had a particular respect to their present state; yet all scripture is written for our learning, and we are to beg spiritual wisdom from God to make a right use and holy improvement of what is written.

12 And I turned to see the voice that spake with me. And, being turned, I saw seven golden candlesticks:

13 And in the midst of the seven candlesticks, one like unto the Son of man, clothed with a garment down to the foot, and girt about the paps with a golden girdle.

14 His head and his hairs were white like wool, as white as snow; and his eyes were as a flame of fire;

15 And his feet like unto fine brass, as if they burned in a furnace; and his voice as the sound of many waters.

16 And he had in his right hand seven stars: and out of his mouth went a sharp two-edged sword; and his countenance was as the sun shineth in his strength.

As if St. John had said, "I turned to see the person whose voice I heard speaking with me, and I beheld seven golden candlesticks, representing the seven Asian churches, and in the midst of those candlesticks I saw one in the shape of a man, which reminded me of Christ the Son of man, clothed in garments much like unto Aaron's the high priest, who was an illustrious type of Christ our great and merciful High Priest, who made an atonement for us on earth, and maketh now intercession for us in the highest heavens." Note here, 1. The comparison made between the churches of Christ and the golden candlesticks; they are called candlesticks in regard of the light which they hold forth; the candlestick doth not give light of itself, but holds it forth to others; it is the church's duty to keep within herself the pure word of God, and to keep herself pure from being besmeared with errors in doctrine, or vice in conversation. Churches, the holiest and purest of churches, are rather candlesticks than candles; Christ is the light, the word is the lamp, the church but the instrument to convey the light unto us. Again, the churches are golden candlesticks: Gold is the most precious of metals, the church is the most excellent of all societies; for it beautifies all societies whatsoever, that are members of the church of Christ. Note, 2. How Christ was seen by St. John walking in the midst of the golden candlesticks, present in and with his churches; that is, St. John had in his vision, a very lively representation of Christ in his human nature; not that St. John now saw Christ in his manhood really, for that was then in heaven, but he had a resemblance of it in the vision. Note, 3. The description given of Christ, as walking in the midst of the gospel church. He is, 1. described by his attire, habited like Aaron the high priest, with a garment down to his feet, and girt with a golden girdle, to signify, that as Aaron was of the Old, so Christ is the high priest of the New Testament, presenting continually to his Father the memorials of his death, the merits of his sacrifice, and making intercession with the Father for our gracious acceptance with him. 2. He is next described by the parts and members of the body. His head and hair as white as snow and wool, signify his eternity and his purity, that he is the Ancient of days, even the Father of eternity, and perfectly innocent, pure, and holy; His eyes like flaming fire, denoting his piercing knowledge; that as head of his church he espies out all her ways, words, and thoughts: "His feet like burning brass, and his voice like many waters;" which expressions represent the dread and terror of Christ towards the enemies of his church; and that vengeance he would execute upon his murderers, in particular, at the destruction of Jerusalem; and upon all the impenitent rejecters of his gospel grace, at the general judgment: then will they understand what they now will not believe, that it is a "fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God." 3 He is next described by what he had in his right hand, namely, seven stars, representing the seven angels, bishops, and ministers of the seven churches. These are called stars, their office and duty being to enlighten the church, both by the light of life and doctrine; and as stars are seated above, so should their conversation be in heaven, and their afflictions not set upon the things below. Stars give direction, light, and influence to others; they were not made for themselves. Ministers must not chiefly seek their own, but others good. Stars are swift in their motion, and their motion is constantly in their own orb and sphere. Vain is the pretence of care and concern for other churches, whilst we neglect our own. Finally, ministers are stars, as in respect of their situation, and in respect of their constant and regular motion; so in respect of their continuance and duration. Stars are fixed in heaven, so are ministers in the church; Christ holds them in his hand, otherwise the world would soon have them under their feet. 4. He is described by a sharp two edged sword coming out of his mouth, denoting the piercing power of the word of God to conquer sin, convert sinners, and to condemn and slay the unconverted. Lastly, it is added, That "his countenance was as the sun that shineth in his strength;" that is, very glorious in itself, and very comforting and refreshing to those that are his members, his sincere disciples and followers. This part of the description of Christ sweetly follows the former: when his feet were as burning brass, to tread down and consume his enemies; his countenance was as the sun, to cheer and cherish, to comfort and refresh his friends.

17 And, when I saw him, I fell at his feet as dead. And he laid his right hand upon me, saying unto me, Fear not: I am the first and the last:

18 I am he that liveth, and was dead: and, behold, I am alive for evermore, Amen; and have the keys of hell and of death.

Observe here, 1. The effect which this glorious representation of Christ in this vision had upon St. John, he was astonished and amazed at it; and fell down at Christ's feet as one almost dead. Note from hence, That the holiest man on earth is not able to bear the presence of Christ here, nor able to stand before his gracious manifestation of himself, when he comes to reveal himself in mercy towards him. See Hab. iii. 15, 16. Lord, how unable then will the wicked be at the great day to stand before the manifestation of thy fury! if at this visionary representation of Christ, St. John trembled, and fell at his feet as dead, how unable will the impenitent world be to look him in the face at the great day, when he shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angel, rendering vengeance to them that know not God? Observe, 2. The reasonable care of Christ for St. John's relief in this great exigency: "He laid his right hand upon me, saying, Fear not." Hereby Christ discovered both his readiness to help and his ability to help: the right hand is the supporting hand, the strengthening hand; Christ did not send an angel to comfort St. John, but laid his own hand upon him, to assure him both of safety and succour. Observe, 3. As what Christ did, so what he likewise said, for St. John's comfort and support under the burden of his fears; "Fear not, (says Christ,) for I am the first and the last; that is, I am an eternal being, without either beginning or end." Again, "I am he that liveth, and was dead." As if Christ had said, "Fear not death or dying, for I have overcome death by dying, conquered the king of terrors in his own territories; but behold, 'I am now alive for evermore,' for the benefit of my church, and to protect and defend my faithful servants." Nay, farther, to show that his life was not a bare subsistence, but clothed with power, Christ adds, "I have also the keys of hell and of death;" that is, a sovereign power over the whole invisible world, to let into heaven, and to lock into hell, as I please. The keys are an emblem of authority and power; the steward who has the keys of the house, commands the house. There are four keys which Christ keeps in his own hands: the key of the womb, the key of the clouds, the key of the earth, as of the granary of corn, and the key of the grave. When Christ says here, "I have the keys of hell, and of death," the meaning is, that he has a sovereign dominion over both worlds; over this in which we live, and over that into which we die, whether the one or the other part of it, heaven and hell both; for the words must not be understood with a debasing limitation, only respecting hell, as if Christ had only the keys of the bottomless pit: but the original word Hades signifies the invisible world, consisting of both heaven and hell; and he has a power over both, and also over death too, which is the common passage into both places. Learn hence, 1. If Christ has the power of death, and keep the key of the grave in his own hand, that men do not die at random, by accident and chance, but by determination and judgment: Christ by an authoritative act turns the key, and gives man his exit out of the world. Learn, 2. That Christ, who has the key of death, has also the key of Hades; the upper and lower Hades, heaven and hell; and such as go out of the world, go not out of being, but go into one of those two states and places. Learn, 3. How admirable, and yet how amiable, Christ should be in all our eyes, who hath these keys in his own hand, with such merciful intentions towards us; and how willingly should we die, when the keys of death are in so great, so kind a hand as his! O how happy is it when this power of our great Redeemer over death and the grave, and a placid resignation to his pleasure, do concur and meet together, not from stupidity, but trust in him that keeps the keys! Lord, when the key is turning, and thou art letting in souls into the invisible world, let thy servant depart in peace, and everlastingly see thy salvation.

19 Write the things which thou hast seen, and the things which are, and the things which shall be hereafter;

20 The mystery of the seven stars which thou sawest in my right hand, and the seven golden candlesticks. The seven stars are the angels of the seven churches: And the seven candlesticks, which thou sawest, are the seven churches.

This chapter concludes with a solemn charge given by our Saviour to St. John, to write and record the vision of the seven stars, and seven golden candlesticks, which he had newly seen; letting him into the mystery of both, by telling him, that the seven stars are seven angels; that is, signify seven angels, and the seven candlesticks are, that is, signify seven churches, and represent them. In like manner, when Christ says in the sacrament, This is my body; the meaning is, this bread signifies and represents my body. Here note, That the bishops and governors, the pastors and teachers of the church, are called angels, because they are sent by God on his message, because they had the commission from him; and to signify that unspotted purity which should be found with them, both in life and doctrine: and they are represented by stars, to denote their dignity and duty, their usefulness and beneficialness, the swiftness and constancy of their motion, but especially in regard to their nature. A star is of the same nature with the heavens, celestial: not earthly, not elementary; ministers should be heavenly, holy, blameless, inoffensive; they should teach by tongue and hand, and instruct by lip and life. God grant, that in our hearts we may experimentally find the works of holiness, and in our lives express the power of holiness. Amen.

CHAPTER II.

This book of the Revelation being full of prophetic visions, St. John in the former chapter had a vision of our blessed Saviour, as appearing in priestly garments, chap. 1. 13. Wearing a garment down to his feet, in allusion to the priestly ephod, and the curious girdle under the lace. From whence we may comfortably collect, that Christ now in glory remains still his church's priest. And pursuant to that his priestly office he discovered then in heaven his great care for his church's good here on earth, by commanding St. John to write epistles to the seven Asian churches, commending, reproofing, directing, warning, threatening, and comforting them suitably to their respective conditions, and as their present case required. Quest. But seeing there were so many famous churches then in the world, as Rome, Corinth, Galatia, and others, why must St. John pass by them, and only write to those of Asia? Ans. Possibly because Patmos, where St. John was now in banishment, was nearer to these churches, and possibly because these churches were under his more immediate care and charge. For although the apostolical authority were universal over all the churches, yet the apostles did every one by mutual consent, assume such a part of the world as their most especial charge; and accordingly Asia the Less, with her churches, did fall under St. John's care, who therefore, at the command of Christ, writes, and sends the following epistles to them contained in this and the next chapter; in which he thus bespeaks them:

UNTO the angel of the church of Ephesus write, These things saith he that holdeth the seven stars in his right hand, who walketh in the midst of the seven golden candlesticks;

Note here, 1. That the church of Ephesus, with the other six churches of Asia, were, at the time of St. John's writing, very flourishing churches, favored as much with the special presence and influence of Christ, as ever any churches were. Note, 2. That these churches are written to as a sort of types of all the Gentile churches unto the end of the world, and patterns also which the Gentile churches were to take warning by, Christ hereby declaring what all other churches, offending and declining in the same manner, might expect. Note, 3. That the first church St. John is commanded to write unto, is the church of Ephesus, and what is written is directed to the angel, the bishop, the president and chief minister in that church, to be communicated to all in the church, both ministers and people, as that which nearly concerned them all. Note, 4. That Christ, in the beginning of every epistle, doth notify himself by some one of those characters which he gave of himself in the former chapter, either as "the faithful and true witness, or, as the First: and the Last, or as having the seven stars in his hand." Thus here, "These things saith he that holdeth the seven stars in his right hand." Mark, He holdeth the stars in his hand, to show his tenderness; in his right hand, to show his power, supporting and directing them for the good of his people. It is added, that Christ "walks in the midst of the seven golden candlesticks." Which expression denotes Christ's gracious presence with them, his strict observation of them, his tender care over them, his protecting and defending of them, in doing their duty to him, his encouraging or reproofing, his rewarding or punishing, as there should be cause: "These things saith he that holdeth the seven stars in his right hand, and walketh in the midst of the seven golden candlesticks." Learn hence, 1. That the ministers of Christ are stars, yet but stars, they shine but with a borrowed light, with a light derived from the sun; they shine, but for a time, the day fastens when these stars shall disappear for ever. Learn, 2. These stars are in the right hand of Christ, in his power, and at his disposal; he appoints them their orbs, where they shall shine, and appoints them also their time for shining. Learn, 3. That the church is a candlestick, a golden candlestick. As a candlestick has no more light than what is put into it, and must be continually maintained by a new supply of oil, such is the state of the church; and as a candlestick is a moveable thing, remove the candlestick, and the light is removed with it; so when God removes the light of the gospel from a people, he unchurches them. Farther, The church is called a golden candlestick, because as gold is the purest of metals, and excels all other metals in preciousness; so God expects his church should differ as much from the world, as gold doth from common clay. Learn, 4. That there is a special gracious presence of Christ with his church in all her administrations; "He walks in the midst of the seven golden candlesticks." It denotes his presence with them, and this presence of his is an holy presence, and a joyful presence.

2 I know thy works, and thy labor, and thy patience, and how thou canst not bear them which are evil: and thou hast tried them which say they are apostles, and are not, and hast found them liars:

3 And hast borne, and hast patience, and for my name's sake hast labored, and hast not fainted.

4 Nevertheless I have somewhat against thee, because thou hast left thy first love.

Observe here, 1. A general declaration which stands in the front of the several epistles, I know thy works, both thy inward and outward works, to observe and mark them, to punish or reward them, as the case requires. This proves the divinity of Christ, that he is truly and essentially God; he knows the hearts of men, which none but a God can know. Ver. 23. "All the churches shall know that I am he which searcheth the reins and the heart." Observe, 2. The commendation which is here given of this church for her labors, in propagating the gospel, for her patience in bearing affliction and persecution for it, for the strictness of her discipline, that she did not bear with, nor tolerate and endure such persons as were either erroneous in judgment, or scandalous in practice; for her faithfulness in trying the authority of those who pretended to an immediate call from God to be apostles, but were found liars and false apostles; such were those two seducing heretics Ebion and Cerinthus, and their followers. Mark here, How our Lord Jesus Christ doth observe and approve, doth commend and praise, whatever is good in his church, and whatever is commendable and praiseworthy in the members of it; yet at the same time, when he commends them for what is good, he reproves them for what is evil and amiss; and accordingly, observe, 3. The reprehension given, ver. 4. "Nevertheless, I have somewhat against thee, because thou hast left thy first love." As if Christ had said, "I observe amongst you a great abatement of your former zeal and fervor; you have not that hearty love to me, and to one another, which you had at first, but verily you grow colder when you should grow better." Learn hence, 1. That where there is truth of grace there may yet be a sad decay and declining in grace. 2. That Christ takes notice of, and is displeased with, such decays and declining in grace, and severely checks and reproves his people for them: "I have somewhat against thee, because thou hast left thy first love."

5 Remember, therefore, from whence thou art fallen, and repent, and do the first works: or else I will come unto thee quickly, and will remove thy candlestick out of his place, except thou repent.

We had Christ's commendation and reprehension of the church of Ephesus before, we have his admonition and exhortation now. The words before us, are partly monitor-and partly minatory; minatory in the former part of the verse, "Remember from whence thou art fallen and repent." Note here, That Christ did not surprisingly come upon this church at unawares; they were admonished before chastised, warned before laid waste; Christ doth premonish before he punishes. In the minatory part we have a great guilt and sin supposed, a great judgment for that guilt denounced, the unchurching of them that had committed it, and the means prescribed for the averting of that judgment; to wit, repentance. Learn hence, 1. That a people professing religion and godness may fall. 2. That fallen professors should and ought to remember from whence they are fallen. 3. That falling professors should be repenting professors, and do their first works. 4. That without repentance and reformation, God will certainly remove a people's candlestick, take away the gospel from them, as the severest judgment which he can inflict upon them; "Remember, repent, and do thy first works, else I will remove thy candlestick out of its place;" that is, such a tempest of persecution shall arise, as will shake your tottering candlestick out of its place. The universal church only has a promise of stability; any particular church may be unchurched finally.

6 But this thou hast, that thou hatest the deeds of the Nicolaitans, which I also hate.

As if Christ had said, "Though thou art not what thou shouldest be, yet this thou hast commendable in thee, that thou hatest the deeds of the Nicolaitans, (who held community of wives, and eat things offered to idols) which impure sect I also hate for their licentious doctrine, and lewd practices, which tend to the ruin and base of human societies." Note here, 1. That it is not unlawful to call heretics by the name of their leaders; Nicolaitans are here, so called from one Nicholas, supposed to be the deacon mentioned Acts vi. who having a beautiful wife, exposed her as common to avoid the imputation of jealousy. Note, 2. That Christ hated all licentious doctrines, and loose practices, and so should we.

7 He that hath an ear, let him hear what the spirit saith unto the churches;—

That is, "Let all that hear or read these words unto the churches, which the Holy Spirit has uttered, consider them, set their hearts to regard them as matters of great importance, and which nearly concern them." Observe, That this form of speech, He that hath an ear to hear, let him hear, Christ often used at the end of his parables, when he would stir up the people, to more than ordinary attention; and he uses it here in this, and the next chapter, at the end of every one of these epistles to the several churches.

—To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life; which is in the midst of the paradise of God.

As if Christ had said, "Let all such as fall away from their holy profession for fear of persecution, consider what they lose, even eternal life, which I will only give to such as persevere; for to him that overcometh trials and temptations, will I give a share of my merits, and thereby a title to eternal happiness, signified by the tree of life in paradise."

Note here, 1. It is not said, to him that striveth or resisteth, will I give the crown of life, but to him that overcometh. Lazy wishes are so far from saving men, that endeavouring, yea, striving against temptation, without conquering and overcoming, will not save. It is not enough that we resist, but we must conquer; not sufficient that we strive, but we must overcome; To him that overcometh, &c. Note, 2. From the promise that Christ makes of eternal life, I will give, a clear argument for Christ's being God, essentially God; how is it else that he assumes to himself a power of disposing eternal life; I will give to eat of the tree of life.

8 And unto the angel of the church in Smyrna, write; These things saith the first and the last, which was dead, and is alive;

9 I know thy works, and tribulation, and poverty, (but thou art rich) and I know the blasphemy of them which say they are Jews and are not, but are the synagogue of Satan.

10 Fear none of those things which thou shalt suffer: Behold, the devil shall cast some of you into prison, that ye may be tried: and ye shall have tribulation ten days: be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life.

11 He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches; He that overcometh shall not be hurt of the second death.

Here we have the second epistle which St. John wrote by the command of Christ to the church of Smyrna, a famous city in one of the provinces in Asia where Polycarp was bishop, and suffered martyrdom. Now, in this epistle we have these particulars considered. 1. The description which Christ is pleased here to give of himself, namely, the first and the last, which was dead and is alive, and the suitableness of this description, for the consolation of this church; which was now under great tribulation. It is as if Christ had said, "I am an eternal being, the first cause and last end; I was myself put to death, but I am alive again; therefore fear neither sufferings nor death, for I will assist and strengthen you, and if you lose your lives for my sake I will raise your bodies again to everlasting life." Observe, 2. The commendation given by Christ of his church at Smyrna, it is large and full; nay, Christ blameth nothing in this church; she kept her purity best, because always in affliction; not but there were failings undoubtedly in this church: but almighty God mercifully overlooked them. As in the case of Job, no mention is made of his impatience, though he showed much, but we are called upon to behold him as a pattern of patience. Observe next, The particulars of this church's commendation. I know, says Christ, that is, I approve, commend, and praise, thy works, and thy tribulation, and poverty; that is, thy labor and sufferings, and worldly poverty, which thy profession of the gospel hath brought upon thee: but though thou art outwardly poor, yet art thou inwardly rich; rich in grace, rich in faith and patience, rich in meekness and humility; rich in courage and christian fortitude. And farther, I know also the blasphemy of them that say they are Jews, and are not; that is, I know the malicious reproaches and evil speeches of your enemies; cast upon you, partly by native Jews, who glory in circumcision and the law; and partly by false christians, professing faith in Christ, but not daring to own him, for fear of persecution. These belong to satan's synagogue, not to Christ's church. None are so bad as they who only profess and seem to be good. Observe farther, The encouragement which Christ gives this church to persevere in the faith, though they should suffer much sharper things than ever they yet suffered; fear none of the things you may be called forth to suffer; what though the devil by his instruments casts some of you into prison, and you suffer for a short time, be faithful unto your profession until the day of your death, and I shall reward you with a crown of life. Note here, 1. That satan by his instruments has been the cause of all those bitter and bloody persecutions which christianity in all ages hath undergone. Note, 2. That though satan's malice be infinite, yet his power is limited and bounded; he cannot do all the mischief he would, and he shall not do all he can: satan shall cast you into prison, but not into hell; and not all of you into prison neither but some only. Note, 3. How mercifully almighty God overrules the devil's rage and malice, making it subservient to his own glory, and the church's good, causing that which satan intended for destruction, to serve only for probation and trial. The devil's design by all those floods of wrath, which he pours out against the church, is, that she may be destroyed: but God's intent is only that she may be tried; even as the wise refiner, when he casts his gold into the furnace, designs the purifying of the metal, and only the consuming of the dross. Note, 4. That the sufferings of good men for the cause of christianity, though they may be sharp, yet shall they be but short; Ye shall have tribulation ten days; that is, for a short space of time. Note, 5. That a persevering faithfulness in the service of Christ in this life, is indispensably necessary to our obtaining the crown of life and immortality in the world to come: "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life." Observe, lastly, The conclusion of this epistle to the church of Smyrna: this is partly hortatory: "He that hath ears to hear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches." The warnings of the Holy Spirit to the churches are recorded as of great concernment for all to mind; and partly promissory, He that overcometh; that is, conquereth the love of this world, and the love of life, when God calls him forth to suffer, he shall not be hurt of the second death; that is, he shall escape eternal misery, that living death, and that dying life, which will be the assured lot and portion of the wicked and ungodly world.

12 And to the angel of the church in Pergamos, write: These things saith he which hath the sharp sword with two edges;

13 I know thy works, and where thou dwellest, even where satan's seat is: and thou holdest fast my name, and hast not denied my faith, even in those days wherein Antipas was my faithful martyr, who was slain among you, where satan dwelleth.

14 But I have a few things against thee, because thou hast there them that hold the doctrine of Balaam, who taught Balac to cast a stumbling-block before the children of Israel, to eat things sacrificed unto idols, and to commit fornication.

15 So hast thou also them that hold the doctrine of the Nicolaitans which thing I hate.

16 Repent; or else I will come unto thee quickly, and will fight against them with the sword of my mouth.

17 He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches: To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the hidden manna, and will give him a white stone, and in the stone a new name written, which no man knoweth saving he that receiveth it.

In these verses is contained the third epistle, which St. John by direction had wrote and sent to the church at Pergamos, in which (as in the former) we have, 1. A description of Christ, as having a sharp two-edged sword in his mouth, denoting the word of God, and that piercing power which accompanies it to conquer the lusts and corruptions of men. As also, 2. A commendation of what was good and excelling in that church, I know thy works; that is, with a knowledge of intelligence and observation, as also with a knowledge of approbation and acceptance. I know thee to be good in bad places, and in the worst of times, though thou dwellest where satan's seat is; that is, where satan bears sway by idolatry and persecution, yet dost thou hold fast my name; that is, the doctrine of the gospel preached in my name, and by which I am made known to the world as a man is by his name; and hast not denied my faith, but openly professed it in a time of persecution, even then when blood and slaughter attended the professors and profession of it, namely, when Antipas was slain, (who probably was a bishop, or some minister in Pergamos of extraordinary piety; for upon such the storm of persecution generally falls) who died a faithful witness to the truth of my gospel; even then and there. I say, hadst thou the courage to profess my name, and bear witness to the truth. Mark here, what an honorable mention Christ makes of the services and sufferings of his people; nothing we either do or suffer for Christ, but it is recorded, and shall be remembered to our commendation and honor in this life, and to our consolation and happiness in the next. Yet note, farther,

The holy impartiality of our blessed Lord; at the same time, when he commends this church for what was commendable and praiseworthy, he reproves her for what was faulty or blameworthy: verse 14. "But I have a few things against thee, because thou hast them that hold the doctrine of Balaam, and the Nicolaitans;" that is, the doctrine of the impure Gnostics, who teach men now to eat things offered to idols, and to commit fornication, even as Balaam of old, directed Balac to ensnare the Israelites, by committing fornication with the Moabitish women, and to eat of what they sacrificed unto idols then. Here observe, That it was not the being of those heretics and heresies among them that Christ blames them for, but the tolerating of these in their communion, who made light both of adultery and idolatry. They ought to have executed church-discipline upon them, and denounced the church-censures against them, as had been done by the church of Ephesus before them, that Christ might have said of them as he did of those, verse 6. "Thou hatest the deeds of the Nicolaitans which I also hate." Observe next, The counsel which Christ gives this church, Repent; that is, be humbled for this thy connivance at, and tolerating of this wicked sect, and damnable doctrine, and amend, or verily I will come quickly upon thee and them, in a way of judgment, and fight against them with a two-edged sword; that is, with my holy word convince, wound, and condemn them, &c. The want of zeal and severity against sin, and incorrigible sinners, is very displeasing to Christ, and provokes him to anger greatly. Observe, lastly, The conclusion and close of this epistolary letter, which is partly exhortatory, He that hath ears let him hear, and with his mind ponder and consider what the Spirit saith, by way of counsel and caution, unto the churches; and partly consolatory, To him that overcometh will I give, &c. Mark, He doth not say, to every one that fighteth: no, nor to every one that conquereth in one, two, or more particular acts of resistance; but to him that persevering conquers, and finally overcomes both tempter and temptations, both persecutors and persecutions, both false teachers and false doctrines; to them will I give the hidden manna, laid up, not in the earthly tabernacle, but the heavenly sanctuary; by which understand Christ himself, and the joys and consolations of the Holy Spirit, which are hidden from the world, and the peculiar portion of such as sincerely believe in him, and cheerfully suffer for him. It is added, "I will give him a white stone, and on the stone a new name;" that is, absolution and pardon of sin, together with the privilege of adoption; it being a custom anciently to give a white stone in token of absolution, and a black stone as a sign of condemnation, on which stones were written the names of the innocent and guilty; accordingly this new name signifies God's pardoned and adopted ones; the sweetness and comfort of which privilege no man knows, but he that is possessed of it: the happiness of God's sons both here and hereafter cannot be expressed; only they that are so, know what it is to be so; and whereas Christ says, I will give the hidden manna, I will give the white stone, and the new name, to them that overcome, surely it affords a good argument to evince and prove his divinity: who but a God can pardon sin, and sanctify and save sinners?

18 And unto the angel of the church in Thyatira, write, These things saith the Son of God, who hath his eyes like unto a flame of fire, and his feet are like fine brass;

19 I know thy works, and charity, and service, and faith, and thy patience, and thy works; and the last to be more than the first.

20 Notwithstanding I have a few things against thee, because thou sufferest that woman Jezebel, which calleth herself a prophetess, to teach and to seduce my servants to commit fornication, and to eat things sacrificed unto idols.

21 And I gave her space to repent of her fornication; and she repented not.

22 Behold, I will cast her into a bed, and them that commit adultery with her into great tribulation, except they repent of their deeds.

23 And I will kill her children with death; and all the churches shall know that I am he which searcheth the reins and hearts: and I will give unto every one of you according to your works.

The next epistle is directed by Christ and written by St. John, to the church at Thyatira; in which epistle observe, 1. The name given to Christ: he is styled the Son of God; that is, by eternal generation, being the only-begotten of the Father, as well as begotten of the Father only; and partaker of the Father's essence, as well as of his likeness; he is here called the Son of God, as being a distinct person from the Father; yet is he the first and the last, which denotes his eternity; and who is, and who was, and is to come, the Almighty, which are essential attributes of the Godhead. Observe, 2. The description here given of Christ, his eyes like flaming fire, and his feet like burning brass; denoting thereby his piercing and discerning sight to see and observe his enemies, his fiery indignation, and his fierce wrath, ready to take hold of them, and his irresistible power and strength to vanquish and tread them under his feet. Observe, 3. The great and special commendation which Christ gives to this church: greatly she is commended for her charity to Christians in distress; for her service in ministering to them, and in comforting of them; for her faith and constant adherence to the profession of Christianity, and for her patience under persecutions for the gospel's sake; but her special and peculiar commendation was this that her last works were more than her first; that is, her last works were better, did exceed and excel the first: Ephesus was best at first, and worst at last; but Thyatira's last works were best. It is a blessed thing when Christians grow in goodness, increase in faith and holiness, when their last days are their best days, their last works, and their last fruit, their best, their fairest fruit. Observe, 4. The reprehension follows the commendation; as good as Thyatira was, she needed to be better. She was remiss and negligent in her duty of re-proving, censoring, excommunicating vile seducers, the Gnostic and Nicolaitans, the disciples of Simon Magus, and his lewd Helena, as some think compared to Jezebel, because she enticed Ahab to worship Baal, as this woman (whosoever she was) calling herself a prophetess, and teaching the lawfulness of fornication, and eating things offered to idols. Some observe, That there was scarce any heresy broached, but it had some woman or other for the propagator and promoter of it, who took upon them the name of prophetesses. Simon Magus had his Helena; Montanus had his Priscilla and Maximilla; Carpocrates his Macellina. Concerning this person it is affirmed, that God gave her space to repent, but she repented not. Learn hence, That great is the sin, folly, and danger of deferring and putting off the duty of repentance, when God gives us time and space sufficient to perform it. 1. Great is the sin, because it is a mocking of God's patience, and undervaluing of his service, a contempt of his authority, a presuming on his goodness, a defiance of his displeasure. 2. Great is the folly, as well as the sin of it, because we put it off to the most improper and unfitting season, and because we hereby make the work more hard and difficult, in what season soever we set about it; and the longer we delay our repentance, the more work shall we make for repentance. 3. As great is the danger is either the sin or folly, because it puts a person upon a mighty hazard, it runs a desperate venture, not knowing whether he shall live an hour longer; and because we forfeit by our delays that special grace, without the assistance whereof we can never repent. Observe, 4. How severely God threatens Jezebel here, and in her all sinners, to whom he gives space for repentance, but it is not improved for that end; I will cast her into a bed of tribulation and torment, instead of her bed of lust and uncleanness, unless she repent. Behold here how great and immeasurable the patience of God is towards the greatest, the vilest, and the worst of sinners, they have space for repentance, they have invitations to repent, they have judgments threatening to prevent their final impenitence; but if they prove incorrigible and un-reclaimable, nothing is to be expected but approaching ruin; I will kill her children with death; that is, such as are seduced by her shall suffer with her, if judgments threatened be not by repentance prevented. Observe, lastly, The end and design of Christ in bringing upon vile sinners these exemplary punishments, namely, to declare his omniscience, power and justice. All the churches shall know that I am he that searcheth the reins and hearts; that is, all the churches in and about Thyatira, says Christ, shall know, that I not only observe outward acts, but take notice of the secret counsels, motions, and designs of men's hearts, and will judge every man according to his works: a full and clear text to prove the divinity of Christ: he that searcheth men's hearts, and renders to all men according to their works, is God: but Christ doth both, and therefore is essentially and truly God.

24 But unto you I say, and unto the rest in Thyatira, (as many as have not this doctrine, and which have not known the depths of satan, as they speak; I will put upon you none other burden:

25 But that which ye have already, hold fast till I come.

26 And he that overcometh, and keepeth my works unto the end, to him will I give power over the nations:

27 (And he shall rule them with a rod of iron; as the vessels of a potter shall they be broken to shivers:) even as I received of my Father.

28 And I will give him the morning-star.

29 He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches.

Here Christ returns in his counsel and charge given to the church at Thyatira: unto you I say: that is, to you the angel, the governors and pastors, and to all the members of the church; I say unto you all who have not owned nor entertained these doctrines of the Gnostics, who proudly call their filthy opinions profound mysteries and depths of knowledge, though they are indeed the depths of satan, his policies and devices; as if Christ had said, "These vile seducers call their opinions depths, and so they are, but depths of satan; that is, such depths as satan has brought out of hell; they are the whisperings and hissings of the old serpent, not the inspirations of the holy God; to you I say, that I will not impose or put upon you any new doctrine, but charge you to hold fast the old, that apostolic doctrine, which you have received; persevere therein till I come to relieve you, and to release you from your persecutions, which will soon be at an end: hold fast till I come." Observe farther, How our Saviour concludes this epistle to the church of Thyatira, as he did the former, with a consolatory promise to such as overcome temptations, persecutions, all, and all manner of opposition in their christian conversation, and faithfully persevere in well-doing to the end; to him, says Christ, will I give power over the nations; that is, power with me, and in subordination to me, to judge the world, wicked angels, and wicked men, at the great day; then shall you rule them with a "rod of iron, and dash them to shivers like a potter's vessel, even as I received of my Father;" As if Christ had said, "I have received power, as Mediator, from my Father, effectually to subdue and conquer all mine and your enemies, and I will make you partakers of it in some measure, you shall exercise an irresistible power over them, by consenting to, by approving and applauding of that righteous judgment, which I shall denounce against them, and execute and inflict upon them. Learn, That believers shall sit as assessors with Christ in judgment, and approve the equity of his proceedings, against the finally impenitent then, though never so near and dear unto them now. Observe, lastly, The full and final reward which Christ promises to him that finally per-severeth and manfully overcometh, I will give him the morning star: that is, myself and Spirit to comfort him, and the light of glory to shine upon him to all eternity. Note, Christ is called a Star, because he enlightens all with the light of natural knowledge, and his church with divine illumination; and the Morning-star, peradventure with respect to his incarnation, because as that rises not at the beginning of the night, or at the middle of it, but towards morning; so Christ came not in the beginning or middle of the dark time under the law, but in the last age of the world, in which he has shined forth to the joy and comfort of all nations.

CHAPTER III.

AND unto the angel of the church in Sardis, write, These things saith he that had the seven Spirits of God, and the seven stars; I know thy works, that thou hast a name that thou livest, and art dead.

2 Be watchful, and strengthen the things which remain, that are ready to die: for I have not found thy works perfect before God.

3 Remember, therefore, how thou hast received and heard, and hold fast, and repent. If, therefore, thou shalt not watch, I will come on thee as a thief, and thou shalt not know what hour I will come upon thee.

This chapter begins with the fifth epistle, which Christ wrote and directed to the church of Sardis. In which observe, 1. The glorious description given of our Lord Jesus Christ, namely, that he has the seven Spirits of God and the seven stars: that is, according to some, he hath the holy Spirit of God proceeding from him as from the Father; and because he had power to send the Holy Ghost, together with the Father, he is therefore said to have the seven Spirits of God; so the Holy Ghost is called, because of the perfection and variety of his gifts and graces, influences and operations. Others by the seven Spirits understand created angels; and the seven spirits being joined with seven stars, intimate, according to these, that Christ is the Lord of angels and ministers, he upholds his ministers, and has angels always at hand to defend his members: Observe, 2. This church's partial opinion of herself; in her own and others esteem, she was alive: thou hast a repute for an excellent church, thy profession causes many to think and speak well of thee; thou hast a name that thou livest. Observe, 3. Christ's impartial judgment concerning her, as one that knew her better than either others did, or herself could know her; thou sayest thou art thus and thus, alive and lively, but alas! thou art no better than dead, thou art dead or dying, thyself and others are deceived concerning thee. Learn hence, 1. That it is possible for a professing people to be alive in their own and others esteem, and yet to be dead or dying in God's account; at the same time that they make a splendid and glorious profession of religion, they may be under the veign and power of hypocrisy. Learn hence, 2. That no religious pretences, no fair shows can possibly hide a person's or a people's hypocrisy from God's eyes; thou sayest that thou art thus, but I know thee better than others do, or thou canst know thyself; thou hast a name to live, but thou art dead. Observe, 4. The counsel given by Christ to this languid and languishing church, 1. To be watchful; to shake off her drowsiness and formality; no reformation can be expected, if due consideration, watchfulness, and care, be not exorcised. 2. To strengthen the things that are ready to die; that is, blow up every spark of grace which lodges under the ashes of much corruption, and keeps it from going quite out. Spirituals are to be succoured and strengthened, if once they grow languishing and dying, lest they grow quite dead. 3. To remember what they had received and heard from Christ's apostles and ministers, to hold fast, the truths received, and to repent of what is evil, and to reform what has been done amiss: intimating, that it is the duty of christians to remember those truths which they have heard and received: and also to hold fast what they have heard and received; and that renewed repentance is the duty of christians as well as initial repentance. Observe, 5. The complaint which Christ brings in against this church of Sardis, I have not found thy works perfect before God; not full, says the original; that is, not filled up with that sincerity and zeal which God requires: a man may be full of good works, and yet his works not be full; a man may be full of prayer, pray much, pray often, and yet his prayer not full, but vain and empty; sincerity is the fulness or filling up of all duties; it is not common frailty, but the want of sincerity and soundness, zeal, and seriousness, which Christ complains of. Observe, 6. The danger threatened to security and slothfulness; If thou shalt not watch, I will come upon thee as a thief; that is, "I will surprise thee with my judgments in the midst of thy security, as a thief does persons when they are asleep, and least expect him; the expression plainly intimates, both the suddenness of the judgment, and the severity of the judgment threatened.

4 Thou hast a few names even in Sardis which have not defiled their garments; and they shall walk with me in white; for they are worthy.

Note here, That though the greater part in Sardis were dead or dying, that is, declining and decaying, yet here were some that kept their innocency, and preserved themselves from error and false worship, from erroneous principles and debauched practices. Note farther, That these few which keep themselves pure above the rest, are not commanded to separate from the rest. Doctrines crying up purity to the prejudices of unity, reject; for the gospel calls for unity as well as purity. Note also, The reward promised to such as kept themselves in Sardis pure both from error and vice; they shall walk with Christ in white, like persons of dignity and honor, like kings and conquerors, who of old wore white garments; they shall have the reward of their innocency and uprightness, for they are worthy of it, according to the law of grace, which promiseth it to them; they have walked worthily, with a worthiness of meetness, not with a worthiness of merit; they are therefore meet receivers, though not meritorious purchasers of this reward.

5 He that overcometh, the same shall be clothed in white raiment; and I will not blot out his name out of the book of life, I will confess his name before my Father, and before his angels.

Observe, Christ doth not say, he that conqureth, but he that vanquisheth; not he that conquereth once or twice, in spiritual combat, but he that overcomes at last the temptations and persecutions from without, the lusts and corruptions from within, he shall be clothed with white raiment; that is, with robes of glory, as the reward of his innocency and virtue, and as a mark of dignity and honor; and farther, I will not blot his name out of the book of life; that is, they shall be enrolled in it, and certainly saved, and I will present them to my Father yea, I will publicly own them, and confess them before God, angels, and men. Lord! what an honor is this, to know thy people by name, and to call them by name before thy throne, and there publicly to acknowledge them, and proclaim the good done by them! Oh let it be our care to get first the white garment of grace on earth, and then we shall not miss of the white robes of glory in heaven.

6 He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches.

These words are the same exhortatory conclusion which we find added by Christ to all the foregoing epistles; and plainly signify thus much, that all persons should look upon themselves as concerned in these several messages which the Spirit of Christ sends unto the churches; hence it is so oft repeated both in the former chapter and in this chapter, because it is of such universal use, and so nearly concerns us all.

7 And to the angel of the church in Philadelphia, write, These things saith he that is holy; he that is true; he that hath the key of David; he that openeth, and no man shutteth; and shutteth, and no man openeth:

8 I know thy works: behold, I have set before thee an open door, and no man can shut it: for thou hast a little strength, and hast kept my word, and hast not denied my name.

9 Behold, I will make them of the synagogue of satan, which say they are Jews, and are not, but do lie: behold, I will make them to come and worship before thy feet, and to know that I have loved thee.

Here we have the sixth epistle indited by Christ, written and sent by St. John to the church of Philadelphia, which name signifies brotherly love, and we may reasonably suppose that grace of love, unity and concord, was eminently found with and amongst the members of this church, and had a mighty influence upon them in the practice of universal godliness, in as much as we find not this church blamed by Christ for any thing; nor that she was wholly faultless, and altogether unblameable, but being free from those gross miscarriages which were in other christians, and abounding with love to Christ, and one towards another. Christ graciously passes by and overlooks her failings and infirmities, and only proclaims her virtues and good works. Sincerity and love, though they do not blind Christ's eye, that he cannot see sin in his people, yet it causes him to look upon their failings with a pitiful and compassionate eye. Thus Philadelphia is said to be a mean city, not far from Sardis, yet here Christ had a very eminent church, not faulted for any thing; it is not the grandeur, but graciousness of a people, that renders the place renowned: in this epistle to the Philadelphians, we have these particulars observable, 1. A lusty description of Christ, by whose authority it was written, he is holy and true, holy in himself essentially, holy with respect to us communicatively, the author, approver, and dispenser of all holiness, and true, that is, a lover and approver of truth. This title assures the church of the truth of all his predictions, promises, and threatenings; these two titles, Holy, and true, are generally ascribed to God in the Old Testament; these Christ, in the New Testament, often attributes to himself, which he had never done, had he not been truly and really God. The other part of the description of Christ follows, that hath the key of David; that is, of the church, of which David was a type; by the key power is denoted: Christ, as Mediator, has an absolute power over the church, being Lord and head of it, and has committed a ministerial power of the keys to the governors and pastors of it, and having this key of the church in his own hand, by virtue of it "he opens and none can shut; and shutteth and none can open;" that is, he can open, when he will, the door of success to his faithful ministers, by opening the hearts of his people through the power of converting grace, and no man can shut that door, which Christ will thus open; and again, when he shuts the finally impenitent out of the church and out of heaven, no man can open and bring them in against his will; "he openeth and can shut, he shutteth and none can open." Observe, 2. The special favor which Christ indulged to this church, namely, the favor of success in her gospel-administrations; "Behold, I have set before thee an open door." Under the metaphor of an open door, the success and progress of the gospel in the preaching and dispensation of it, is shadowed forth; it is a special favor from God when he opens a door of advantages to us to do good, the least good, either by convincing and converting sinners, or by edifying, strengthening and comforting saints, and when God is pleased to open such a door, none shall shut it. Observe, 3. The commendation given by Christ, of this church, thou hast a little strength; a little spiritual and inward strength, and but a few external and outward helps and advantages, yet hast thou kept my word, my doctrine of faith, and my precepts for holy walking; these hast thou kept pure, and hast not denied my name, but adhered constantly to the profession of me and my gospel, notwithstanding all the temptations thou hast met with, by sufferings and reproaches. Note here, How Christ took notice of that little measure of strength which this church had, and accepted it; weak grace, if sincere, shall always find acceptance with Christ; thou hast a little strength, and hast kept my word. Observe, 4. The gracious promises made by Christ unto this church, that her enemies should submit themselves unto her, and worship before her feet; behold, says Christ, I will make them of the synagogue of satan, which falsely call themselves Jews; I will make them, namely, by the power of my grace, to come and worship before thy feet; they shall reverence thee, and pay a civil respect to thee, and shall know that I have loved thee. Learn hence, That the submission, which the enemies of the church shall be forced to make unto her, by the power of Christ, is great and wonderful.

10 Because thou hast kept the word of my patience, I also will keep thee from the hour of temptation, which shall come upon all the world, to try them that dwell upon the earth.

11 Behold, I come quickly: Hold that fast which thou hast, that no man take thy crown.

12 Him that overcometh, will I make a pillar in the temple of my God. And he shall go no more out: and I will write upon him the name of my God, and the name of the city of my God, which is New Jerusalem, which cometh down out of heaven from my God; and I will write upon him my new name.

13 He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches.

Still our blessed Saviour proceeds with promises and encouragements to this church, because thou hast kept the word of my patience. Here note, That the doctrine of the gospel is called the word of Christ's patience, partly because it teaches patience in persecuting times, and partly because it is a doctrine, which cannot firmly be adhered to without patience, thou hast kept the word of my patience. To keep this word of Christ's patience, implies not only the keeping his doctrine pure and uncorrupted from error, but also the observing and practising all the duties of a good life. And note, The reward promised to this church for the performing of this duty, because thou hast kept—I will keep thee; Christ will not be behind-hand in rewarding our obedience, no, not in this life, I will (here) "keep thee from the hour of temptation, which shall come upon all the world." Here note, 1. That a time of affliction, much more of persecution in a time of temptation, because an afflicted and persecuted state hath many circumstances attending it, by which all are tried, and some ensnared. Note, 2 That a time of trial and temptation will come, most certainly come, sooner or later, upon all persons that dwell upon the earth, upon sinners as well as saints, upon hypocrites as well as sincere christians; which trials will infallibly discover the faith and constancy of the one, the corruption and apostasy of the other; "because thou hast kept the word of my patience, I will also keep thee from the hour of temptation."

11 Behold, I come quickly: Hold that fast which thou hast, that no man take thy crown.

Observe here, Notwithstanding this church's constancy, yet Christ exhorts her to steadfastness, hold fast; the steadiest and most steadfast christians have need to be often cautioned and counselled against backsliding. Observe also, The encouragements which Christ gives his church to hold fast her innocency, fidelity, and patience; the first is drawn from the shortness of her sufferings, by reason of Christ's sudden coming, behold, I come quickly; that is, to deliver my faithful people, and to destroy their enemies; the second is drawn from the hazard which they run of losing the crown, for want of an unfainting perseverance, hold fast that no man take thy crown. Where note, That only the persevering christian shall be crowned, and that each persevering christian shall have his own crown; there are probably differences of reward in heaven, as well as degrees of misery in hell; for quality the glory will be the same, they shall shine as the sun, for degree it will likely be differing as much as one star differs from another in glory; let no man take thy crown.

12 Him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God, &c.

In this verse Christ promises a threefold reward to them that finally overcome all the temptations and trials of this life. 1. They shall be pillars in God's temple, that is, honorable and glorious members of the triumphant glorified church, and shall have a fixed happiness therein; possibly the Holy Ghost here alludes to the pillars in Solomon's temple, which were very beautiful. 2. They shall go no more out; the pillars in Solomon's porch were removed and carried away by the Chaldeans, but these pillars shall be perpetual, their glorious state shall be a fixed unchangeable state; when all the pillars of the earth shall tremble, these pillars in the temple of heaven shall remain immovable to eternal ages. 3. As in pillars erected by men, their names were written and engraved, in like manner does Christ here promise the inscription of a threefold name upon these pillars, the name of God, the name of the city of God, and his new name. The name of God signifies the person to be an adopted child of God; the name of the city of God, declares such a person to be a citizen of the New Jerusalem, which is said to come down out of heaven, that is, the knowledge of it comes down to us from God, otherwise we had never known it, nor could ever have conceived it; and Christ's new name, is that of the glorious Redeemer, and signifies him that overcometh shall be honored as one of Christ's redeemed ones; the whole name put together, to wit, the name of God, the name of the city of God, and the new name, signifies an adopted son of God, and heir of the New Jerusalem, and a living member of Christ the glorified Redeemer; thus shall it be done to them whom Christ delighteth to honor in the New Jerusalem, above shall they spend an eternity in the rapturous and ravishing admiration of that love which Father, Son, and Holy Spirit bestowed upon them, in making them first the adopted, and now the glorified sons of God.

13 He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches.

This is again the close and conclusion of this as it was before of all the epistles, in which Christ calls upon all persons to hear and consider what he saith by his Spirit to his church, and to lay it deeply to heart for their instruction and admonition. The counsel which is given by Christ to one particular church, he requires and expects should be applied to all, and improved by all.

14 And unto the angel of the church of the Laodiceans, write, These things saith the Amen, the faithful and true witness, the beginning of the creation of God:

15 I know thy works, that thou art neither cold nor hot: I would thou wert cold or hot.

16 So then, because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot: I will spue thee out of my mouth.

This epistle to the Laodiceans is the seventh and last epistle which Christ commanded St. John at this time to write; most of the churches were found faulty before, but none like this here. Formality and hypocrisy, coldness and indifference, in religion, had so far prevailed in this church, that we find nothing commended in them, nothing of good spoken of them, and none of them exempted from the general charge brought in against them for that lukewarmness and hypocrisy. In this epistle now before us, Observe, 1. A description of Christ in his deservedly glorious titles, thus saith the Amen, the faithful and true witness, that is, he that is verity and truth itself, both in his promises and in his threatenings, who is holy, and cannot lie; righteous and cannot deceive; wise, and can never be deceived; therefore Christ takes upon him this name here of the faithful and true witness, to awaken these drowsy hypocrites, to see and consider that he knows their state and condition, and will testify and witness against them. There is no such effectual remedy against hypocrisy, lukewarmness, and indifference, in the matters of religion, as a firm belief of Christ's omniscieny and veracity. The other title given to Christ, is the beginning of the creation of God; that is, the beginner of the creation of God, the original and first cause, by which all the creatures of God had their beginning. Christ is not only principium principiatum, but principium principians; not the passive beginning, or he that first created, but the active beginning, or he by whom the creation was begun, both the old and new creation. Now, Christ takes upon him this title to encourage the Laodiceans to come unto him (according to the invitation given, verse 18.) to recover them from their formality, seeing he is omnipotent, and can give a being and beginning to grace in the new creation, as he did to nature in the old and first creation. Observe, 2. The reproof here given to this church of Laodicea, I know thou art neither hot nor cold, thou art not for open heresy or infidelity, but likest well a profession of christianity; you receive the gospel and so are not quite cold, but you want zeal to suffer any thing for it, and so are not at all hot; I see nothing in thee but a lukewarm indifferency, for which I disown thee, nay, disdain thee. Learn hence, 1. That Christ loaths lukewarm persons, who profess christianity with reserves for worldly safety. These Laodiceans were neither enemies to Christ, nor true friends, but served God and gain, Christ and the world by turns as occasion served. Learn, 2. That though God abominates lukewarmness and want of zeal, yet he will not disown those who have any spark of true zeal, though defective, and culpably remiss, he will not quench smouldering flax, but blow it up into a holy flame; but all that have not so much zeal as to prefer Christ before the world, shall be accounted his enemies, and disowned by him.

17 Because thou sayest, I am rich, and increased with goods, and have need of nothing: and knowest not that thou art wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked.

18 I counsel thee to buy of me gold tried in the fire, that thou mayest be rich; and white raiment that thou mayest be clothed, and that the shame of thy nakedness do not appear; and anoint thine eyes with eye-salve, that thou mayest see.

Observe here, 1. This church's partial opinion of herself, her vanity and vain-glorious ostentation, accompanied with self-esteem, she said she had need of nothing. Observe, 2. That this boasting and vain-glorious ostentation did very probably spring from, and was occasioned by, this church's worldly prosperity; thou sayest, I am rich and increased in goods. We are apt to mistake the warm sun for God's blessing, and to apprehend when we are great, that we are gracious; and because rich in goods, conclude ourselves rich in grace: but alas! God lifts up the light of his common providence upon thousands whom he does not lift up the light of his reconciled countenance upon. Observe, 3. Christ's impartial judgment concerning this church of Laodicea. Thou sayest thou art rich, and needest nothing, but I say, thou art wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked. Behold here, how some have little or no grace who yet conceit they have much grace; as some reckon their temporal, so there are others that value their spiritual estate, at many thousands beyond what it really is, and when upon a just balance of account, they are worth nothing. Ah miserable souls! empty and guilty, poor and penniless in spirituals, wanting every thing, but especially a sight and sense of their poverty and wants. Observe, 4. The counsel given by Christ to this church, very suitable to her condition; what pinches more than poverty? Here is gold to enrich us. What shames us more than nakedness? Here is a promise of raiment to clothe and cover us. What afflicts and grieves us more than blindness? Here is eye-salve to anoint us. But observe the order of the words, 1. Christ says not, I command thee, but I counsel thee. O infinite condescension! the Lord Jesus does not always command like a king, but sometimes counsels like a friend; he counsels us by his spirit, he counsels us by his ministers, he counsels us by our own consciences. 3. Christ's counsel is to buy; that is, earnestly to desire, and sincerely to endeavour, the procuring such spiritual blessings as we want; we buy with our prayers, our tears, our endeavours. 3. The blessings offered, tried gold, that will bear the touchstone, that faith and holiness which will give thee boldness in judgment. White raiment, or the merits of the Mediator, which covers our shame and nakedness out of the sight of God. And eye-salve, or the grace of spiritual illumination, whereby we see the want and worth of these spiritual blessings.

19 As many as I love, I rebuke and chasten: be zealous, therefore, and repent.

Here Christ lets the Laodiceans understand, that although he had been sharp with them, in reproving them for their formality and lukewarmness, yet it was upon a merciful design towards them; it proceeded from a principle of love in him, for as many as I love, says Christ, I rebuke and chasten. Christ does not therefore hate his children because he corrects them, but he therefore corrects them because he loves them. Nay the favorite whom God loved too well to strike; nay, commonly there go the severest exercises, where there has been the greatest love. Let not then God's chastenings of us abate our love to him; necessity compels God to correct; nothing is done by rods but what could not be effected without them: Be zealous, therefore, and repent; as if Christ had said, O Laodicea, lay aside thy lukewarm indifferency, and be fervent in my service; repent and amend your ways, if you would escape your chastenings and rebukes, for I had much rather give you the kisses of my lips than the blows of my hand; if then you love not correction, prevent it by zeal and reformation.

20 Behold I stand at the door and knock. If any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me.

These words are very expressive of the tender love and gracious condescension of Christ towards poor sinners, full of heavenly rhetoric, to win and gain their hearts unto himself. Here observe, That man's heart is Christ's door, that this door of the heart is naturally shut, yea, locked and barred against Christ by ignorance and infidelity; that notwithstanding this, Christ knocks graciously at the door of men's hearts by his word, by his rod, by his Spirit; knocking is a vehement motion, a reiterated motion, we knocked again and again; a gradual motion, first more gently, then loudly; and it is a finite motion, men will not always continue knocking, but if none answer, they turn their backs and go their way. All the knocks of Christ will cease and end, his spirit will not always strive. Farther observe, Christ does not only knock, but stands knocking, it denotes the assiduity of Christ in waiting upon sinners, and his patience in knocking; standing is a waiting posture, it denotes an earnest desire and patient expectation. Observe, Though Christ knocks at the door of men's heart, he doth not break it open, he doth not offer violence to men's wills, and save them against their wills, but the Holy Spirit inclines them to hear Christ's voice, and enables them to open the door to him, causing them to approve of and consent to the offer and call of Christ. Observe, That the door is no sooner open, but Christ comes in and sups with the sinner; his coming in denotes our union to him; his supping, our communion with him, imperfect on earth; complete in heaven: there is a mutual, sweet, and intimate communion between Christ and believers here on earth; there will be a perfect, complete, and uninterrupted communion with him in heaven, when they shall ever be with the Lord.

21 To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne.

Here our Saviour concludes this epistle, as he did the former, with a promise to the persevering christian, to him that overcometh, namely, all the trials and temptations of this life, and keeps his faith, love, and obedience entire to the end, I will grant, not in a way of merit, but of free gift and grace, to sit down with me in my throne, namely, to partake of the same power and glory, and kingdom, that I as Mediator do now partake of. Where observe, Christ here distinguishes between his own throne and his Father's; the former seems to be his mediatorial, the latter his essential, throne; and he plainly tells us, that as he obtained his glory by overcoming satan and the world, so must we, to him that overcometh will I grant—even as I also overcame; the way to heaven for Christ and all his members is the same; as he conquered and finally overcame on earth before he was crowned in heaven, so must they.

22 He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches.

Thus Christ shuts up this, as he did all the preceding epistles before, with a repeated exhortation to all christians to the end of the world, to hear, read, attend unto, and observe all the cautions and warnings, all the reproofs and counsels, all the promises and threatenings, contained in this and the other epistles, as matters that do greatly concern all christians to understand and know, Let him that hath an ear hear.

CHAPTER IV.

In the foregoing chapters we had St. John's first vision from Christ, relating to the state and condition of the seven churches of Asia; in this he has a farther vision of the glorious and incomprehensible majesty of God in heaven, wherein were represented to his intellectual eye and sight

God's celestial throne, his sitting upon his throne, his heavenly attendants, his presence, his displayed glory, and unspeakable praises, as in the sequel of this chapter is declared.

AFTER this I looked, and behold, a door was opened in heaven: and the first voice which I heard was as it were of a trumpet talking with me; which said, Come up hither, and I will show thee things which must be hereafter.

As if St. John had said, After my first vision was over, being desirous farther to understand and know the mind of God, I looked upwards to heaven, from whence divine revelations come, and it was represented to me as if a door were opened to the third heavens: and I apprehended that I heard that former voice, which spake to me in the first chapter, now speaking to me again, namely, the voice of Christ, sounding like a trumpet in my ear, and saying, Come up hither, and I will show thee, or give thee a clear representation of, things that shall be hereafter. Where note, 1. That such a soul as has tasted the sweetness of communion with Christ, does long for the farther and fuller enjoyment of him. After this I looked: it was a gracious vision he had of Christ in the first chapter, but it did only whet his desires after more communion with him, and clearer manifestations from him. Note, 2. That the knowledge which advances and improves a man's understanding on earth, comes all from heaven: thither we must look up, and from thence, if we will know the things of God; I looked, and behold a door was opened in heaven.

2 And immediately I was in the spirit: and behold a throne was set in heaven, and one sat on the throne.

3 And he that sat was to look upon like a jasper, and a sardine stone: and there was a rainbow round about the throne, in sight like unto an emerald.

I was in the spirit; that is, in an ecstasy, in a trance, in a rapture of delight and joy, ravished in spirit. This vision was represented to his mind more lively than any corporeal objects could be to his outward senses, which were now all bound up. Observe here, 1. The vision itself, a throne set in heaven; St. John's mind was not taken up with earthly matters: worldly crowns and sceptres were now poor things in his esteem, and will be so in the estimation of all others, who have a prospect of a throne in heaven, as our apostle had. Observe, 2. The person whom he saw sitting upon his throne, God the Father, in royal Majesty, whose power and glory was represented by the similitude of precious stones, particularly by the jasper and sardine stone; which stone, say some, being of a red and fiery color, represented how terrible God is in judgment, clothed with omnipotent power and inflexible justice; but to allay the terror of this vision, St. John saw a rainbow round about the throne, in sight like unto an emerald: this was very comforting, for the rainbow was of old a token of God's covenant, Gen. ix. that he would never more drown the world by water; here it denotes the covenant of grace, whereby the church is secured from the deluge of God's wrath by the blood of a Mediator; and mark, this rainbow was round about the throne; let God look which way he will, here is that which reminds him of his covenant and promise; and the color of this rainbow was like an emerald; that is, of a most pleasant and delightful greenness; signifying, that Almighty God, in mindfulness of his covenant, takes unspeakable delight, and pleasure in the exercise of mercy towards his children, even then when it appears clothed with terror, to judge and sentence an impenitent world. Blessed be God, that he that sitteth upon the throne of judgment has a rainbow about him, giving full assurance that, for his covenant sake, the floods of his wrath shall not overwhelm his children when his enemies are swept away with the deluge of destruction.

4 And round about the throne were four and twenty seats: and upon the seats I saw four and twenty elders sitting clothed in white raiment: and they had on their heads crowns of gold.

St. John having described Almighty God as sitting upon his throne in the former verse, here he declares whom he saw about the throne as assessors with him, namely, Four and twenty elders; by which some understand the patriarchs and apostles, as representatives of the Jewish and Christian church; others understand hereby the whole body of private Christians, a certain number being put for an uncertain, who are represented, 1. As round about the throne, to denote their nearness unto God, and their communion with him. 2. As sitting, to signify their state of rest and ease, and to denote their settled and secure condition of happiness which they now enjoy. 3. As clothed with white raiment, to represent their priestly dignity, that they were all priests unto God: as also their celestial purity and glory. 4. As having on their heads crowns of gold; this kingly dignity, and as kings they do, and shall reign with Christ for ever and ever, who having "loved them, and washed them, from their sins in his own blood, has made them kings and priests unto God." 5. They are called elders, to signify their great wisdom and experience; such as with patriarchs and apostles have done the greatest services for God on earth, shall share with him in the highest dignity and honor in heaven, sitting nearer the throne than others; St. John saw the elders not only near the throne, but sitting round about it.

5 And out of the throne proceeded lightnings, and thunderings, and voices: and there were seven lamps of fire burning before the throne, which are the seven Spirits of God.

By the throne, God is represented as a Judge; by the thunderings, and lightnings, and voices, is represented the terribleness of God in judging sinners. As the law was delivered upon mount Sinai in lightning and thunder, so will there be the same, nay, far greater dread and terror, when God comes to judge and plead with sinners for their wilful and repeated transgressions of that law. By the seven lamps of fire burning before the throne, some understand the holy Spirit of God in its manifold gifts and graces, enlightening, quickening, warming, comforting, the church of God; others understand the holy angels, who are continually waiting upon this Judge, and attending of this judicature, who are as his eyes and feet; that is, his ready instruments to execute his pleasure. God, in the judgment of the great day, will be attended by his saints as assessors, by his angels as assistants.

6 And before the throne there were a sea of glass like unto crystal.—

By this sea of glass there seems to be an allusion to that large vessel of water in the temple, called the brazen sea, in which Aaron and his sons did wash themselves before they administered in holy things; signifying that purity which is required in all the worshippers, but especially in all the ministers of God; and because the use of this sea, in the temple, is made good in Christ, the laver of his blood might be signified by this sea of glass here represented, which is compared to crystal; denoting the spotless innocence of his person and sufferings, and the purity and clearness of his justified members. Others, by this sea of glass, will have the world represented to St. John's visionary view: the world (say they) is compared to a sea for its instability, tempestuousness, and uncertain motion; to a sea of glass, for its slipperiness, and for its brittleness; glass yields no good footing to any that stand upon it, nor does the world to any that stay themselves upon it; and to a sea of glass like crystal, because of the clearness and transparency of it to God; he sees quite through it, all the counsels and actions of men being naked and open before God and the throne. It follows, —And in the midst of the throne, and round about the throne, were four beasts full of eyes before and behind.

7 And the first beast was like a lion and the second beast like a calf, and the third beast had a face as a man, and the fourth beast was like a flying eagle.

8 And the four beasts had each of them six wings about him: and they were full of eyes within: and they rest not day and night, saying, Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty, which was, and is, and is to come.

By the four beasts here, understand the four evangelists in special, and all gospel-ministers in general, who went forth to preach the word in all quarters of the world: and here we have a most stately emblem of the true gospel-ministers, they have the courage of the lion, the strength of the ox, the loftiness of the eagle, the face, that is, the prudence and discretion of a man. Farther, they are described as full of eyes; they have eyes looking before them to God for direction, looking behind them to the flocks they lead, and within them to their own hearts. They have also six wings; with two they cover their faces, manifesting their deep reverence of God; with two they cover their feet, manifesting the humble sense of their infirmities; and with two they fly with cheerful expedition to the service of God. Observe next, What was represented to John, as the perpetual employment and work of heaven; namely, incessantly to admire, love and praise the holiness of God, which is the excellency of all other excellencies. "They rest not day and night, saying, Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty." Learn hence, That the celebrating of the praises of the most high and holy God, is the incessant work of glorified saints and angels in heaven, and a very great part of the work and duty of the faithful ministers of God here on earth. Again, learn, 2. From this example, how much it is the duty of the ministers of Christ, to study and endeavour to make God known in all his glorious attributes, particularly in his holiness and his power; as also in his eternity and simplicity, as he is the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever, without variation, and shadow of changing.

9 And when those beasts give glory, and honor, and thanks to him that sat on the throne, who liveth for ever and ever.

10 The four and twenty elders fall down before him that sat on the throne, and worship him that liveth for ever and ever, and cast their crowns before the throne, saying,

11 Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive glory, and honor, and power; for thou hast created all things, and for thy pleasure they are, and were created.

Observe here, How St. John saw both beasts and elders representing ministers and people, unitedly joining together; and with one consent sounding forth the high praises of their God; intimating, how the whole body of sincere christians ought heartily to join with their faithful ministers in that blessed work of praising and worshipping the eternal God. Observe, 2. That as a farther act of homage and adoration, the four and twenty elders cast their crowns down to the ground: not in a way of contempt and disdain, as if they slighted the glory conferred upon them by God, but in a way of humble gratitude, attributing their victory and reward to God, and not to themselves; and acknowledging that whatever honor they have, they have it from God's hand, and are willing, very willing, and ready to lay it down at God's feet, and to divest themselves of it, that they may put honor upon God; professing hereby, that all the goodness wrought in them, or done by them, does proceed from God's free grace and mercy, and that the glory of it is entirely due to him. Observe, 3. The hymn of thanksgiving itself, which was jointly sung among them, "Worthy art thou, O Lord, to receive glory, and honor, and power." As if they had said, That God thou art, unto whom all the homage and adoration of thy creatures are justly and peculiarly due; for thou hast created all things by thy omnipotent power, and for thy pleasure, and the manifestation of thy glory, they are still preserved as they were at first created. Where remark, That every moment's preservation is virtually a new creation, and that the same omnipotent power is necessary every moment to preserve us, which was at first requisite to create us. Therefore worthy art thou, O Lord, to receive glory, honor, and everlasting praises, as thou art he who givest being to all creatures, and therefore givest it them, that they might love and laud, magnify and bless, glorify and serve, honor and obey thee, their great Creator, and gracious preserver. Amen.

CHAPTER V.

AND I saw in the right hand of him that sat on the throne, a book written within, and on the backside, sealed with seven seals.

In this chapter we have a continuation of the vision recorded in the former chapter: there St. John saw a throne set in heaven, and a person sitting upon that throne in majesty and great glory, representing to him God the Father. Here he beholds the same glorious person sitting upon the throne, with a book in his right hand, written within and on the backside, sealed with seven seals. Observe here, 1. What St. John saw, namely, a book, by which Mr. Mede and others understand a roll, containing God's decrees and counsels, his purposes and resolutions, concerning the future state of the church, as they were to be fulfilled according to prophecy, and brought to pass in several ages, as the providence of God should order and see fit. Observe, 2. The person in whose hand this book of the secret counsels of God was; namely, in God's own hand, and in his right hand, thereby denoting his authority to impart and communicate the knowledge of this sealed book to whom he pleased, and also his power to execute his purposes and counsels when he pleased, and as he pleased. And as none but God himself can declare who God is, so none but God himself can declare what God does, and what in after ages he will do. Observe, 3. The copious fulness of this book, it was written within, and on the backside, inside and outside filled up, so that there was no room left either for addition or alteration. Observe, 4. It was a sealed book, yea, sealed with seven seals, denoting the matters that are therein contained to be most divine and excellent, secret and mysterious, certain and unalterable, and the knowledge of them impossible without the help and favor of special revelation.

2 And I saw a strong angel proclaiming with a loud voice, Who is worthy to open the book, and to loose the seals thereof?

3 And no man in heaven, nor in earth, neither under the earth was able to open the book, neither to look thereon.

4 And I wept much because no man was found worthy to open and to read the book, neither to look thereon.

5 And one of the elders saith unto me, Weep not: Behold, the lion of the tribe of Judah, the root of David, hath prevailed to open the book, and to loose the seals thereof.

Observe, 1. Here is a proclamation made by an extraordinary angel, like an herald or officer, inquiring, who was worthy, either in regard of authority, or in respect of ability to open this book, and unloose the seals; that is, to disclose the secret counsels of God, and to make them known unto the sons of men; implying, that every angel in heaven is not worthy or meet to be the expositor of God's mind and mysteries unto man. Observe, 2. The great silence which there was in heaven upon this proclamation, amounting to an absolute and peremptory denial, that not any one, either in heaven or earth, or under the earth; nor any angel in heaven, nor any saint living upon earth; nor any dead saint, under the earth, nor any devil or infernal spirit was either worthy to open the book, or able to foresee and foretell the least event concerning the church, farther than revealed to them. Learn hence, That neither angels nor devils do understand the mysterious counsels of God, or can reveal future things to man, any farther than as God is pleased to reveal the same unto them. Observe, 3. St John's great and bitter lamentation, because no person was found worthy to open the book, and reveal unto the church the secret counsels of God concerning her; I wept much; fearing no doubt, lest the church of God should be deprived of the benefit and comfort of this revelation. Such as are the true members of the church are greatly afflicted with all the providential dispensations of God which do befall her; but nothing goes so near them, as to have the mind and will of God hidden and concealed from her. Observe, 4. A seasonable consolation given to St. John; one of the elders that were about the throne said to him, weep not, for care is taken for the opening and revealing of the book. Christ, who is called the Lion of the tribe of Judah, the Son of David, as man, and the root of David, as God, is found worthy in regard of the dignity of his person, and the pre-va-lency of his merits, to open unto the church all the mysteries of God, which are meet and convenient for her to understand and know: Quest. Why is Christ called the Lion of the tribe of Judah? Ans. In allusion to Jacob's blessing, Gen. xlix. where Judah is called a lion's whelp, denoting the dignity and superiority of that tribe above the rest. Now, Christ descended of this tribe, and is called a lion, in regard of his kingly power and strength, in regard of his stoutness and courage, in regard of his mildness and clemency, and true nobleness of spirit to them that submit and yield unto him, and in respect of his vigilancy and watchfulness over his church; all which are the known properties of the lion: and as that creature is the king of beasts, so is Christ King of kings, and Lord of lords, the only potentate; dominion and fear are with him. Quest. But how could Christ be called David's root, when we know that David did not spring from him, but he from David, according to the flesh? Ans. In a natural sense, David was the root of Christ, but in a spiritual sense, Christ was the root of David. David, as man, was the root of Christ; Christ, as mediator and God-man, was the root of David. Thus he was both David's Lord, and David's son. Psal. cx. 1.

6 And I beheld, and lo, in the midst of the throne and of the four beasts, and in the midst of the elders stood a lamb as it had been slain, having seven horns and seven eyes, which are the seven spirits of God sent forth into all the earth.

7 And he came and took the book out of the right-hand of him that sat upon the throne.

8 And when he had taken the book, the four beasts, and four and twenty elders fell down before the Lamb, having every one of them harps, and golden vials full of odors, which are the prayers of saints.

9 And they sung a new song, saying, Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof: for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood, out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation:

10 And hast made us unto our God kings and priests: and we shall reign on the earth.

Observe here, 1. That St. John had a vision of Christ in the former verse, under the representation of a lion: here he is represented under the form and figure of a lamb, as wounded, bloody, sacrificed, and slain; as bearing upon him the signs and scars, the marks and tokens of his by-past death; his appearing as a lamb slain, denoted his death; his standing denoted his resurrection. There stood a lamb as it had been slain, it is added—having seven horns, the strength of a beast lying in its horns: this expression of seven horns denotes that omnipotent power which Christ has in himself, and that fulness of power which he does exert, and put forth on all occasions in defence of his church. It follows, and seven eyes which are the seven Spirits of God; these represent the Holy Spirit of God in its manifold graces given by Christ unto the church, as his agent and advocate upon earth; so that here in the text and context are all the three persons in the Holy Trinity, whose divinity we believe, and in whom we trust; God the Father upon the throne, with a book in his hand; Christ the Lamb in the midst of the throne opening the book, and the seven spirits, or Holy Ghost, distinct from the two former. Observe, 2. The office, which Christ, as Mediator, of God-man, performs: he goes to the throne, and takes the book out of the Father's hand; that is, he received power from God to open the book of mysteries, and to execute them: Christ sat upon the throne as God, but went to the throne for the book, as God-man; this power was due unto him as the reward of his sufferings. Observe, 3. The joyful acclamations accompanied with the profoundest adorations, which were deservedly given by the holy inhabitants of heaven to Jesus Christ, as the only person worthy to take the book, and to open the seals; They fell down before the Lamb, saying, Thou art worthy, for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us. Note here, divine worship given to Christ the Lamb, which proves his deity; they sing an hymn of divine praise to the blessed Redeemer, with harps and golden vials in their hands, a new song; that is, a most excellent song, setting forth the benefits, and extolling the praises of the Lord the Redeemer. Observe, 4. The church's celebration of those benefits and blessings, which by the death of Christ she had received, namely, 1. They were redeemed unto God out of every kindred and tongue, people and nation; which shows the universal extent of the gospel church scattered over the face of the whole earth, in and among all the nations of the world. 3. They were by him made kings and priests unto God, to reign on earth; that is, spiritual kings and priests unto God, to reign over sin, satan, and the world, trampling their spiritual enemies under their feet, not expecting an earthly dominion.

11 And I beheld, and I heard the voice of many angels round about the throne, and the beasts, and the elders; and the number of them was ten thousand times ten thousand, and thousands of thousands;

12 Saying with a loud voice, Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honor, and glory, and blessing.

13 And every creature which is in heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them, heard I, saying, Blessing, and honor, and glory, and power, be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever.

14 And the four beasts said, Amen. And the four and twenty elders fell down and worshipped him that liveth for ever and ever.

Observe here, 1. The office of the holy angels in heaven declared, they stand round about the throne of God continually, as nobles and chief ministers of state attend upon a prince, awaiting his pleasure, and expecting his commands. Observe, 2. The numberless number of them,

Thousands of thousands, and ten thousand times ten thousand: and as Almighty God is attended by an innumerable company of angels in heaven, so do the holy angels stand ready to accompany and protect his people here on earth, Psalm xxxiv. 7. They encampround about them. Observe, 3. How readily and cheerfully the holy angels joined with the elders, in blessing and praising Christ for the invaluable fruits and benefits of man's redemption; those beneficent spirits rejoice in our happiness; they joy at the conversion of a sinner, and triumph at the glorification of a saint. Here they are said to sing with a loud voice, to show their affection and zeal in the work of blessing and praising God for Jesus Christ, who is an head of confirmation to them, as he was an head of redemption unto us. Observe, 4. How the angels give the same worship, pay the same homage, ascribe the same honor to Christ, which they do to God the Father; this had never been given, had he not been essentially God: the angels pronounce and proclaim Jesus Christ worthy of omnipotent power; and that honor, glory, and blessing, do appertain to him for evermore. Observe, lastly, That not only all the angels, but all the creatures in heaven, in earth, under the earth, and in the sea, all and every of them, do worship Christ with religious worship, and pay him divine honor; adore him that sits on the throne, and the Lamb for ever and ever, that is, the rational part of the world, to wit, angels, and men, actively: the sensitive part of the world, objectively: the diabolical part, passively: Christ extorts that glory from them by their torments, which they refuse to give unto him by confessions, and voluntary acknowledgments. What greater argument than this can we desire for our satisfaction, that Christ is truly and essentially God? He thinks it no robbery to be equal with God, to share with him in all that honor and homage, in all that adoration and religious worship which the whole creation do pay to Almighty God; for thus do the angels and elders above, and the whole church militant here below, chant forth the praises of the Creator and Redeemer, saying,

*Blessing, and glory, and renown,
We now give altogether,
To him that on the throne sits down,
And to the Lamb for ever.*

Amen, Hallelujah.

CHAPTER VI.

AND I saw when the Lamb opened one of the seals, and I heard, as it were the noise of thunder, one of the four beasts saying, Come, and see.

2 And I saw, and behold a white horse: and he that sat on him had a bow; and a crown was given unto him: and he went forth conquering, and to conquer.

The former chapter acquainted us with Christ's receiving of the sealed book; this, with the opening of it seal by seal. Christ reveals unto St. John the deep counsels of God, which were hidden and secret: the only begotten Son that lay in the bosom of the Father he hath revealed them, he only received authority, and he only was endued with ability to reveal them. Note, 1. The preparation made for St. John's vision of the seals; he standing afar off with profound reverence, heard a voice like thunder proceeding out of the mouth of one of the four beasts, who performed the office of a public crier, saying, Come, and see. It is dangerous searching into God's secrets, and prying into his hidden counsels, till we have a call and commission, a command and invitation, from God himself so to do; thus had St. John here: one said unto him, Come near, and see. Note, 2. The vision itself, I beheld a white horse, and he that sat on him had a bow and a crown, &c. By the white horse is generally understood the gospel, so called in regard of the divinity and spotless purity of its doctrine: the rider upon this horse is Christ, who rode swiftly in the ministry of the apostles and our faithful teachers in the first ages of christianity; and he rode with a bow in his hand, and a crown on his head; with a bow, that is, with threatenings and terrors denounced against his enemies before they were inflicted upon them, as the bow is first held in the hand, then the arrow prepared upon the string, and at last shot forth: and with a crown, denoting that royal state of kingly dignity and honor, to which Christ the Lamb that was slain was now exalted, and thus he rode on conquering and to conquer, till he had consummated his victories in a glorious triumph over his enemies, namely, in the conversion of some, and destruction of others; thus the opening of the first seal gave the church a very encouraging and comfortable prospect of the victories, successes, and triumphs of Christ, notwithstanding the rage, subtlety, and power of all his enemies: Christ rode on with a bow in his hand, and with a crown on his head, conquering and to conquer, till his arrows were sharp in the hearts of his crucifiers; and will thus ride on till the people fall under him, and all his enemies become his footstool.

3 And when he had opened the second seal, I heard the second beast say, Come, and see.

4 And there went out another horse that was red: and power was given to him that sat thereon, to take peace from the earth, and that they should kill one another: and there was given unto him a great sword.

The second seal opened did represent to St. John's visionary view a red horse, of a bloody color, denoting first the dreadful executions of God's wrath upon the Jews, embroiling the land with wars, divisions, bloodshed, unspeakable tumults, killing and ruining one another, to which purpose he apprehended that he saw a sword in his hand that rode upon this horse, signifying the great slaughter which would be committed by the Jews upon one another. Others, secondly, by this red horse, understand the bloody Roman emperors, Nero, Trajan, &c. and the persecution which the primitive church underwent in their days: Eusebius relates, that so fierce was their rage against the poor christians, that a man might see cities full of dead bodies, old and young, men and women cast out naked, without any reverence of persons, or regard to sex. From hence we may learn, What little reason the christian church has to think strange of the fiery trial, as if some strange thing happened to them; when as we see all the rage and cruelty, all the blood and violence, which the christian church has fallen under in the several ages of it, have been from the beginning revealed and prophetically foretold.

5 And when he had opened the third seal, I heard the third beast say, Come, and see. And I beheld, and lo, a black horse: and he that sat on him had a pair of balances in his hand.

6 And I heard a voice in the midst of the four beasts say, A measure of wheat for a penny, and three measures of barley for a penny; and see thou hurt not the oil and the wine.

The third seal opened, sets forth the great calamity which should befall the church by famine, which some understand literally, others figuratively and mystically. 1. A literal famine in Judea, seems here to be prefigured by a person riding on a black horse with a balance to weigh food in his hand; famine discolours the face of men, and makes them look black, sad, and dismal; accordingly it is represented by a black horse; and the rider having a pair of scales in his hand to weigh corn by the pound, and not to measure it by the bushel, imports the great scarcity that there should be of bread; and St. John heard a voice, saying, A measure of wheat for a penny, and three measures of barley for a penny. The Roman penny was the ordinary wages for a day's work to a laborer, so that the quantity of bread was but sufficient to keep persons alive for one day. Famine is a very sore and terrible judgment, it consumes a people by piece-meal; other judgments cut off suddenly, but this is a lingering and a languishing death: Lord! help us in the midst of our fulness, when we eat the fat, and drink the sweet, to remember how righteously thou mayest cut us short of our abused mercies; how is it that we have not long ago sinned away our plenty, who have so often sinned with our plenty? 2. Others understand the famine here represented by the black-horse, to be meant of a spiritual famine, a scarcity of the word of God, which fell out in the time of the ten persecutions, when the storm fell upon the bishops, and most useful ministers in the church, when many bright and burning lamps were extinguished, others hid under a bushel: a dismal gloomy day, when the church of God did eat her spiritual bread by weight, when all the spiritual food men could get to keep their souls alive from day to day could be but sufficient for that end.

7 And when he had opened the fourth seal, I heard the voice of the fourth beast say, Come, and see.

8 And I looked, and behold, a pale horse: and his name that sat on him was Death, and hell followed with him. And power was given unto them over the fourth part of the earth, to kill with sword, and with hunger, and with death, and with the beasts of the earth.

The fourth seal opened presents a pale horse, (pestilence,) with death riding upon it; and hell, that is, the grave following it, denoting, say some, all the calamities of sword, pestilence, and famine, which Christ, (St. Mark xiii.) foretold should come upon the Jews, and cause an universal devastation of their city and nation, and as universal a destruction of their persons. Note here, 1. How death is represented as sitting upon a pale horse; by a horse, for his strength, there is no resisting of him; for his swiftness, it is always posting towards us; for his office and use, which is to cut off and carry away: and by a pale horse for its ghastliness. Death has a grim and ghastly countenance, that strikes terror into all hearts, and paleness into all faces. Note, 2. As terrible as death was, it must and did receive power before it could destroy and kill; "I beheld a pale horse, and he that sat on him was Death, and hell followed with him, and power was given to them." Learn thence, That all the executioners of God's wrath and vengeance, sword, pestilence, and famine, death of all kinds, do act by commission, yea, they all come forth with limited commission; power was given to them; others conceive that by this pale horse the persecution of the primitive church was represented under the Pagan emperors, who made her face look pale like death, by the loss of a vast quantity of blood and spirits, when the church was mowed down like a meadow, and sprang as fast.

9 And when he had opened the fifth seal, I saw under the altar the souls of them that were slain for the word of God, and for the testimony which they held.

10 And they cried with a loud voice, saying, How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth?

11 And white robes were given unto every one of them; and it was said unto them that they should rest yet for a little season, until their fellow-servants also, and their brethren, that should be killed as they were, should be fulfilled.

Here we have the fifth seal opened; under which Christ represents to St. John the condition of those precious souls of the holy martyrs who died for the testimony of Christ, by the bloody hands of tyrants; the design whereof is to support and encourage all that were to come after in the same bloody path. Observe here, 1. The vision which St. John saw, namely, the souls of the martyrs: but how could they be seen? Ans. Not by the external senses, being immaterial substances, but in spirit they were seen by him; he had a spiritual representation of them made to his mind. Observe, 2. The place where he saw them, under the altar; that is, lying at the foot of the altar, as sacrifices slain and presented unto God. Where note, That however men look upon the death of the martyrs, yet in God's account they die as sacrifices; and their blood is no other than a drink-offering poured out to God, which he highly prizeth, and graciously accepteth. Observe, 3. The cause of their sufferings and death described, it was for the word of God, and for the testimony which they held; as one of the martyrs of the Marian days held up his Bible at the stake, saying, "this is that hath brought me hither." They die not as malefactors, but as martyrs, giving a threefold testimony of the truth, a lip testimony, a life testimony, and a death or bloody testimony: they held the profession of their faith faster than they held their own lives. Observe, 4. What St. John heard, a loud cry, saying, How long? Note, 1. That souls can speak audibly to the ears of men; nor, 2. That they have any sense of sufferings when they are in glory, it doth not imply that souls there are in a restless state, or that they want true satisfaction and repose, when they are out of the body; much less, 3. Doth this cry suppose, that they carried with them to heaven any angry resentments, or revengeful dispositions towards their murderers; but this cry supposes in them a vehement zeal for the glory of God, a flagrant desire that God would clear their innocency, and make known his justice among men, that he would abolish the kingdom of satan, and consummate the kingdom of Christ, making all his enemies to become his footstool: so that they pray for what Christ waits in glory, Heb. x. 13; all the revenge here desired was only a vindication of God's holiness and truth, which he himself had promised. Observe, 5. The gracious answer which God gave to the cry of these gracious souls, in which he speaks satisfaction to them these two ways 1. By somewhat given them for the present. 2. By somewhat promised them hereafter; first, white robes were given at present to every one of them, that is, large measures of heavenly glory, as the reward of their sufferings and services, beyond other saints; as if God had said, "Though the time be not yet come to satisfy your desires in the final ruin of satan's kingdom, yet it shall be well with you in the mean time, you shall walk with me in white, and enjoy my glory in heaven." Secondly, That is not all, but the very things they cry for shall be given them after a little season, for God had more to call unto sufferings besides them, and they having conquered shall be crowned together; as if God had said, "You, my faithful witnesses, wait a little while till your brethren be got through the Red Sea of sufferings as well as you, and then you shall see the feet of Christ upon the neck of all his enemies, and justice shall fully avenge the precious innocent blood of all the saints, which in all ages has been shed for the testimony of the gospel, from Abel the martyr to the last sufferer; rest for a little season, until your fellow servants also, and their brethren, shall be killed as you were." Now from the whole learn these lessons of instruction; Learn, 1. That the souls of men perish not with their bodies, but do certainly outlive them, and subsist in a state of separation from them; the bodies of these martyrs were destroyed by divers sorts of torments, but their souls were out of the reach of danger, they were in safety under the altar, and in glory, clothed with their white robes, when their bodies were either turned to ashes, or torn in pieces by wild beasts; we shall not cease to be, when we cease to breathe; our souls do not vanish with our breath. Learn, 2. That as the soul is alive in a state of separation from the body, so is it awake also, and doth not sleep with the body. Mark, These souls cried with a loud voice, then they were not asleep, though their bodies were asleep in the dust; the opinion of the soul's sleeping with the body till the resurrection, is a wicked dream; it is granted that the organical acts of the soul, that is, such acts as do depend upon the members of the body, must cease when the body ceases; but we find, when we are asleep, that our soul can act of itself, without the assistance of the body; the soul grieves and rejoices, hopes and fears, chooses and refuses, therefore the soul is not only alive, but awake also in its state of separation from the body. Learn, 3. That there are not only praises but prayers in heaven, and that for justice to be inflicted upon persecutors here on earth. O the miserable condition of bloody persecutors! when heaven and earth both pray against them. Learn, 4. That there is no sin committed upon earth, which doth more loudly call for vengeance from God in heaven, and which he will more certainly and severely punish than persecuting and wronging of his saints and servants. Learn, 5. That one reason why the suffering servants of God are not presently delivered from their persecutions is this, because more of their brethren must suffer besides them, before their persecutions are ripe and ready for signal vengeance. Learn lastly, That the souls of God's martyrs shall be under the altar in heaven clothed in white, enjoying divine glory, before the fatal day of final vengeance come upon the persecuting world; for though the patience of God suffers long, yet the holiness of God cannot permit that innocency should always suffer, and violence with persecution go unpunished, but in the mean time they shall put on their crown and their robes.

12 And I beheld, when he had opened the sixth seal, and, lo, there was a great earthquake: and the sun became black as sackcloth of hair, and the moon became as blood;

13 And the stars of heaven fell unto the earth, even as a fig-tree casteth her untimely figs, when she is shaken of a mighty wind.

14 And the heaven departed as a scroll when it is rolled together: and every mountain and island were moved out of their places:

A threefold interpretation is given relating to this sixth seal, and the opening of it. 1. Some apply it altogether to the Jews, and that their destruction in Judea and at Jerusalem was so dismal, that it was represented to St. John as the darkening of the sun, and the moon looking like blood, and the stars falling, such calamities impending as if in heaven and earth were dissolving; doubtless at and before the destruction of Jerusalem there was a confluence of such calamities so dismal, and so dreadful, as can very difficultly be represented or described. 2. Others apply it to the overthrow of Paganism, and the destruction of the heathen emperors; the fall of Paganism, by means of Constantine's conversion to the christian faith, was the most terrible judgment that ever fell upon the devil's kingdom; and accordingly by the earth's quaking, the sun's becoming black, the moon's becoming blood, and the stars falling from heaven to earth, is to be understood the great changes that were made in the Roman empire, by overturning the whole Pagan state, and making christianity the religion of the greatest part of the world; so that the sense of the foregoing expressions is metaphorical, and signifies a great and general alteration of the face of affairs, as if the world was to be another thing. But, 3. There are that interpret all this of the great and horrible confusion of the christian world under antichrist, when Christ the Sun of Righteousness began to be obscured, that is, his doctrine concerning his offices and benefits darkened; the moon or church turned into blood, the stars or pastors fallen from heavenly offices, the scriptures like the heavens rolled up, forbidden to be read; the mountains, kings and princes in jeopardy, and the islands brought under antichrist's yoke and tyranny. Lastly, Some apply all this to the last dissolution of the world, and the final judgment at the great day, according to what follows in the three next verses:

15 And the kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men, and every bondman, and every freeman, hid themselves in the dens, and in the rocks of the mountains;

16 And said to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb;

17 For the great day of his wrath is come; and who shall be able to stand?

(Observe here, That if this was meant of the ruin of the Jews at the destruction of Jerusalem, it was exceeding dreadful, and bespake all sorts of men, from the highest to the lowest, to be under a most dreadful consternation, when they saw an inevitable vengeance coming upon them for crucifying Christ, and persecuting his members, which made them run into rocks, and call upon mountains to hide them: if it be applied to the judgment of the great day, it shows the justice of Christ in forcing those to call upon the mountains to hide them, who by persecution had driven his members to hide themselves in mountains, dens and caves of the earth; any sorts of hope of deliverance would be then welcome: but alas! all help will fail, and all hope will be then in vain; neither greatness nor numbers will save any from misery and terror, when that day of vengeance is come. Learn hence, That wicked men, how numerous, how powerful and strong soever, shall fall before the wrath and indignation of Christ; if when Christ appears like an angry lamb, the greatest in the world fall before him, what will they then do when Christ shall put on the fierceness and severity of a roaring lion? Mæstissima sententia quæ a milissimo justice denunciatur. If the wrath of the Lamb cannot be borne; if the unbelieving kings and potentates of the earth shall be cast down at the sight of Christ, where shall the wicked and the sinner appear? If the wrath of a king be as the roaring of a lion, what will the wrath of God, of an angry God be? Let us now be cast down at the sight of sin, and we shall not be cast down hereafter at the sight of God; but when others, at his appearance, cry to the rocks to cover them, and to the mountains to fall upon them, such as have seen sin to their abasement and humiliation, shall see a Saviour to their joyful satisfaction, and spend an eternity in the rapturous contemplation and ravishing fruition of him. Amen.

CHAPTER VII.

The former chapter gave us a general view and description of God's terrible vengeance on his church's enemies, that is, upon the obstinate Jews in Judea, the crucifiers of the Son of God, say some; upon the pagan world, or heathen emperors, say others, under whom the christian church suffered a bitter and bloody persecution for the first three hundred years, namely, till the time of Constantine the Great.

Now, the following chapters give an account of the execution of those denounced temporal judgments upon the Jews according to some, or according to others, they represent the dark kingdom of Antichrist, wherein a great storm of heresy did arise, and a flood of errors and false doctrines did flow down to the corrupting such vast numbers, that the whole world is said to wonder after the beast. Lest then the faithful should faint, as if the apostasy would be universal, and the christian church totally fail, Almighty God declares to St. John his pleasure in this chapter, to seal an hundred forty four thousand, that is, to preserve a very, very great number from the stroke of this judgment, be it temporal or spiritual; if temporal, he would mark them, as he did the Israelites in Egypt, that the destroyer might pass over them; if spiritual, he would preserve a number in his church, which should not apostatize; so that the church should not fail, a number of sealed ones, having the promise of preservation from God.

AND after these things I saw four angels standing on the four corners of the earth, holding the four winds of the earth, that the winds should not blow on the earth, nor on the sea, nor on any tree.

Observe here, 1. That if a temporal judgment on the Jews be here intended, then this vision represented to St. John God's decree and purpose for suspending the dreadful execution of the threatened and intended vengeance upon Judea for a time, namely, till God had sealed his number, that is, marked them for preservation, according to Ezek. ix. 4. Set a mark upon the foreheads of the men, &c. that is, preserve the penitent believers from the common destruction, as the Israelites were preserved in Egypt from the destroying angel. I beheld four angels, that had power to inflict judgments, famine, sword, and pestilence, foretold chap. vi. upon Judea, I beheld these angels making a stay and stop, before they would suffer those mischiefs to break forth upon the earth. Where note, That the office of the holy angels in heaven is at God's command, and by God's direction, to execute vengeance, and to inflict all temporal judgments upon obstinate sinners here on earth; yet glad they are, when it pleases God to stay and stop them from a speedy execution of his wrath and vengeance: for as judgment is God's strange work in which he does not delight, so neither is it pleasing to the angels as an act of punishment, but only in obedience to the command of God, and with an eye and respect to the glory of God. Observe, 2. That if a spiritual judgment be here intended, as others apprehend, namely, the calamities befalling the church by reason of an apostasy under antichrist; then by the winds they understand heresies, and false doctrines of all sorts, which have an impetuous force and violence, like winds, to drive unstable souls from their steadfastness in the truths of God, into damnable errors. Now, God takes special care that these winds should not blow, those antichristian errors, and false doctrines, should not overflow the earth, until he had sealed his people, that is, secured them from that danger, preserving them from spiritual defilement, as the undoubted fruit of their sealing: where we see, that in all times of public calamity, be it temporal or spiritual, God has a special care of his own, and bears a special regard unto his own; here he commands the angels to hold the winds from smiting the earth, till the number of his sealed ones was completed.

2 And I saw another angel ascending from the east, having the seal of the living God: And he cried with a loud voice to the four angels, to whom it was given to hurt the earth and the sea,

3 Saying, Hurt not the earth, neither the sea, nor the trees, till we have sealed the servants of our God in their forehead.

Observe here, 1. The special and distinguishing care which God took of his church and faithful people before he suffered the approaching storm to come upon the world: he did by another angel cry to the four angels that were ready, as God's executioners to hurt the earth, that they should hurt nothing till the servants of God were sealed in their foreheads; and his crying with a loud voice intimates his great care to preserve his faithful ones. Quest. What was this sealing? Ans. Some understand it of an external visible sealing, by setting a mark upon their foreheads for preservation, according to Ezek. ix. 4. The letter Tau; doubtless there was some notification made by Almighty God to the destroying angels, of every one whom he would have preserved. Others do understand this seal to be internal, by sanctification; and from thence we may gather, that inward holiness is the best guard against temporal or spiritual judgments. But take this sealing, in either sense, either for an outward or inward sealing, the notion doth imply, 1. That the persons sealed, are of precious and excellent esteem with God. 2. It imports preservation, and security from danger; God sealeth his people, that the destruction coming upon others, may escape them: thus here God's servants were sealed, that they might be preserved; that they are kept either from sin and error, or from judgment and danger is not from themselves, but from God's care and love towards them in the sealing of them, the angel said, "Hurt not the earth, &c. till we have sealed the servants of our God, &c."

4 And I heard the number of them which were sealed; and there weresealed an hundred and forty and four thousand of all the tribes of the children of Israel.

5 Of the tribe of Judah were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Reuben were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Gad were sealed twelve thousand.

6 Of the tribe of Aser were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Nephthalim were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Manasseh were sealed twelve thousand.

7 Of the tribe of Simeon were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Levi were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Issachar were sealed twelve thousand.

8 Of the tribe of Zebulon were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Joseph were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Benjamin were sealed twelve thousand.

Observe here, 1. That the true church is represented in this book by the name of the Jews, and the false church by the Gentiles; so that by the tribes of the children of Israel is to be understood the whole universal church of sincere and serious christians, all that profess and practise the faith of Abraham, and so are his spiritual seed. Note, 2. That these hundred forty and four thousand are particularly mentioned, chap. xiv. 1. as the pure virgin church distinguished from the adulterous; this number then comprehends all such as during antichrist's tyranny should be kept from his delusions, of whatsoever nation they be; all that adhere to Christ against antichrist are sealed, to preserve them from that defection wherein others would be involved. Note, 3. The great care which Almighty God takes in a time of general apostasy, to preserve a number in all his churches from that fatal mischief, that the catholic church may not fail: God has a number sealed; and such as are sealed shall be preserved. Note, 4. That though the number of God's sealed ones be great in itself, 144,000, yet how small is it in comparison of the not sealed. Note 5. That as God had a number out of all the tribes of Israel, so doth he gather to himself a people out of all nations, ranks, and conditions of men, in and throughout the whole world. Note, 6. That the tribe of Dan is here left out; the reasons assigned for it are various; because, say some, antichrist was to come of that tribe; but it doth not any where appear, that ever Almighty God punished a people before they committed a sin: others with more reason conceive it was the great idolatry which this tribe fell into and continued in till the captivity, see Judg. xviii. 30, and Amos viii. 14, yet we must not suppose that none of this tribe were saved, because here not mentioned; for we find Samson of this tribe, and reckoned among those worthies, whose names are recorded, Heb. xi. By faith Samson. Note, 7. That Levi or the Levites, who had no inheritance in the earthly Canaan, but were dispersed and scattered throughout all the tribes that they might teach the people the law of the Lord, and so could not be numbered there; yet, says the learned and pious Dr. Hammond, in Christ their portion was as good as the rest, and therefore were not omitted here. Behold here a consideration which administers much comfort to us the ministers of the gospel, though many of us have no earthly possessions, and some cut short of outward comforts, yet our title to the heavenly inheritance is good, and we shall not miss of it, as the reward of our faithfulness. Note lastly, That although Levi had the charge of all the tribes, and had the peculiar favor above all the rest to stand before God, and administer to him in holy things, yet no more are sealed of this than of the other tribes; all were teachers, but all were not sealed: all are not saved that are of the holy calling, and who may be instrumental to save others. It was a solemn speech of an ancient father, Non temere dico, sed ut affectus sum, ac ut animo sentio: Revera puto sacerdotes non multos esse qui salvi fient, ut plures esse qui pereunt. With whom agrees St. Paul, 1 Cor. ix. 27. "Fearing lest having preached to others, he himself should become a cast away."

9 After this I beheld, and lo, a great multitude, which no man could number, of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues, stood before the throne, and before the Lamb, clothed with white robes, and palms in their hands:

10 And cried with a loud voice, saying, Salvation to our God which sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb.

11 And all the angels stood round about the throne, and about the elders and the four beasts, and fell before the throne on their faces, and worshipped God.

12 Saying, Amen; Blessing, and glory, and wisdom, and thanksgiving, and honor, and power, and might, be unto our God for ever and ever. Amen.

St. John having had in the former verses a visionary view of the church militant, under the denomination of sealed ones, in these verses a prospect is given him of the church triumphant in heaven; a most magnificent description of which we have here before us. Where note, 1. The triumphant church above, is described by its multitude; "A numberless number which no man can number:" according to the promise made to Christ, of bringing many sons unto glory. 2. They are described by their variety; some out of every nation, tribe, people, and language, according to that of our Saviour, Matt. viii. 11. "They shall come from the east, and from the west, and from the north, and from the south, and shall sit down with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, in the kingdom of heaven." 3. They are described by their posture, they stand before the throne, and before the Lamb, as servants attending upon their Lord, a most happy station, as such accounted by them; not that they stand perpetually gazing upon God, and doing nothing else; but they express their love unto him, by attending upon him, to execute his command. 4. They are described by their habit, they are clothed with white robes, and palms in their hands; white garments import their dignity, their purity, their joy. The saints' dignity in heaven is great, they are kings and priests unto God: their purity great, being purified as he is pure; their joy great, being entered into the joy of their Lord, this joy being too great to enter into them. Note farther, How these glorified saints do ascribe all their glory, happiness, and salvation to Christ, and nothing to themselves. "Salvation to our God who sitteth upon the throne, and to the Lamb" Sancti quasi sanguine tincti, say some; "Many of these saints were martyrs that shed their blood for Christ." But mark, Their garments were made white not in their own blood, but in the blood of the Lamb. Again, They are described with palms in their hands, as well as clothed in white. Now, this denotes their victory, and the reward of their victory. Palms were amongst the Roman's ensigns of victory. All the saints enter heaven with palms in their hands, having conquered sin, satan, and the world, and the whole host of spiritual enemies. Observe next, How the holy angels in heaven do join with the saints and martyrs in worshipping God, and adoring the Lamb, verse 11. "And all the angels stood round about the throne, and fell on their faces and worshipped God," concurring with the church in their congratulations, adding their Amen to what the palm-bearers had said, and much more of their own, ascribing "Blessing, and glory, and wisdom, and thanksgiving, and honor, and power, and might, unto him for ever and ever." Where note, How the triumphant church is made up of an innumerable company of angels, as well as saints: Heb. xii. besides the spirits of just men made perfect, makes mention of an innumerable company of angels, as part of the church of the first-born. (Angeli gratia Sancti Avastant debent Christo mediatori, says one,) And St. Paul, Eph. i. 10, says, "That in the dispensation of the fulness of time he might gather together in one, all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth, even in him." Whence it appears, that though angels sinned not, yet Christ gathered them and us into one society, and is an head both to them and us.

13 And one of the elders answered, saying unto me, What are these which are arrayed in white robes? And whence came they?

14 And I said unto him, Sir, thou knowest. And he said to me, These are they which came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb.

15 Therefore are they before the throne of God, and serve him day and night in his temple: and he that sitteth on the throne shall dwell among them.

As if St. John had said, One of the elders, not out of ignorance as to himself, but out of desire to inform me asked me, Whether I knew what these were that stood arrayed in white? And I told him, I did not know, but desired him to inform me. He replied, They were such as had suffered great tribulation for Christ, and were now accepted of him, and dignified by him; not for their own worthiness, but for the sake of his sufferings. Note here, 1. The present state and condition of the church of God, and members of Christ in this world, they are in tribulation, yea, in great tribulation here; as long as there is a devil in hell, and wicked men upon earth, all that will live godly in Christ Jesus must suffer tribulation. Note here, 2. The future state which they shall be advanced to, they shall come out of great tribulation; the saints' sharp sufferings and persecutions shall have a joyful issue and glorious end. Yet note, 3. That though the cross was the way to the crown, yet the cross did not merit the crown: their suffering would not, could not, bring them to heaven, without having their souls washed in the blood of the Lamb, much less could their sufferings merit and purchase heaven; but it pleased God of his free grace thus to reward their sufferings. "They were washed in the blood of the Lamb," whose blood paid the price of their salvation. Note, 4. the description which is here given of heaven; it is called a temple in allusion to the Jewish temple, in which God dwelt of old; as God by his gracious presence dwelt in his temple on earth; so by his glorious presence he dwells among his glorified saints in his temple in heaven; and accordingly the glorified saints in heaven do temple service, they worship God continually, and serve him day and night. In allusion this is probably spoken, the priests standing in the material temple; and serving in their courses night and day, Psal. cxxxiv. 1. Heaven is a place of employment and service, as well as of pleasure and joy; and the greatest joy results from the greatest service.

16 They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more; neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat.

17 For the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne, shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living fountains of waters : and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes.

Here St. John proceeds in giving a farther description of the place and state of the blessed ; he acquaints us both with the private evils they shall everlastingly be delivered from, as also with the positive good they shall eternally rest in. As to the former he assures us, that glorified souls shall be acquainted with no wants, and exposed to no afflictive providences, They shall neither hunger nor thirst ; that is, they shall be in a condition free from all, and all manner of wants whatsoever. "Neither shall the sun, nor the heat light upon them;" that is, the scorching heat of persecution, to which they were exposed here, shall never more affect or afflict them there. And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; that is, all cause of sorrow and mourning shall everlastingly cease. Farther, he acquaints us with the positive good which glorified saints do eternally rest in, the Lamb in the midst of the throne shall feed them; that is, Christ shall satisfy them with a satiety of joy, and fulness of pleasure : and lead them to the living fountains of water, that is, to the never-failing comforts of God's presence. O happy place and state ! which will at once cause the saints to forget all former sorrows for time past, and happily prevent any farther cause of affliction and sorrow for time to come ; where no sin shall afflict them, no sorrow affect them, no danger afflict them, where all tears shall be wiped from their eyes, all sorrows banished from their hearts, and everlasting joys shall possess their souls : where they shall obey their God with vigor, praise him with cheerfulness, love him above measure, fear him without torment, trust him without despondency, serve him without lassitude and weariness, without interruption or distraction, being perfectly like unto God, as well in holiness as in happiness, as well in purity as in immortality. Lord, strengthen our faith in the belief of this desirable happiness, and set our souls a longing for the full fruition and final enjoyment of it.

CHAPTER VIII.

AND when he had opened the seventh seal, there was silence in heaven about the space of half an hour.

When he had opened, that is, when the Lamb, who opened the six foregoing seals, did open the seventh, there was silence in heaven about half an hour, by way of allusion to what was done in the temple at the time of offering incense. The end of which silence was to give St. John an opportunity to contemplate those high mysteries which he had revealed to him, and to prepare him for new visions, as silence is cried before the proclamation of great and weighty matters. When great things are to be uttered, great attention is expected, and great silence prepares for great attention.

2 And I saw the seven angels which stood before God : and to them were given seven trumpets.

Observe here, 1. The readiness of the holy angels to execute the will of God at all times ; They stand before God, namely, to minister at his pleasure, and to execute judgments at his command : whether these were good angels or bad, it is not material to dispute, seeing God makes both the executioners of his judgments when he pleases. Observe, 2. The number of these angels, they were seven, and no more, because it pleased not God to pour down his whole wrath at once upon the rebellious world, but at divers times, and gradually. Observe, 3. That to these seven angels, were given seven trumpets to publish God's judgments to the world. These trumpets signified that God would proceed against the world in fearful hostility, and appear against it as an enemy to battle, proclaiming as it were open war, with sound of trumpet, and beat of drum, and hanging out a flag of defiance against it. The patience of God, though lasting, yet will not be everlasting. These angels sounding the alarm of judgments before they did inflict the following dreadful judgments upon the world, shows that God warns before he strikes : he doth usually pre-admonish before he punisheth. Judgment is a strange work, he delights not in it. But when sin calls upon him to arise out of his place, to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity, he doth it with unspeakable reluctance and regret, like a tender-hearted father, with a rod in his hand, and tears in his eyes.

3 And another angel came and stood at the altar, having a golden censer : and there was given unto him much incense, that he should offer it with the prayers of all saints upon the golden altar which was before the throne.

4 And the smoke of the incense, which came with the prayers of the saints, ascended up before God, out of the angel's hand.

5 And the angel took the censer, and filled it with the fire of the altar, and cast it unto the earth ; and there were voices, and thunderings, and lightnings, and an earthquake.

Observe here, That all along in the visions which St. John had, a representation was made to his mind of things pertaining to the Jewish worship ; his visionary temple, the altar, the incense, the fire, the censer, which he saw, were in allusion to the material temple, and to the worship and service performed there at Jerusalem ; and accordingly this other angel here mentioned, represented the highpriest, (who was an illustrious type of our Lord Jesus Christ,) whose office it was to offer incense at the altar, and therewith to offer up prayers for the people. Observe farther,

That Christ is here represented as having a golden censer, whereas the high priest's was only of brass, to denote that he was a more excellent highpriest; and the much incense given to him, represents his abundant merits, whereby he renders the prayers of all his saints acceptable to his Father. Learn hence, That as Christ was the only mediator of redemption, so is he also the only mediator of intercession; his mediation is found upon his satisfaction; none had to do with the censer to offer incense, but he that had to do with the altar to offer sacrifices: who durst offer to intercede with an offended God on the behalf of sinners, but he that has first satisfied the justice of God for sin? Now, to satisfy an offended God, is Christ's peculiar, therefore to intercede with God authoritatively on the behalf of offenders, is Christ's sole prerogative. Again, Christ's intercession gives virtue and effect to our supplications. This truth was signified, ver. 4, where it is affirmed, "That the smoke of the incense which came with the prayers of the saints, ascended up before God out of the angel's hand; that is, the virtue and efficacy of the Mediator's merits, which came up with the prayers of the saints, and perfumed them, did both plead for, and procure acceptance with God. Behold here the true reason why our poor and broken supplications do find acceptance with God; namely, because perfumed with the odors of Christ's merits, and presented to the Father by his own mediation and intercession. The Father heareth him always, and so he doth all them whose prayers are offered by him. Observe lastly, The success and efficacy of the saints' prayers thus perfumed and presented unto God; there followed voices, and thunders, and lightnings, signifying the wonderful effects of prayer, or the terrible things that would follow after their prayers, even dreadful judgments upon the earth; that is, upon the land of Judea, say some; upon the Roman empire, say others. However it was, we may gather thus much from it, that in times of national provocation, the fervent prayers of God's faithful servants have a mighty prevalency with God, for staying off for a time national ruin and destruction.

6 And the seven angels, which had the seven trumpets, prepared themselves to sound,

7 The first angel sounded, and there followed hail and fire mingled with blood, and they were cast upon the earth: and the third part of trees was burnt up, and all green grass was burnt up.

Note here, 1. The readiness of the holy angels in heaven to execute the will and pleasure of God here on earth; they knew that the execution of God's judgments was to be performed by them, and accordingly they prepare themselves for it. Note, 2. The judgments denounced by the first angel, Fire and hail mingled with blood. A strange storm, alluding probably to one of the plagues of Egypt, mentioned Exod. ix. denoting, say some, the direful temporal judgments which God would bring upon Judea in general, and Galilee in particular, by bloodshed and insurrections. The trees, says Dr. Moore, signify the great men, and the grass the common people. Others by this storm of hail and blood understand a spiritual judgment, namely, an inundation of heresy upon the christian church, which is of a fiery and bloody nature wherever it prevails, it is a dreadful plague, and a consuming storm; justly inflicted by God upon a people for their contempt of the gospel, and not receiving the truth in the love of it, that they might be saved.

8 And the second angel sounded, and as it were a great mountain burning with fire was cast into the sea; and the third part of the sea became blood;

9 And the third part of the creatures which were in the sea, and had life, died; and the third part of the ships were destroyed.

Observe here, 1. The universality of the judgment inflicted; the former judgment was upon the earth, this upon the sea, that no place might escape, a storm of hail and blood falls upon the former, a mountain of burning fire is cast into the latter; both signifying increasing wars and bloodshed by sea and land, accord up to some; the mighty prevalency of error and heresy, say others, and particularly of the Arian heresy, which puffs up, and swells with pride, and is the harbinger and forerunner of ruin and destruction; as only by pride cometh contention, so after pride, or along with pride, cometh destruction.

10 And the third angel sounded, and there fell a great star from heaven, burning as it were a lamp, and it fell upon the third part of the rivers, and upon the fountains of waters:

11 And the name of the star is called Wormwood: and the third part of the waters became wormwood: and many men died of the waters, because they were made bitter.

The next judgment inflicted, or rather the farther progress of the former judgment, was the infecting of the waters and rivers with a mortal bitterness by a bitter star falling from heaven into them; denoting, say some, the fall of a great captain amongst the Jews in Judea; others understand it of heresy in general; of the Arian heresy in particular; and some apply it to the fall of Rome, the seat of the western empire: so Mr. Mede. If it be understood of heresy, it shows us what a poisonous, bitter, and deadly nature, error and heresy is of. Error is as damnable as vice, the one is an open road, the other a by-path to hell and destruction; and accordingly that person, and that people which have a due care of their soul's salvation, will be as much afraid of erroneous principles as they are of debauched practices.

12 And the fourth angel sounded, and the third part of the sun was smitten, and the third part of the moon, and the third part of the stars; so as the third part of them was darkened, and the day shone not for a third part of it, and the night likewise.

13 And I beheld, and heard an angel flying through the midst of heaven, saying, with a loud voice, Woe, woe, woe to the inhabitants of the earth, by reason of the other voices of the trumpet of the three angels, which are yet to sound!

Observe here, 1. That by sun, moon, and stars, in scripture prophecies, the potentates and powers of a state are understood; accordingly the darkening of the sun, moon, and stars, signifies generally the fall of some great powers either ecclesiastical or civil; others who interpret these judgments, spiritually by the darkening of the sun, moon, and stars, do understand the prevalence of ignorance and error in the church, occasioning a fearful eclipse of that saving and comfortable light which would illuminate our eyes, and direct our steps in the way that leads to eternal happiness. Observe, 2. That in this and all the former judgments, the third part only is mentioned as smitten, which shows that the Lord corrects in measure, and delights more in mercy than in justice, and desires rather the conversion than confusion of sinners, by making the punishments of some instructive warnings unto others. Observe, 3. God's way of dealing with his people in giving warning of future and severe judgments before they come, "I heard an angel flying through the midst of heaven, saying, Woe, woe, woe to the inhabitants of the earth;" thus God warns of approaching judgments before they come, that sinners may repent: and his own people being forewarned, may be forearmed ere the judgment comes upon them. Præmoniti, præmoniti, prævisa jacula minus feriant, darts foreseen are dartsless.

CHAPTER IX.

AND the fifth angel sounded, and I saw a star fall from heaven unto the earth; and to him was given the key of the bottomless pit.

2 And he opened the bottomless pit; and there arose a smoke out of the pit, as the smoke of a great furnace; and the sun and the air were darkened by reason of the smoke of the pit.

3 And there came out of the smoke locusts upon the earth; and unto them was given power as the scorpions of the earth have power.

4 And it was commanded them that they should not hurt the grass of the earth, neither any green thing, neither any tree; but only those men which have not the seal of God in their foreheads.

Observe here, 1. That those who understood this woe denounced by the fifth angel, to denote a temporal judgment, apply it to the Jewish seducer, who healed the turbulent zealots; he was a ringleader of most hellish villains, and the zealots under him did all the mischief imaginable, marching up to Jerusalem, plundering the city, seizing the temple, and killing the highpriest, with the rest of the priests; but by God's providence it so happened, that this judgment of the zealots fell not upon the christians, signified by the trees and green things, but upon the Jews only, because they were not of the faction of zealots. Observe, 2. That those who understand this woe to intimate a spiritual judgment, apply it some to the first rising of the Turks and Mahometans, others to the papacy and papal clergy: Mr. Mede applies it to the former, King James to the latter; "By locusts and grasshoppers (says he) understand monks and friars, who seem to fly a little from the earth, but indeed are gorbelled devourers: in locusts you see little but a mouth and a belly; in monks you see a mouth to mumble over masses, and a belly to consume; they seized, when time was, upon the meadows, the fat and pleasant parts of the land, and like grasshoppers consumed every green, that is, every good thing." Yet observe, 3. The commission and command given to them not to hurt the tree: such as are fruit-bearing and fruitful bearing christians, are preserved, and the storm falls upon drossy hypocrites; whence we may remark, That in times of error and seduction, as well as in times of judgment and calamity, God takes a special care of his faithful ones for their preservation; and has a special regard to the fruit of the trees of righteousness: "It was commanded them that they should not hurt any tree."

5 And to them (which had not the seal of God in their foreheads) it was given that they should not kill them, but that they should be tormented five months: and their torment was as the torment of a scorpion when he striketh a man.

6 And in those days shall men seek death, and shall not find it; and shall desire to die, and death shall flee from them.

That is, God would bring such dreadful judgments and calamities upon the wicked world, that men should prefer death before life; and it should be an affliction beyond all other afflictions, that they could not die; to flee death is a great misery; but to have death flee from us, or flee before us, and not be able to find it, is a far greater misery: God can so imbitter life by afflictions and sufferings, that those who dread death may yet desire to die! not for any good that they see in death, but only to get rid of the troubles of this life: "In those days men shall seek death and shall not find it."

7 And the shapes of the locusts were like unto horses prepared unto battle: and on their heads were as it were crowns like gold, and their faces were as the faces of men.

8 And they had hair as the hair of women, and their teeth were as the teeth of lions.

9 And they had breast-plates, as it were breast-plates of iron: and the sound of their wings was as the sound of chariots of many horses running to battle.

10 And they had tails like unto scorpions, and there were stings in their tails: and their power was to hurt men five months.

11 And they had a king over them, which is the angel of the bottomless pit, whose name in the Hebrew tongue is Abaddon, but in the Greek tongue he hath his name Apollyon.

That this is a metaphorical description of a terrible army of cruel men seems very plain; some understand it of the Jewish zealots, who appeared as warriors, and were devouring waters; they looked like men, kind and friendly, and pretending to be redeemers of the people, saviours of, and benefactors to their country; but at the same time plundering and carrying away the spoils of their brethren, without any tenderness or compassion. Others apply all this to the papal clergy. numerous, like locusts; well fed, like horses for battle; mighty, for earthly possessions; crowned, like petty princes; alluring, like women with their hair, and other ornaments, &c. Others again make the application to belong to the Turks and Saracens, who are represented as having many crowns on their heads, and as moved with wings, in regard of the many and vast conquests, says Mr. Mede, which they made in a short time, even Palestina, Syria, America, Asia the Less, and many others; as to the king named here Abaddon and Apollyon, some understand it to be the devil, others Mahomet, others the Pope; to whom, to every one of whom, the name of a destroyer too fitly belongs, as seeking and endeavouring to destroy men's souls, and by blood and persecution to destroy and lay waste the church of Christ.

12 One woe is past; and, behold, there cometh two woes more hereafter.

13 And the sixth angel sounded, and I heard a voice from the four horns of the golden altar which is before God,

14 Saying to the sixth angel which had the trumpet, Loose the four angels which are bound in the great river Euphrates.

15 And the four angels were loosed, which were prepared for an hour, and a day, and a month, and a year, for to slay the third part of men.

16 And the number of the army of the horsemen were two hundred thousand thousand: and I heard the number of them.

Note here, 1. From these words, One woe is past, and two more are to come, that God has a storehouse of judgments, as well as a treasury of mercy, and when one judgment will not do, he has more to inflict. Note, 2. The golden altar, which is here said to be before God, signifies our Lord Jesus Christ, his purity and excellency, and his appearing continually in the presence of his Father for us, as our Intercessor and Mediator. Note, 3. That this vast army of horsemen, consisting of two hundred thousand thousand, is expounded generally of Turks and Arabians, who have vast armies beyond all nations, whom God makes the executioners of his vengeance at his pleasure. Note, 4. Whereas it is said, that the four angels were bound in the great river Euphrates, and, till loosed by God's command, could never hurt nor stir, it teaches us, that the Lord has satan and all his instruments, in his own power to loose them for our sins, and to bind them again for our repentance; though their malice be infinite, yet their power is bounded; they cannot do all the mischief they would, and they shall not do all they can. Note, 5. That when these destroying angels were loosed, their time of hurting was limited to a year, and a month, and a day! showing, that the set and determinate time of the wicked's insolvency is appointed by God, to be either shorter or longer as he thinks fit; yea, they executed nothing but with a divine permission; nay, nothing without a special warrant and commission from God. "I heard a voice, saying, Loose the four angels which are bound in the river Euphrates; and they were loosed for an hour, &c." This is matter of singular consolation to us, that evil angels and wicked men are limited as to power; they cannot move much less hurt, till God loose them; A voice said, Loose the four angels.

17 And thus I saw the horses in the vision, and them that sat on them, having breast-plates of fire, and of jacinth and brimstone: and the heads of the horses were as the heads of lions; and out of their mouths issued fire, and smoke, and brimstone.

18 By these three was the third part of men killed, by the fire, and by the smoke, and by the brimstone which issued out of their mouths.

19 For their power is in their mouth, and in their tails: for their tails were like unto serpents, and had heads, and with them they do hurt.

20 And the rest of the men, which were not killed by these plagues, yet repented not of the works of their hands, that they should not worship devils, and idols of gold, and silver, and brass, and stone, and of wood; which neither can see, nor hear, nor walk:

21 Neither repented they of their murders, nor of their sorceries, nor of their fornication, nor of their thefts.

St. John proceeds here in describing this vast army of Turks and Arabians, that with incredible swiftness did overrun and ruin the eastern churches: all these expressions of fire and brimstone, and smoke, denote that cruel devastation and destruction which was occasioned by the Turks and Mahometans. Behold here the instruments of satan, how his own cruel and destructive nature is discovered, how exceedingly he is delighted in the perdition of mankind, having been a murderer from the beginning. In the two last verses St. John declares, 1 What were the sins which procured so great a plague, namely, idolatry and worshipping the works of their own hands, a sin very odious to God, and for which God suffered the Turks to be so severe a scourge to Christendom; what little reason had the christians then to call their wars against the Turks, the holy wars, when idolatry, the cause of it, was not repented of? what success could they expect, as long as the idolatry of christians, and their other provoking sins, were so many? Observe farther, What was the end God aimed at by such strong physic, by such terrible judgments as he then brought upon the world? it was to bring them to repentance; but so mad was the antichristian world upon their idols, that they would not be reformed by the judgments they saw upon their brethren. Hence learn, That when God once begins to enter into judgment with a sinful people, he will follow them with a variety and succession of plagues and judgments one upon another, till he has either brought them to himself, or brought them to nothing.

CHAPTER X.

AND I saw another mighty angel come down from heaven, clothed with a cloud: and a rainbow was upon his head, and his face was as it were the sun, and his feet as pillars of fire:

2 And he had in his hand a little book open: and he set his right foot upon the sea, and his left foot on the earth.

This angel is concluded to represent our Lord Jesus Christ the angel of the covenant; he is called a mighty angel, in opposition to the mighty enemies of his church, mentioned in the foregoing chapter; he is said to come down from heaven, to intimate his signal and seasonable appearing for the relief of his church; clothed with a cloud, representing the manner of his coming in the clouds at the final judgment; with a rainbow on his head, signifying that covenant of peace which he had made with his church, and his continual mindfulness of that covenant; His face was as the sun, to denote that light of comfort and deliverance which he would bring to his church in his own time: His feet as pillars, signifying the steadiness and stability of his purposes and actions, that where he sets his feet, none can remove him; and as pillars of fire, denoting his ability to tread down his enemies under him, and also to consume them; this is according to the description of his person given, chap. i. 15, 16. The emblems and figures by which he is represented here, are the same by which he was described there; consequently, he is the same person. Observe next, the account of what he did, He had a little book in his hand open, to distinguish it from the former book sealed; a book in which the purpose and decree of God was made known, concerning what should happen to the church; a book sealed and shut to us, but obvious and open to Christ. Christ that lay in the bosom of the Father, reveals his Father's secrets to us, so far as is needful and necessary for us to know them. And he set his right foot on the sea, and his left foot on the earth, to let us know his sovereignty and dominion over the whole world; as well over the turbulent and unquiet, as over the quiet and more peaceable part of it; and also to signify his ability to tread down his enemies, wherever they are; a consideration that administers much comfort and consolation to his church; his dominion is over the earth and sea, none can dispossess him of his power, and none can escape his presence.

3 And cried with a loud voice, as when a lion roareth: and when he had cried, seven thunders uttered their voices.

4 And when the seven thunders had uttered their voices, I was about to write: and I heard a voice from heaven saying unto me, Seal up those things which the seven thunders uttered, and write them not.

This angel, who represented Christ, the Lion of the tribe of Judah, is said to cry like a roaring lion, whose voice is both loud and terrible; this, some conceive, shadowed forth efficacious and successful preaching of the gospel, and that the seven thunders signified the same; but others apprehend hereby the thundering judgments of God, which were shortly to be inflicted on the wicked world: and particularly on Jerusalem by Titus, say some; upon antichrist and his adherents, say others. The judgments of God are fitly set forth by thunder, because they do not fly at random, but by divine direction; the loudness, the swiftness, the forcibleness of thunder is known, and the terrible-ness of God in his doings towards the children of men, has been sufficiently understood. Observe next, St. John's intention to write what these thunders uttered, for the benefit of the church, as conceiving them to be of great concernment to her; but he receives a command from Christ to the contrary, not to do it at present; God foreseeing that the opposers would not hear, but despise; therefore these judgments shall be known by experience, and not by words. Others say, this inhibition was only temporary, not perpetual: write them not, that is, conceal them for the present, till thou hast those things represented to thee in other types, and till they are nearer their accomplishment; hereafter he might write them, for what God revealed to John, was to be showed to his servants, chap. i. 1.

5 And the angel, which I saw stand upon the sea and upon the earth, lifted up his hand to heaven,

6 And swore by him that liveth for ever and ever, who created heaven, and the things that therein are, and the earth, and the things that therein are, and the sea, and the things which are therein, that there should be time no longer:

7 But in the days of the voice of the seventh angel, when he shall begin to sound, the mystery of God should be finished, as he hath declared to his servants the prophets.

The angel that represented Christ, is here represented to St. John as swearing. Where observe, 1. The ceremony used in swearing, lifting up of the hand to heaven, appealing thereby to God as a witness, and a judge. 2. The person sworn by, God, described. 1. By his eternity, He lives for ever, before and after all time. 2. By his omnipotency and almighty power in the work of creation, making heaven, and earth, and the sea, and all things that are therein. An oath is proper to God, and as we are to swear by God, so God is only to be sworn by. Observe, 3. The thing sworn, namely, That time shall be no more; that is, that there should be no further delay of time, for the destruction of Jerusalem, and the obdurate Jews, say some; for the ruin of the Roman empire, for the destruction of antichrist, say others; the performance of God's word, both in his promises of deliverance to his church, and in the execution of judgment on her enemies, are now at hand. Observe, 4. The promise made, and the assurance here given, namely, that the mystery of God should be finished, that is, the deliverance of the church should be completed; and the final confusion of her enemies shall be accomplished; which is called a mystery, because the world understands it not, nor will they believe the same. As mysteries have their own time to be made manifest in, so, to the comfort of the faithful, and the terror of the wicked, a day was then approaching, in which the happy condition of the afflicted should appear, and the calamitous state of the ungodly be discovered.

8 And the voice which I heard from heaven spake unto me again, and said, Go, and take the little book which is open in the hand of the angel which standeth upon the sea and upon the earth.

9 And I went unto the angel, and said unto him, Give me the little book. And he said unto me, Take it, and eat it up; and it shall make thy belly bitter, but it shall be in thy mouth sweet as honey.

10 And I took the little book out of the angel's hand, and ate it up; and it was in my mouth sweet as honey: and as soon as I had eaten it, my belly was bitter.

11 And he said unto me, Thou must prophesy again before many people, and nations, and tongues, and kings.

Expositors generally make this little book the emblem of the holy Scriptures, and the command given by the angel to St. John to eat this book, imports the great duty of studying diligently the holy Scriptures, inwardly digesting them, and making them our own by particular application. What we eat is turned into nourishment, and becomes one substance with ourselves; thus the mysteries of the gospel must be eaten by the interpreters of gospel-mysteries. It is not enough that we know divine things, but we must know them divinely; we must have a savory knowledge of them, and an experimental acquaintance with them. 2. The effect which eating this book had upon St. John, it was in his mouth sweet as honey, in his belly very bitter; that is, the knowledge he had of the divine mysteries, was in itself very pleasant, but the knowledge of the persecutions and cruelties which the christians were to suffer and undergo, was very bitter to his soul. Learn hence, That though communication of light from God, and the revelation of the mind and will of God, be in itself very delightful to his ministers, yet in respect of the sad messages contained in his word, it is very burdensome and bitter to them: however, it being the burden of the Lord, they must bear it, they must carry it. Every good man, much more every gracious minister has a very high estimation of the word of God, he esteems it as food, he esteems it as necessary food; he esteems it more than necessary food; but when God sends us to denounce judgments upon sinners, our belly trembles, our lips quiver, anguish takes hold upon us, we desire not the woeful day, Lord, thou knowest. Observe lastly, The assurance God gives St. John of farther revelations of his mind unto him, "As thou hast prophesied, so thou must prophesy again before many people, and nations, and tongues, and kings;" see here in St. John's person the true end and reason why God calls his ministers, and fits them with gifts, and why they furnish themselves with acquired abilities, it is to render themselves the more serviceable in his work, that they may speak of his word before kings, and not be ashamed.

CHAPTER XI.

AND there was given me a reed like unto a rod; and the angel stood, saying, Rise, and measure the temple of God, and the altar, and them that worship therein.

Observe here, 1. The command given by God to St. John to take a survey of his church, his spiritual temple, consisting of living stones, and built upon the chief corner-stone Jesus Christ. God's faithful and true worshippers are only those whom God will have to be measured, and take notice of as being his part and portion, his tabernacle in which he will dwell. And, blessed be God! in the worst of times they are measurable, even in times of epidemical degeneracy, and universal apostasy, God has a number to stand up for his name, and to bear witness to his truth. Observe, 2. That the temple, the altar, and the worshippers therein, are here all joined together, and the command given, is to measure them together. "Arise, and measure the temple, the altar, and them that worship therein;" intimating, that the true church, and the true worshippers, are ever found together; and by the true worship, and true worshippers, is the true church ever known; so that if the question be asked, "Where is the true church?" the answer is, Where the true altar is; and where the true worship is, there the true church is: that worship which will bear God's measuring reed, the scrutiny of the scriptures, and the examination of his holy word; where that worship is found, there the church of God is found.

2 But the court which is without the temple leave out, and measure it not; for it is given unto the Gentiles: and the holy city shall they tread under foot forty and two months.

Observe here, What St. John is forbidden to measure, and commanded to leave out as no part of the true church, namely, The court which is without the temple; that is, that part of the visible church which is over-run with idolatry, and antichristian worship, as bad as gentilism, and accordingly shall be treated as gentiles, and trodden down under foot, as drossy hypocrites; Measure the temple, says God, but not the outward court. The temple had but few worshippers, the priests only, in comparison of the outward court, where the body of the people was; whence we see that the true church is but small, very small, in comparison of the false and antichristian church, and consequently multitude can be no right note of the true church. Observe farther, That whereas these gentiles are said to tread under foot the holy city forty-two months, thereby is signified, that they should kill and persecute the true spouse and Church of Christ, (called the holy city, in allusion to the earthly Jerusalem) during the time of antichrist's prevalency, yet here we have the church's ground of comfort and support, that her pressures, and antichrist's prevalency, shall be but for a limited time, a short time, The holy city shall they tread under foot forty and two months.

3 And I will give power unto my two witnesses, and they shall prophesy a thousand two hundred and threescore days, clothed in sackcloth.

Observe here, 1. That the church of God during antichrist's prevalency, shall not want witnesses or faithful teachers, though removed by persecution into corners. Observe, 2. By mentioning two only, we may gather the paucity of faithful teachers, during the time of antichrist's prevalency, two are a number, but the least of numbers: we must not have our eye upon the multitude, or conclude that it is not truth which is not embraced and practised by the most; the train of Christ is not large, nor are his ways thronged as they ought, few comparatively there be that walk in them. As they, whom he calls forth to be eminently his witnesses, are not many, therefore called two; so they that received their witness are but few, for the world wonders after the beast. Quest But who and what are these witnesses? Ans. The whole succession of faithful ministers, martyrs, and confessors, which Almighty God, from time to time, has raised up in his church to be the assertors and maintainers of divine truth, and to bear their testimony for Christ against all heresies, blasphemies, idolatries, and usurpations in the time of antichrist's reign. Observe, 3. The proper work of these witnesses declared, it is to prophesy, that is, to instruct the people how to worship God according to his word and will. The manner of their prophesying is said to be in sackcloth; that is, in much affliction, and with great lamentation, bewailing the pollutions of the church by the overspreadings of idolatry; and the time of their prophesying is said to be a thousand two hundred and threescore days; that is, during the time of antichrist's reign, so long the witnesses shall have a mournful time of it; during the whole reign of antichrist. God will have a true church, a true ministry, and faithful witnesses, whom though antichrist will fight with, yet he shall never prevail against. Observe, 4. How God is pleased to own and bear witness to these his witnesses. 1. He calls them his, my two witnesses. 2. He gives them power to prophesy; that is, they have their commission and authority from him, and they are enabled, assisted, and succeeded by him in the discharge of their testimony: their resolution and courage is from God, who calls them forth to bear their testimony for him. Learn hence, That when God calls any of his to a martyr's fire, he does endue them with a martyr's faith; he furnishes his ministers and faithful servants with noble endowments, answerable to their great employments; God evermore gives much grace, where he tries grace much. As the command of God makes every duty necessary, so the assistance of God makes every duty and service gainful and advantageous.

4 These are the two olive-trees, and the two candlesticks standing before the God of the earth.

5 And if any man will hurt them, fire proceedeth out of their mouth, and devoureth their enemies: and if any man will hurt them, he must in this manner be killed.

6 These have power to shut heaven, that it rain not in the days of their prophecy: and have power over waters, to turn them to blood, and to smite the earth with all plagues, as often as they will.

Observe here, A double title given by God unto the two witnesses, spoken of in the former verse. they are styled olive trees and candlesticks. As the olive-tree is always green, so the ministry of these witnesses is lively and efficacious; as the olive is a sign of peace, and the oil that drops from the glive an emblem of grace, so the ministry of these witnesses was a ministry both of grace and peace. Again, they are called olive trees, because they are to minister oil to the candlesticks, which are to hold out light unto others. Here note, that the title of candlesticks given to the churches, chap. i. is here given to the ministers of the church; partly to show the near relation that is between them, and partly to point out the duty that is mutually incumbent upon them; namely, to hold forth the light of truth unto others. And farther, These candlesticks are said to stand before the God of the earth, signifying their fidelity in the discharge of their duty, as in the presence of God before whom they stand. Observe, 2. The efficacy and power of these witnesses' ministry in the certain effects of it. What was said of Elijah and Elisha literally, is applied unto them spiritually. 1. As Elijah brought fire down from heaven which devoured the enemy, so fire proceeds out of these witnesses' mouth, not by way of imprecation, but by way of denunciation, pronouncing the threatenings and judgments of God against them, continuing in their impenitency. 2. As Elijah had power to shut heaven, so have these witnesses power to do the like during the time of their prophecy; that is, God is provoked for the world's ill-treatment of his faithful witnesses, to withhold the spiritual rain of the word, and the refreshing doctrine of the gospel from them. Again, When it is said that these witnesses have power to turn the water into blood, and to smite the earth with all plagues, there is a manifest allusion to Moses and Aaron, who exercised such a power, Exod. vii. Accordingly, God being provoked by the indignities offered to his faithful witnesses, permits the pure doctrine of the gospel to be corrupted, and avenges their cause by bringing judgments on the world, as Moses did upon Egypt, according to the threatenings denounced by them. Whence we may learn, What great credit and esteem the faithful witnesses and ministers of Christ are in with God; what power and prerogative is given to them, far surpassing the power of any mortal prince, even a power to open and shut heaven, to turn waters into blood, and to smite the earth; that is, God doth all these things upon a just occasion, in vindication of them, and in revenge for the injuries done unto them.

7 And, when they shall have finished their testimony, the beast that ascendeth out of the bottomless pit shall make war against them, and shall overcome them, and kill them.

8 And their dead bodies shall lie in the street of the great city, which spiritually is called Sodom and Egypt, where also our Lord was crucified.

9 And they of the people, and kindreds, and tongues, and nations, shall see their dead bodies three days and an half, and shall not suffer their dead bodies to be put in graves.

10 And they that dwell upon the earth shall rejoice over them, and make merry, and shall send gifts one to another; because these two prophets tormented them that dwelt on the earth.

These verses set before us the barbarous usage which the two witnesses should meet with from the antichristian world, for the faithful discharge of their duty, they shall be slain politically and civilly, say some, deposed, silenced, imprisoned, and laid aside as useless and dead. Literally, say others, they shall be put to death for the testimony of Jesus, by bloodshed, fire, and faggot. They shall overcome them, that is, in their persons, but not in their cause. See here the christian church founded in blood, that of Christ, its head; watered with blood, that of his ministers and members. God suffers his sometimes to be actually slain, for his own glory, their honor, and the church's good; but mark the time specified when the witnesses were slain; it was when they had finished their testimony, and not before then, but not till then. So long as God has special work and service for his witnesses to do in the world, their mighty and cruel enemies cannot touch an hair of their heads, much less can they take away their lives till they have finished their testimony. Observe, 2. Besides the antichristian cruelty, in killing these witnesses, their barbarous inhumanity in denying them burial, not suffering some to be buried at all, and digging up the bones of others that have been long buried. The place where this was done is called Sodom and Egypt, and the great city where our Lord was crucified; which if literally understood, signifies Jerusalem, compared to Sodom for the abominable sins of the Gnostics committed in her: and to Egypt for oppression; but if mystically understood, Rome, or the Roman empire, is conceived by most Protestants to be here intended by Egypt and Sodom; like Egypt for idolatry, tyranny, spiritual darkness, obstinacy, and obduracy; like Sodom for uncleanness, yea, worse than Sodom, uncleanness being not only practised, but tolerated, yea, allowed publicly, licences being there given to such public houses, and books written in defence of Sodomy at Rome, where Christ may be said to be crucified in his members as long as this apostate power holds up. Observe, 3. The great joy and exultation which is here discovered at the slaughter of these witnesses; the antichristian rabble triumph, and make merry, rejoice, and send gifts to one another. Lord! how madly do the wicked rejoice at the death of those men that used their utmost endeavours to have saved them? "They that dwell on the earth shall rejoice and make merry." Observe, 4. The special reason assigned why the members of antichrist's kingdom did thus triumph at the death of the witnesses, and their supposed utter extinction, namely, because the two witnesses, tormented them that dwell on the earth; that is, by their public preaching, by their private reproving, by their denouncing of God's judgments against them: for not suffering them to go on quietly and undisturbedly in the ways of sin, they grew very uneasy with them, and rejoiced when they thought the world fully rid of them. Lord! how does the preaching of thy word, which comforts and supports thy children, which is sweeter to them than the honey, and more esteemed by them than their necessary food, how does the same word preached torment notorious sinners? and instead of receiving the message, they rage at the messenger, and triumph and dance with Herod, to see that head cut off whose tongue was so bold to tell them of their faults: "They rejoiced, because these two prophets that tormented them were slain."

11 And after three days and an half, the Spirit of life from God entered into them: and they stood upon their feet, and great fear fell upon them which saw them.

12 And they heard a great voice from heaven, saying unto them, Come up hither. And they ascended up to heaven in a cloud; and their enemies beheld them.

The death of the witnesses was described in the foregoing verses, their resurrection is declared in these. This is understood politically by some, that they who were civilly dead, that is, laid aside as useless, were now politically alive; that is, restored to their political work and employment in the church again, God causing princes and magistrates to own and favor them; and accordingly by their ascending up into heaven they understand their re-entering into the church, their re-enjoying their public liberties and gospel privileges, which in comparison of the low and sackcloth condition they were in before, was like heaven and earth unto them. And they ascended in a cloud, that is gloriously, and their enemies beheld them with an envious eye, because of the work in their hands, which it was not in their power to hinder. Others understand this resurrection (in the manner forementioned) to be meant not of the same men, but of men of the same spirit and office, restored to the same work, to the admiration of the good, and consternation of the bad; and that the voice of Christ spake to the slain witnesses, saying, Come up hither, that is into heaven, to receive the reward of your sufferings and services, and others that succeed you in office shall partake of your spirit, and perfect that work which you began and carried on. Where note, That oft-times God's faithful witnesses, namely, such magistrates and ministers as have done great things for the church of God, are taken up to heaven before they behold the desired issue, which is left to their successors to see completed.

13 And the same hour was there a great earthquake, and the tenth part of the city fell, and in the earthquake were slain of men seven thousand: and the remnant were affrighted, and gave glory to the God of heaven.

These words are conceived by interpreters to set forth the great success of the witnesses' ministry after their resurrection: it was accompanied with a mighty earthquake, or a great shaking of the kingdom of antichrist; inasmuch that a tenth part of the city fell: that is, many nations and kingdoms under antichrist's tyranny and dominion shook off the yoke, and disowned his jurisdiction, and fell off from him. Observe farther, What this earthquake and fall produced, namely, a two-fold effect. 1: Seven thousand were slain. 2. Others were affrighted, turned from their sins, and gave glory to God. Behold here the great power of the word of God, and the happy success thereof, to the shaking of antichrist's kingdom, which falls not at once, but by degrees as it rose. The man of sin is to be consumed with the breath of Christ's mouth at first, which is a gradual death, till at last he be quite abolished by the brightness of his coming. Upon the whole then we may comfortably conclude, that whatever ground antichrist on the one hand may seem to have gained of late in any place, that yet he is certainly in a deep consumption; nay, far gone in it, and will languish more and more, till he draws his last breath; and on the other hand, whatever clouds may overspread the church of Christ in any place, it will not be long ere they will vanish, and that affairs are moving forwards towards the church's highest outward prosperity and most flourishing condition that she shall ever arrive at on this side heaven, which is to be under the blessed millennium, or thousand years, which began probably with the resurrection of the witnesses at the beginning of the protestant reformation, by the preaching of Luther. Thus speaks our learned Dr More, Myst. Iniq. p. 447. 'I doubt not,' says he, 'but this vision of the resurrection of the witnesses, was a prediction of our Protestant reformation, begun at Spire in Germany, anno 1529, when several German princes and imperial cities made a solemn protestation against the innovations and usurpations of the church of Rome; from whence came the name of Protestants, which continues to this day. This therefore,' says he, '[mark his inference] 'should make our reformation the more sacred, and keep all persons that wish well to our holy religion, from casting any dirt upon our first reformers, whose names ought to be had in honor, and will be so in the church of God throughout all generations.'

14 The second woe is past, and behold, the third woe cometh quickly.

15 And the seventh angel sounded: and there were great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ; and he shall reign for ever and ever.

An account is here given of the angel's sounding the seventh trumpet, at the beginning of antichrist's ruin and downfall. St. John heard great acclamations and shoutings in heaven for the victory which Christ by his witnesses had gotten over him, saying, The kingdoms of this world, that is, several kingdoms, or main bodies of kingdoms and nations, are now brought in to acknowledge Christ for their Sovereign and Lawgiver, who did not so before; but whereas formerly they owned another master, namely, antichrist, now they do especially own and acknowledge Christ, by professing to believe in him, and becoming a pure church to him; And he shall reign for ever and ever. Even under antichrist's reign and tyranny Christ had a kingdom, but he will have a more visible kingdom in the world, and which shall continue without any eclipse by antichrist, or any other, as it suffered before.

16 And the four and twenty elders, which sat before God on their seats, fell upon their faces, and worshipped God, 17 Saying, We give thee thanks, O Lord God Almighty, which art, and wast, and art to come: because thou hast taken to thee thy great power, and hast reigned.

18 And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead, that they should be judged, and that thou shouldest give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and them that fear thy name, small and great; and shouldest destroy them which destroy the earth.

19 And the temple of God was opened in heaven, and there was seen in his temple, the ark of his testament: and there were lightnings, and voices, and thunderings, and an earthquake, and great hail.

This chapter concludes with a doxology and solemn thanksgiving in heaven, for the victory which Christ obtained over antichrist here on earth; that is, for the begun victory over him. Here observe, 1. The persons rendering praises, the four and twenty elders; all the ministers of the church, say some: the whole church, say others, who are said to sit before God: denoting, 1. That they rest from their labors; they walked as pilgrims before, they sit now. Would we with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, sit down in the kingdom of God in heaven? we must with Abraham walk before God in uprightness here on earth, Gen. xvii. 5. 2. It denotes their honor and dignity unto which they are now advanced; as servants they stood before, as friends they sit now: but upon this great occasion mark their humble gesture, their protestations and adorations before God, "They fell upon their faces and worshipped." Observe, 2. The ground and occasion of it; what it is which they thus solemnly bless God for; namely, for Christ's victory over his enemies, for assuming to himself his great power, and universal dominion: and because the "kingdoms of the world were now become the kingdoms of the Lord, and of his Christ" For if there be joy in heaven at the conversion of one sinner unto Christ, what is there, suppose we, at the conversion of nations and kingdoms unto Christ? Behold here the whole host of heaven, the church triumphant in the new Jerusalem, breaking forth into the highest praises for establishing the public exercise of religion in its purity, never more to be driven into corners, as it was twice before; first by pagans, next by pagan christians. Observe, 3. The doxology or thanksgiving itself, Lord God Almighty, we give thee thanks for this begun overthrow of antichrist, which by thy almighty power thou wilt certainly carry on, being always the same, and as able to help thy church as ever, "because thou hast taken to thee thy great power and hast reigned." As if they had said, In the time of antichrist's full power, when thy church was under a bitter and bloody persecution, thy power seemed to be laid aside, and thou seemedst not to reign, having thy power obscured by his tyranny; but now thou showest thyself to be a ruler over all the world, both King of saints and King of nations. Observe, 4. The indignation and wrath which the friends of antichrist express upon this occasion, verse 18. The nations were angry, that is, the idolatrous nations; they who formerly persecuted, do now fret because they are overcome; they gnash their teeth at the successful progress of the gospel; and because thy wrath, that is, the time to execute thy wrath, is come, upon all idolaters and false worshippers. And the time of the dead that they should be judged and rewarded: that is, the time is now come, when those witnesses, which were civilly dead, and accounted as dead by the world, shall revive again, or, the time of the dead, that is, of those that have been slain by antichrist; the time is come that their blood shall be avenged, and all thy faithful servants and sufferers recompensed and rewarded; particularly thy prophets, whose work being greater, such shall their reward be also. "And all that fear thy name, both small and great;" that is, all true believers of a more private capacity, who have cleaved unto Christ's pure and undefiled religion, how obscure soever they have been in the world, none of these shall miss of a recompence, when God's time of rewarding is come, and then "he will destroy them which destroy the earth," that is, those bloody persecutors, who destroy the inhabitants of the earth by persecutions, or false doctrines. Observe, 5. The great blessing which follows upon the downfall of antichrist, verse 19. "The temple of God was opened;" alluding to the frequent shutting up of the temple at Jerusalem by idolatrous princes, Ahab and others, when the ark in which the law of God lay, was not seen; but Hezekiah and Josiah, those two reforming princes, opened the temple, and restored the true worship of almighty God. In like manner, during antichrist's reign, the temple of God was shut up, his true worship suppressed; but now since antichrist's falling, the temple is opened, the ark seen, the pure word of God expounded, and a more than ordinary presence of God (of which the ark was a symbol) found in his church. Well might the church then, upon this happy occasion, triumphingly say, "We give thee thanks, O Lord God Almighty, because thou hast taken to thee thy great power, and hast reigned."

CHAPTER XII.

In this chapter St John has, in a vision, a very clear representation given him of the state and condition of the true church; as also of satan, her grand adversary and assailant; together with the battle between them; the church's victory over him; and the triumph of the faithful for victory.

AND there appeared a great wonder in heaven; a woman clothed with the sun, and the moon under her feet, and upon her head a crown of twelve stars;

Observe here, 1. That by the woman we are to understand the christian church in her militant state, called a woman in regard of her weakness and dependency; as also in regard of her fruitfulness, she bringing forth many children unto God, which are born upon her knees. Observe, 2. This woman, the church, is said to appear in heaven, having her original from heaven, her conversation in heaven, her tendency towards heaven, and her dependency upon heaven. Observe, 3. The woman described by her rare perfections, which are three, 1. Clothed with the sun, that is, adorned with those graces, which Christ the Sun of Righteousness has put upon her, and environed with the pure light of the gospel shining about her. Having the moon under her feet, that is, the legal worship, according to some: the christian church out-shining now the Jewish state of imperfection, casting off, and trampling under the yoke of the Mosaic dispensation. Others by the moon understand the world, which is like the moon, full of spots, defiling and polluting, full of changes and alterations, the fashion of this world passeth away, 1 Cor. vii. 31. It is never long in one garb; and her having the moon under her feet implies, the church's being enabled by Christ to overcome and trample upon all the enjoyments and satisfactions of the world, and to despise all the affronts and insults of the world. 3. Upon her head a crown of twelve stars, that is, holding fast the pure doctrine of the gospel, first preached by the twelve apostles, and after them by succeeding ministers, which is as a crown on the church's head. Where note, That the apostles, and all faithful ministers, with them, are styled stars. As stars they shine before men, by the light of life and doctrine. As stars they shine with a borrowed light derived from the Sun of Righteousness. Again, as stars are in continual motion for the good of the universe, so are ministers of the gospel for the good of the church; as stars they shine in their own orb, attending the proper duty of their place and station; and as stars shine brightest in the cold winter-nights, so do they in the times of affliction and persecution.

2 And she being with child, cried, travailing in birth, and pained to be delivered.

The church, typified by a woman, was described in the former verse, by her rare perfections, in this verse by her weak and perilous condition, she cries like a woman in travail for delivery to God in her prayers, to men in her apologies. The plain sense is this, "that the christian church was possessed with an earnest desire to propagate the christian religion throughout the world, and she earnestly cried to God to assist her therein, and strove with utmost endeavours to accomplish this her design; and was truly solicitous to see the success of her labors to the lives of her members." Many and sore have been the sick and breeding fits which the church has conflicted with, by means of heretics and persecutors, which sometimes gave occasion to fear that she would certainly miscarry; but at last God sent her ease from heaven by the birth of a child, which caused the woman to forget all her sorrows; and the prayer of faith was then in the greatest activity, when the woman was found to be in the greatest extremity.

3 And there appeared another wonder in heaven, and behold, a great red dragon, having seven heads and ten horns, and seven crowns upon his heads.

4 And his tail drew the third part of the stars of heaven, and did cast them to the earth.—

The church was described before; her arch enemy, the devil, is described now; he is called a dragon for his subtilty, a great dragon for his power, a red dragon for his fiery cruelty. His seven heads denote his manifold subtleties, and mischievous contrivances, his devices and wicked imaginations against the church; his ten horns denote his vast power and great strength, both in himself and his members; also the number and power of his agents, who serve as horns to punish and hurt the church. His seven crowns upon his head denote his regal power, which he holds by usurpation, and his many victories and conquests which he obtains in the world, yet over none but those who are willingly overcome by him. The whole of the description represents satan as a powerful, subtle, cruel, victorious adversary. All which properties he discovers in the assault he makes upon the ministers of the church, called the stars of heaven, which he endeavours to cast down to the earth; that is, to hinder their shining in the firmament of the church. Hence learn, 1. What a mighty enemy the church has, fierce and fiery, red and bloody, full of craft and cruelty, of power and policy; and how deplorable her condition would be, if the Lord himself was not on her side. Learn, 2. Who is the prime author of all that cruelty and bloodshed against the church of God, even the red dragon with its heads and horns, his ministers and agents: the greatest monarchs upon the earth, if they gore and hurt the church, are the base heads and horns of this monstrous dragon.

—And the dragon stood before the woman which was ready to be delivered, for to devour her child as soon as it was born.

5 And she brought forth a man-child, who was to rule all nations with a rod of iron: and her child was caught up unto God, and to his throne.

6 And the woman fled into the wilderness, where she hath a place prepared of God, that they should feed her there a thousand two hundred and threescore days.

That is, "As Herod watched to destroy Christ as soon as he was born, Mat. ii. so while the church was endeavouring to propagate christianity, and make converts to Christ, the dragon watched, intending to devour them." The devil's great design is to crush every good thing in the beginning, to nip grace in the bud, to kill the infant church in the cradle, he is therefore said to stand before the woman; to prevent all possibility of her child's escape. Behold his bloody cruelty! but though he stood before her, he had no power to hurt or touch either mother or child; behold his powerful restraint! Observe farther, The child's birth, preservation, and preferment. 1. Its birth, she brought forth a child, not children, to see the paucity of the church's members, and also their unity; they are all but one man-child, make up all but one body, and the dragon's purpose was to devour all but one, and all at once. 2. Its preservation, the child is caught up to God and to his throne; that is, heaven took it immediately into his care and protection, out of the dragon's reach, to his shameful disappointment. 3. Its preferment, it was to rule all nations with a rod of iron: that is, with such severity, mixed with lenity, as was needful; the church shall prevail against all opposers. Observe lastly, After the woman's delivery, or flight into the wilderness, is set down, and her continuance there for a time together, with God's protection over her, and provision for her; a plain allusion to Elijah's flying into the wilderness from the rage of idolatrous and bloody Jezebel, and God's feeding him extraordinarily at the brook of Cherith. From the woman's, that is, the church's flying into the wilderness for a while, we learn, That the visibility of the church is not always conspicuous, to her enemies especially. 2. That it is sometimes lawful to fly in time of hot and bitter persecution; the woman fled into the wilderness. 3. In that the woman had a place, and food prepared for her, we learn, God's provident care for his church in the day and hour of her greatest extremities; when she lurks and hides herself in obscurity. During the time of antichrist's reign, God will take care that some shall feed her with wholesome food, the doctrine of the gospel, that sincere milk of the word, to the intent that she may grow thereby.

7 And there was war in heaven; Michael and his angels fought against the dragon, and the dragon fought and his angels;

8 And prevailed not, neither was there place found any more in heaven.

9 And the great dragon was cast out, that old serpent, called the devil and satan, which deceiveth the whole world; he was cast out into the earth, and his angels were cast out with him.

By Michael and his angels understand Christ, whose the angels are, and so much the name imports. Michael, that is, who like God: Christ is the likeness of his Father, his essential likeness. St. John in a vision beholds Michael and his angels combating with the dragon and his angels; yea, vanquishing and overcoming them. This may comfort the church under all her conflicts, that at length her Michael will finally prevail, and she in him. Our Lord Jesus Christ, by the powerful preaching of the gospel, has weakened the kingdom of sin, satan and antichrist. His angels are his ministers, martyrs; and confessors, those particularly of the first ages, who by their cries to God and apologies to their rulers, by their holy lives, and patient deaths, did overcome their enemies. And thus Michael and his angels, Christ and his ministers, fought against the dragon and his angels, against satan and his cruel instruments, who were so far from prevailing, that they lost ground continually; the christians overcame them by their faith and patience. And the great dragon was cast down: he was by the preaching of the gospel deposed from being worshipped as a God, and his power was taken away. From the whole note, 1. That though Michael, Christ alone, be able to overcome the dragon, and all his angelic powers, yet for his own greater honor, and their greater confusion, he overcomes him and them by his ministers and faithful servants. Note, 2. If Michael our prince be with us, Christ Jesus the captain of our salvation, our leader, then though the combat may be sharp, yet the victory is sure: for if he be for us, who can (successfully) be against us? Note, 3. That satan and his angels were cast out together; for of the devil and his instruments, the lot shall be alike; they sin together, and they shall suffer together; and shall never be parted. Lord, how dreadful will an imprisonment with devils and damned spirits be to eternal ages? To lie for ever with satan in that mysterious fire of hell, whose strange property it is always to torture, but never to kill; or always to kill, but never to consume. The dragon was not only cast out of heaven with his angels, but both were cast down into hell, even into that lake which burns with fire and brimstone.

10 And I heard a loud voice saying in heaven, Now is come salvation, and strength, and the kingdom of our God, and the power of his Christ; for the accuser of our brethren is cast down, which accused them before our God day and night.

11 And they overcame him by the blood of the Lamb, and by the word of their testimony; and they loved not their lives unto the death.

12 Therefore rejoice, ye heavens, and ye that dwell in them. Woe to the inhabitants of the earth, and of the sea: for the devil is come down unto you, having great wrath, because he knoweth that he hath but a short time.

After Michael and his angels, Christ and his followers, victory over the dragon and his angels, over satan and his instruments, here follows a solemn thanksgiving for the devil's downfall: the saints in heaven join with believers on earth in this song of confidence and triumph: when they speak of God, they say our God; and when they speak of the church below, they say our brethren; behold a sweet communion between the church militant and the church triumphant: indeed they constitute and make up but one church, one family, one household; the whole family in heaven and earth is, but one. Observe farther, Another name here given to satan, the accuser of the brethren; he accuses them continually before God, and by his instruments before men; the primitive christians were accused by their enemies to the magistrates as guilty of the most villainous practices in their religious assemblies: and behold the assiduity of satan in accusing the saints day and night; but blessed be God, as satan is a continual accuser, Christ is a continual mediator. Observe again, How the saints overcome satan. 1. By the blood of the Lamb; that is, by faith in his blood. 2. By the word of their testimony; that is, by their preaching, professing, and practising the word of God. 3. By their sufferings and martyrdom, they loved not their lives unto death: that is, they loved not their lives so well but that they were willing to expose them to death, rather than renounce the cause of Christ, and desert their holy profession. Observe lastly, After this great exultation and joy in heaven for the devil's downfall, here is a denunciation of Woe to the inhabitants of the earth, and of the sea, upon that account; that is, to all earthly, sensual men; whether they inhabit the continent, or any island in the sea; because the devil is come down full of rage, knowing that his time is short to execute his malice in. Learn hence, 1. Who is the author of wrath, and malice, and revenge: and whose children they are that partake of that spirit and temper: The devil has great wrath; that is, his character, and the very soul and spirit of the apostate nature. Learn, 2. That something good may be learned from the evil one; satan is very busy, doubly diligent, because his time is short; so should we be; our grave and coffin are at hand, our glass has but a little sand; since but a few leaves are remaining in the book of our lives unfilled up, it concerns us to write the closer, and the faster too; as satan's time for mischief is short, so is our time for doing good.

13 And when the dragon saw that he was cast into the earth, he persecuted the woman which brought forth the man-child.

14 And to the woman were given two wings of a great eagle, that she might fly into the wilderness, into her place: where she is nourished for a time, and times, and half a time, from the face of the serpent.

Observe here, The incessant and restless malice of satan and his instruments against the church; neither his fore-mentioned disappointment, his present foil and downfall, nor his fear of future destruction, could move him to desist; but having attempted to destroy the church with the fire of persecution before, he endeavours to drown it with a flood of errors now, Diabolus mutat consilium, non deponit malitiam; the devil sometimes changes his methods in doing mischief, but never lays down his malice; he persecutes the woman, the church of Christ, after another manner, namely, by a flood of errors and heresies. Observe, 2. The care that God took of his church's preservation from this fatal mischief also; to the woman were given wings of a great eagle, for flight into the wilderness: that is, all means and ways of evasion, which God out of his care for his church provides for her safety and protection in the time of trouble; the church's flight in times of persecution is by no means to be censured or condemned, especially when God by his providence provides her wings; that is, gives her opportunity so to do. Observe, 3. The place she flies into for safety, (namely, into the wilderness), called her place, because prepared by God for her safety; here she is nourished; that is, hath spiritual food provided for her by God, and a number of faithful ministers are qualified for the feeding of her; for a time, and times, and half a time; that is, for a certain time determined by God, but altogether unknown to us; thus when the church meets with new distresses, God provides for her new deliverances.

15 And the serpent cast out of his mouth water as a flood, after the woman: that he might cause her to be carried away of the flood.

16 And the earth helped the woman, and the earth opened her mouth, and swallowed up the flood which the dragon cast out of his mouth.

17 And the dragon was wroth with the woman, and went to make war with the remnant of her seed, which keep the commandments of God, and have the testimony of Jesus Christ.

Two things are here observable; a new danger, ver. 15. a renewed succour, ver. 16. Observe, 1. A new danger;

this is set forth. 1. By the author of it, the serpent; the former attempt against the church was managed by the wrathful dragon, this is contrived by the subtle serpent; open cruelty is more dreadful, but subtle policy is more dangerous; the cunning devil is a more mischievous enemy to the church of Christ than the raging devil; subtle Julian did the church more mischief than bloody Nero, or Dioclesian. Learn hence, That what mischief satan cannot effect by open cruelty, he will attempt against the church by subtle policy; when he fails as a dragon, he will try what he can do as a serpent. 2. Observe, the matter as well as the author of this danger, "The serpent cast out of his mouth water as a flood;" that is, a flood of errors, heresies, false doctrines, and corrupt opinions, cast out of the mouth of the corrupting seducers, endangering the very essence and being of the church of Christ, particularly the Arian heresy, which prodigiously overspread the world in its time. Heresy may be fitly compared to a flood; it is a corrupting and defiling flood, it is a swelling and increasing flood, it is a drowning and overwhelming flood. Learn hence, That the serpent's flood of errors and false doctrines, is the worst and chiefest of the church's dangers. "The serpent cast out a flood to carry away the woman." Observe, 3. The church's reasonable relief and succour; "The earth helped the woman by opening her mouth and swallowing up the flood, which the dragon cast out of his mouth;" by the earth some understand earthly ones, wicked men, who are said to help the woman, not intentionally, but eventually, by their greedy swallowing down those errors which come out of the dragon's mouth, hearkening to his lies, and believing his errors for truths; others by the earth understand the kings and rulers of the earth, helping the woman, by calling synods and councils to stem the tide, to dam this flood, and to condemn these errors and heresies, which by their overflowing endangered the church's ruin; the devil raised four abominable errors presently after the church had obtained peace, and there was a great concurrence of magistrates and ministers in confuting, censuring, and condemning the same, in and by their councils and synods. 1. The heresy of Arius, who denied the divinity of Christ, this was condemned by the council of Nice, called by Constantine. 2. The heresy of Macedonius, who denied the personality of the Holy Ghost, condemned by a council at Constantinople, called by Theodosius the first. 3. The heresy of Nestorius, who asserted that Christ had two persons, as well as two natures, condemned by a council at Ephesus, called by Theodosius the second. 4. The heresy of Eutychus, who confounded Christ's natures, making him to have but one nature, as well as to be one person: this was condemned by the council of Chalcedon: thus the earth helped the woman; these four councils tended very much to the maintaining the truth, and preserving the church from the flood of error and heresy which the dragon cast out of his mouth. Observe lastly, The dragon's rage, ver. 17. "Hewas wroth with the woman, and made war with the remnant of her seed;" that is, he was greatly enraged because the woman was extraordinarily helped, and his designs wonderfully disappointed, and when he saw he could not ruin the whole church he resolves to attack some particular members of it, even such "as kept the commandment of God, and had the testimony of Christ;" that is, those who kept close to the Scriptures, which contain the doctrine of faith, and testify that Christ is the only Saviour of the world. Now, from the dragon's making war with the remnant of the woman's seed, we learn how insatiable the bloodthirstiness of satan and his instruments is, who when they had killed the witnesses before, and many others, yet can they not rest till they have killed this little remnant, and made themselves drunk with the blood of the saints; and never let Protestants expect any other, or any better usage at the hands of Romanists, with whom this is a certain principle, that heretics in a nation are to be extirpated root and branch, where it may safely be done; that is, when they are not too numerous, and the loss of one of our lives may not cost two of their own. If any say that Papists are now become better natured by being under the restraint of our laws, I wish them that they may never be tempted out of their humanity by advantages of power; and as Almighty God has once more delivered the neck of this nation from the pinchings of the antichristian yoke, may our sins never provoke him more to deliver us into the hands of those men, whose tender mercies are cruel. Amen.

CHAPTER XIII.

In the visions of this, and the following chapter, are represented to St. John the great straits which such christians as were the sincere worshippers of the true God should be reduced to; on the one hand, they are threatened with damnation, if they do worship the beast, chap. xiv. 9, 10. On the other hand, they are threatened with death, if they do not worship it, chap. xiii. 15. So that whenever this should happen, it would be a time of great trial to faithful christians, and therefore it is added, verse 12. Here is the patience of the saints: this is represented in St. John's vision, as the last and extremest persecution of the true worshippers of God, which shall precede the final downfall of Babylon. And when this should happen, when he tells us, that the patience of the saints would be tried to purpose, and it would then be seen who are faithful to God, and constant to his truth: the particulars hereof follow.

AND I stood upon the sand of the sea, and saw a beast rise up out of the sea, having seven heads and ten horns, and upon his horns ten crowns, and upon his heads the name of blasphemy.

Observe here, 1. The place where St. John had the vision related in this chapter; he apprehended himself to stand on the sea-shore; a place fit for the sight he was to see, namely, a beast rising up out of the sea. Where note, That it is usual in the prophets, Daniel especially, to set out temporal monarchies oppressing the church by great beasts. Whence we learn, What a base and vile, what a low and mean esteem God has of the mightiest enemies of the church and people; let the world admire them as gods, if they abuse their power God calls them beasts: and as such, in his own time, they shall be destroyed. I saw a beast rise up out of the sea. Observe, 2. The monstrous description of that beast which St. John saw; it had seven heads, denoting, say some, the seven hills upon which Rome stands; or the seven sorts of governments successively in the Roman state, say others; and ten horns, that is, ten kings under Rome, and condescend with her. Where note, That all such kings, be they ever so mighty or many, which persecute sincere christianity, are vile in the esteem of God, accounted no better than the horns of a bloody beast, which Almighty God, in the end will either blunt or break. And upon the horns, ten crowns, which crowns they hold of God, who is the King of kings. Sovereignty is from heaven, however men come by it, or however they abuse it; which shows the horrid ingratitude of those princes, who having received their power from God, do improve it against him, and turn it upon him by whom they reign. And upon his head, the name of blasphemy; those that apply this description of the beast to Roman Pagan, understand hereby their paganish idol worship in general; and their deifying of the Roman emperors in particular. Others, as most protestants, who apply it to Rome Papal, by this name of blasphemy, understand those blasphemous titles which are given to the pope, as, "Lord God, The universal Head, The Husband of the church The light which came into the world," &c. Which are the incommunicable attributes of Christ; and by flatterers and admirers frequently given to the Papal antichrist, "Upon whose head is the name of blasphemy."

2 And the beast which I saw was like unto a leopard, and his feet were as the feet of a bear, and his mouth as the mouth of a lion; and the dragon gave him his power, and his seat, and great authority.

St. John here proceeds in giving a further description of this monstrous beast; it was in appearance like a leopard, spotted with divers kinds of idolatry, with variety of idols; with feet like a bear, denoting its strength and fierceness; its mouth like a lion, that is, cruel and ravenous. Next, an account is given from whom this beast receives its power and authority; the dragon, that is, the devil by God's permission, gave unto this beast power and great authority, to deceive by strong delusions, and hurt the soul, as also to kill and destroy the body. Note here, That when the dragon is said to give the beast his throne and power, his seat and great authority, we must not understand it as by right, for all power is from God, but as by usurpation belonging to him. That authority which is claimed to depose kings, to dispose of kingdoms, to dispense with the laws of God, all this is from the dragon, and in no wise from God, "The dragon gave the beast his power, his seat, and great authority."

3 And I saw one of his heads as it were wounded to death; and his deadly wound was healed: and all the world wondered after the beast.

Here St. John farther declares what he saw concerning this beast, namely, 1. That one of its heads was wounded; by which head many understand the fall of the ancient imperial powers, the decay of its wonted glory; and that ample jurisdiction which Rome heretofore had under the pagan emperors: and by the wounding of this head, they understand the abolishing of paganism and idolatry, and putting a stop to persecution by the christian emperors. 2. It is asserted, That his deadly wound was healed: namely, when idolatry, The same for substance with the pagan and old heathenish idolatry, but in a new dress, was gradually restored by the papal powers. 3. Here is the effect of this healing, all the earth wondered after the beast, that is, followed him in blind devotion. Where, 1. Observe, Who the admirers of the beast are, the earth, the men of the world: no wonder to see them seduced! 2. This admiration is general, the whole earth wonder after the beast: how false is it then, that multitude is a note of the true church. Behold the several instances of the world's wondering after the beast at Rome; they receive their doctrine and worship from him, they make all their appeals to him, all the church officers receive their ordination from him, and are installed by him.

4 And they worshipped the dragon which gave power unto the beast: and they worshipped the beast, saying, Who is like unto the beast? who is able to make war with him?

5 And there was given unto him a mouth speaking great things and blasphemies: and power was given unto him to continue forty and two months.

6 And he opened his mouth in blasphemy against God, to blaspheme his name, and his tabernacle, and them that dwell in heaven.

From admiration in the former verse, they proceed to adoration in this, they worship both the dragon and the beast, that is, they did worship idols, which are often in scripture called devils; like the Gentiles of old, who are said by St. Paul to sacrifice to devils, and not unto God, 1 Cor. x. 20. Behold here a vast difference between God's judgment and the opinion of the seduced world. They think the worship they give to a creature is given to God; but God accounts it as given to the devil, who is the author of all idolatry. Note next, That as the seduced world worshipped the beast, so do they extol his earthly grandeur and surpassing power, saying, "Who is like unto the beast? who is able to make war with him?" Who can resist his power and greatness? The greatest princes are not able to withstand him. See how pomp and worldly grandeur dazzles the eyes of its admirers. Note farther, That a mouth was given this beast to speak, that is, a power by the devil's instigation and God's permission, to utter blasphemies against the Most High. 1. The blasphemous mouth of the beast is opened against the name of God, that is, against the word of God, by which God makes himself known, as a man is known by his name. Now, the word of God is blasphemed by the beast and his worshippers, when it is charged with obscurity, with imperfection, called a dead letter, and a nose of wax, &c. The spirit of God is then blasphemed, when his divinely inspired writings are thus vilified and undervalued. 2. This blasphemous mouth is opened not only against God's name, but against his tabernacle, the place of his instituted worship, meaning by his tabernacle the true church, wherein God is worshipped according to his word. God accounts himself blasphemed when his true worshippers are called heretics, schismatics, and in a way of scorn, Hugonots, and the synagogue of satan. 3. They blaspheme them that dwell in heaven, by which some understand the holy martyrs now in heaven, whom they frequently called damned heretics, blackening their names, and blasting their reputations; others understand it of some saints in heaven, whom they pretend to honor, as the Virgin Mary, &c. They blaspheme them, namely, by speaking of them, and praying to them blasphemously, as when they bid the holy Virgin, "in the right of a mother, command her Son." Hence observe, That when we give that honor and worship to saints and angels, which is only due to God, it is an idolatrous and impious blaspheming of them that dwell in heaven; were the Virgin Mary sensible in heaven of that idolatrous adoration which is given her here on earth, with what indignation and disdain would she look down upon this sacrilegious violence offered to her only Son, in robbing him of that divine honor which is peculiarly due to his divine nature? for religious adoration is peculiar to a deity. *

7 And it was given unto him to make war with the saints, and to overcome them: and power was given him over all kindreds, and tongues, and nations.

8 And all that dwell upon the earth shall worship him, whose names are not written in the book of life of the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world.

Observe here, 1. A war proclaimed; the beast makes war upon the saints, by bloodshed and persecution, and by the force of those weapons overcomes them; that is, to outward appearance, and in the opinion of the world, they seem to be totally overcome, because visibly slain; but really do the saints overcome him by their patience and constancy under sufferings; and by rejecting his cursed idolatry, and adhering to the truth. Observe, 2. The large extent of the beast's power that was given him, namely, over all kindreds, tongues, and nations. This must not be understood of individual persons, nor universally of all nations, but of the nations belonging to the Roman empire; whole nations were carried away with his idolatry, though not all of every nation. Christ's flock is a little flock, compared with antichrist's herd; how wrong a note then is multitude of the right church? Observe, 3. That as the power of the beast is universal, so is the worship also; All that dwell on the earth shall worship him; that is, the generality of the Roman empire shall obey and honor him, and comply with him in his idolatry; few comparatively refusing it. Yet, 4. We have a number excepted, whose names are writ- ten in the book of life. Blessed be God for this comfortable restriction: all are not worshippers of the beast. Christ has his number of faithful ones, who are not defiled by antichrist's pollutions; a number whose conversations are in heaven, and whose names are written there, in the book of life, called the book of the Lamb: because it is by him, and by the merit of his blood, that we obtain eternal life. Observe lastly, The title here given to our Lord Jesus Christ, he is styled the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world, and that in several respects, 1. In the purpose and decree of God. 2. In the promise of God made from the beginning, Gen. iii. 15. 3. In respect of the types, shadows, and sacrifices, whereby his death was prefigured and represented, Christ was slain typically in those sacrifices which Adam and Abel offered up unto God daily. 4. In respect of the virtue and efficacy of his death which was effectual to all that truly believe in him, from the first promise made of him. The merits of Christ's death have saved all that have been saved from the foundation of the world. Behold here, The tender care of God in providing for our salvation before we were, yea, before the world was; and observe also, that the saints of God, in all ages, have been saved the same way, and by the same mean, namely, by faith in the death of Christ, which has extended itself to all true believers from the beginning of the world; and the efficacy of it will reach to all such, even to the end of the world; the virtue of the sacrifice is as fresh as the first moment it was slain, the death of Christ is of eternal efficacy.

9 If any man have an ear, let him hear.

10 He that leadeth into captivity shall go into captivity; he that killeth with the sword, must be killed with the sword. Here is the patience and the faith of the saints.

Observe here, 1. That this acclamation, If any man have an ear, let him hear, it is added in scripture, when something went before, which required a very diligent attention and close application of mind; If any man have an ear, that is, a spiritual understanding to discern the meaning of what has been foretold, let him ponder and consider what is here revealed concerning this beast, and take heed that he be not found amongst the number of the worshippers of it. Observe, 2. The consolation here given to the saints, from the consideration of God's just retribution to his and their enemies, "He that leadeth into captivity, shall go into captivity:" that is, the beast, who has brought many of the saints into captivity, shall himself at length be taken captive, and thrown into that lake of fire and brimstone, spoken of, chap. xix. 20. With what measure antichrist metes to others, it shall be measured to him again: God has as many ways to hurt his church's enemies, as they have to hurt his people; if they lead into captivity, so can he: if they kill with the sword, so will he. Observe, 3. The end and design of God in suffering antichrist's rage to break forth against the church; it is for the trial of his church's faith and patience, Here is the patience and faith of the saints. Where note, 1. That none can stand under, or bear up under sufferings like saints, 2. That under great sufferings, saints themselves will have great occasion for the exercise of faith and patience. 3. That the faith and patience of the saints will be made very conspicuous by great and sharp sufferings. 4. That faith and patience must accompany each other in suffering times. 5. Patience is the soul's shoulder to bear what is afflictive at present; faith is the christian's eye to discover a glorious deliverance to come; where no patience is, it is a token of no faith; and where no faith is, there will appear great impatience. Behold then, the faith and patience of the saints.

11 And I beheld another beast coming up out of the earth: and he had two horns like a lamb, and he spake as a dragon.

12 And he exerciseth all the power of the first beast before him, and causeth the earth, and them which dwell therein, to worship the first beast, whose deadly wound was healed.

13 And he doeth great wonders, so that he maketh fire come down from heaven on the earth, in the sight of men.

14 And deceiveth them that dwell on the earth by the means of those miracles which he had power to do in the sight of the beast: saying to them that dwell on the earth, That they should make an image to the beast, which had the wound by a sword, and did live.

Here St. John enters upon the description of a second beast, very different from the former, yet not succeeding the former, but appearing during his continuance; and this beast (whoever he is) we find sundry ways here described, namely, 1. By his original, he ascended out of the earth, verse 11, which denotes his rise from a small beginning to a mighty height, as those things which from small seeds grow out of the earth to be tall trees. Thus has one risen from being episcopus urbis, to be episcopus orbis. 2. He is said to have two horns, whereas the former beast had ten, verse 1. which signifies ten kingdoms, into which the Roman empire, after its dissolution, should be divided. Accordingly, by the two horns here, in all reason, may be understood two of those kingdoms of which this beast, (whoever he be) shall be possessed. 3. He is said to look like a lamb, but to speak like a dragon; that is, to pretend to great meekness, and make a show of much lenity and mildness in his proceedings, but should really be very cruel; pretending to do all without violence, but doing indeed all by force, assisted by his armed dragons, and booted apostles with javelins in their hands. 4. It is affirmed, verse 12, that he shall arise during the continuance of the first beast, and engage in his cause, assuming to himself as great, or a greater power, than any emperors did before him, causing the earth, that is, all earthly-minded men who are subject to him, to worship the first beast, that is, to yield as great reverence and obedience to his decrees for establishing idolatry, as ever the people did under the pagan emperors. 5. He is remarkable for working wonders, and particularly for causing fire to come down from heaven in the sight of men; that is, he seemeth to the deluded multitude to do as great miracles as Elias did, who brought down fire from heaven to confirm the religion he professed: in like manner the beast here works wonders seemingly great, lying wonders, false miracles, such as false prophets may work, and have wrought for confirming their false doctrines: accordingly we find this beast here called the false prophet, elsewhere, chap. xvi. 8, 9. 6. He requires the inhabitants of the earth to make an image to the beast, that is, he persuades them, now professing christianity, to introduce and bring in such a kind of idolatry, that the old heathenish idolatry may seem to revive again. Here note, That the idolatry of the church of Rome is a living image of the old heathenish idolatry; this is but the image of that, that was performed to heathen deities, this to departed saints. Popery, says the learned Mr. More, is such a christianity, as in all points answers the model of the old execrable heathenism, with which the gentiles were enamoured then as are the papists now: thus the wounded and dead image of pagan idolatry revived, and lives again in papal idolatry: good God! that any persons professing to know and worship the blessed Jesus, should thus dishonor him, by intermixing the old heathenish superstitions or something worse, with his holy institutions.

15 And he had power to give life unto the image of the beast, that the image of the beast should both speak and cause that as many as would not worship the image of the beast should be killed.

17 And that no man might buy or sell save he that had the mark, or the name of the beast, or the number of his name.

18 Here is wisdom. Let him that hath understanding count the number of the beast; for it is the number of a man: and his number is six hundred threescore and six,

St. John proceeds here to give a farther character and description of the beast, which he had begun to describe, verse 11. And 1. His bloody cruelty is set forth, verse 15. "He causeth them to be killed that would not worship the image of the beast." Where, mark, it is not said that he killed them himself, not challenging directly the power of life and death to himself; but he causeth them to be killed, namely, by the secular power, by kings and princes, who are the horns of the beast, and who give their power and strength to the beast, and war against the Lamb. Again, 2. After his cruelty follows his compulsion, he causes all sorts of men, high and low, bond and free, to receive a mark in their right hand, and in their forehead, in allusion to an ancient custom, which was to mark servants and soldiers on the arm, by which it was known what master or captain they belonged to; in like manner the beast here is said to have a mark for those that are his, which mark seems probably to have been an open owning of him, an alive engagement for him, a professed subjection to him. 3. The beast is here said to interdict and forbid all trade and commerce with those that had not his mark, verse 17. "He causeth that no man might buy or sell, save he that had the mark of the beast." Several bulls and decrees have been sent forth from Rome, commanding that no traffic or commerce be had with any heretic in buying or selling, but only with those that profess themselves members of the Romish church. 4. It is added, that the Number of the beast is six hundred sixty six, that is, that the numeral letters of a certain word or name being computed, should amount to that number. I shall close this chapter with the words of a great man, archbishop Tillotson, on Rev. xiv. 13, page 329, "Unto whom all the forementioned characters of the beast do agree, and especially the number of his name, I shall not presume to conjecture, much less positively to determine, because it is said to require a particular wisdom and understanding to find it out: "Here is wisdom, let him that hath understanding count the number of the beast." However the event will discover it." And again, on St. Luke ix. 55. he thus speaks; "It is believed by many, and not without cause, that the Pope and his faction are the antichristian beast; I will say no more than I know in this matter; I am not certain that it is he that is particularly designed in Scripture by that name; but however that be, I challenge antichrist himself, whoever he is, and whenever he comes, to do worse and wickeder things than he has done; verily it almost looks uncharitable, barely to relate what these men have not blushed to act."

CHAPTER XIV.

The design and scope of this chapter is threefold: first, to show that during the reign of the beast, mentioned in the foregoing chapter, Christ had a church, a number of virgins, of pure and unpolluted souls, who did zealously and sincerely worship him. Secondly, That the light of the gospel, which had been so long suppressed, should at length break forth gloriously, in the faithful preaching of it, to the downfall of Babylon, and the comfort of Zion, the church of God. Thirdly, The chapter acquaints us with the happy condition of such as die in the Lord; and particularly of the martyrs which die for the Lord; and concludes with an account of the dreadful punishments which God would inflict upon their persecutors.

AND I looked, and lo, a Lamb stood on the mount Sion, and with him an hundred forty and four thousand, having his Father's name written in their foreheads.

This verse represents to us a fresh vision which St. John had, in which several things are very observable, as, 1. What and whom St. John saw, a Lamb, by whom Christ is to be understood. 2. The posture which this Lamb was found in, he stood, showing thereby his readiness to deliver his church, and to do every thing that is needful for her. 3. The place where he stood on, mount Sion, that is, in the midst of the church. Christ ever has been, is, and will be present with his church, even to the end, although his presence with her is not always sensibly perceived, his care is mysteriously exercised; he is then taking most care of her when he seems to take least, nay, when the men of the world think he takes none at all. Observe, 4. His company and attendants; and they are described two ways, 1. By their number, to wit, an hundred forty and four thousand, whereby the collective body of the whole church is to be understood, and intimates to us, that in the worst of times, even when apostasy and persecution do most universally prevail, Christ never wants a church, and is not without a number of true worshippers. 3. They are described by their badge or marks, having the Father's name written on their foreheads; in opposition to the mark of the beast mentioned in the foregoing chapter, and in allusion to a custom amongst men, who put their mark or names upon their goods, especially upon such as are very precious, as silver or gold vessels, and the like; so that the mark of the Father's name upon the forehead denotes both the precious esteem which God has of his people, and also intimates their open profession and owning of him for their Lord and Master, and their faithful adherence to his worship. Learn hence, That the sincere worship of God, with the open and avowed profession of his holy and undefiled religion, accompanied with a suitable conversation, is a better mark and note of the true church than multitudes and numbers, which are a note of the antichristian synagogue; the world wonders after the beast, when mount Sion here affords only an hundred and forty-four thousand, which had the Father's name written on their foreheads.

2 And I heard a voice from heaven, as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of a great thunder: and I heard the voice of harpers, harping with their harps:

3 And they sung as it were a new song before the throne, and before the four beasts and the elders; and no man could learn that song but the hundred and forty and four thousand, which were redeemed from the earth.

St. John here describes the true worshippers of Christ in the midst of antichristian idolatry, where we have, 1. The acceptable worship they perform, prayer and praise, and heavenly exercise, which like thunder, and the voice of many waters, sounds loud in the ears of God, and is certainly heard by him, and is melodious like the harp, and therefore acceptable to him as the sweetest music is to us. 2. The persons described who perform this acceptable worship, such as were redeemed from the earth; where the earth is not for earthly minded men the false church; the meaning is, that God has fetched this small number of true worshippers, the hundred and forty-four thousand, from among the false worshippers and impure ones, he hath rescued them from the world of idolaters; and from the superstitious multitude. 3. The persons described before whom this worship is performed, before the throne, and before the four beasts and elders: Before the throne, to show the reverence and sincerity wherewith they performed the same as in the sight of the great and glorious God; and before the beasts and elders, that is, the whole congregation of the saints, according to that of the Psalmist, Psalm 82: 7. "God is greatly to be feared in the assemblies of his saints, and to be had in reverence of all them that are round about him."

4 These are they which were not defiled with women: for they are virgins. These are they which follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth. These were redeemed from among men, being the first-fruits unto God and to the Lamb.

St. John proceeds here in describing the true worshippers of God, which would not comply with antichristian idolatry. 1. He styles them virgins, thereby intimating that they are the chaste spouse of Christ, and the true church, who worship God alone with religious worship, and they have not defiled themselves with women, that is, spiritually committed whoredom; they have not been inveigled with the whore to commit spiritual fornication. Where note, That idolatry is a filthy sin, it is as odious to God as whoredom and uncleanness; and an idolatrous church is a filthy whore, unworthy to claim the title of a mother, unless it be the mother of fornications. 2. They are said to follow the Lamb whithersoever he goes; this is spoken in opposition to those who followed the beast, and denotes their imitation of Christ's example, and their firm adherence to the purity of his doctrine and worship, although it exposes them to hazard and danger. 3. They are called the first fruits unto God and the Lamb, which denotes their paucity, like a few sheaves in comparison of the whole harvest; their sanctity, the first-fruits were holy to the Lord, and were his peculiar portion, also their safety and security, as the first fruits were God's portion, so it was both sacrilegious and unsafe to rob God of his portion. By calling them the first-fruits which were holy to the Lord, we see the special interest and propriety that God has in his faithful servants and true worshippers beyond all others, they are his peculiar portion, his inheritance, his treasure, which he will ever take care of, and be concerned for.

5 And in their mouth was found no guile: for they are without fault before the throne of God.

Here St. John closes the description of the forementioned followers of the Lamb. 1. With the character of their integrity, like the Lamb, no guile is found in their mouth, as there was none in his, 1 Pet. ii. 22. they were free from that hypocrisy which was found amongst antichrist's followers, who profess to worship God, but adore their idols: Sincerity and uprightness of heart towards God and man was found with them. 2. They are said to be without fault before God, which may be understood comparatively; they have no such faults as antichrist's followers are guilty of; they worship God aright, and are approved by him; or if absolutely, we must understand it of their glorification in heaven, where all the saints are without spot, and blameless before the throne of God, perfectly like unto God and the Lamb, as well in purity as in immortality.

6 And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people,

7 Saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come: and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters.

Here St. John has another vision of an angel flying in the midst of heaven with great swiftness, which interpreters apprehend to signify the faithful minister's zeal and diligence in preaching the glad tidings of the gospel to a lost world. Where note, 1. The title given to the gospel of Christ, it is called the everlasting gospel; so it is, partly in regard of its author the everlasting God, partly because it promises and offers everlasting life, but chiefly because it was preached from the beginning of the world; and shall continue to the end of the world, and never be abrogated, as the legal administration was. Note, 2. The universality of that grace and salvation which in and by the gospel is held forth and tendered even unto all nations, tongues, kindred, and people; so that none are debarred, but those who by impenitency and unbelief do wilfully and finally debar themselves. Note, 3. That God sending the everlasting gospel to be preached, is here called the hour of his judgment, the preaching the gospel is the hour of mercy to some, but of wrath and judgment to others, even to all refusers and contemners; and accordingly all are warned to fear God, and give glory to him, and instead of worshipping idols and images, to worship the true God according to his will revealed in his word.

8 And there followed another angel, saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication,

Here we have the second angel's proclamation, denouncing the fall of Babylon, whose fall is in the prophecy threatened, and in the threatening ingeminated; Babylon is fallen, is fallen, to show the certainty of her downfall: and it is observable how this comes in, immediately after the restoring of the gospel, mentioned in the foregoing verses, "I saw an angel fly, having the everlasting gospel to preach," verse 6. "And there followed another angel, saying, Babylon is fallen," verse 8. Whence learn, That it is the zealous and faithful preaching of the gospel which is the ruin of antichrist, and the means of his downfall and destruction; this is the breath of the Lord's mouth, by which he is consumed, Babylon is fallen, is fallen. Quest. What is here meant by Babylon? Ans. All agree that literal Babylon is not here meant, which was the chief city of Chaldaea, but spoken figuratively; and it is as generally agreed that by Babylon is Rome here intended: some will have it Rome Pagan, under the Heathen emperors, others Rome Papal, under the antichristian tyranny, and that she is paralleled with Babylon for her idolatry and cruelty, yea, far exceeding her in both, "for in her is found the blood of the prophets, of the saints, and of all that were slain upon the earth," Rev. xviii. 24. Observe next, her ruin declared in the present tense, is fallen; as if already accomplished; and ingeminated, Is fallen, is fallen; which repetition denotes both the certainty of her fall, and the joy which the church should express upon that occasion; though Babylon be never so great, yet she shall fall, she shall assuredly fall; and it is the church's duty to pray, that as it is in the prophecy, so it may be in the history, that Babylon is fallen, and to express the highest joy upon that great occasion. Observe lastly, The cause of Babylon's ruin is here assigned, she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication. Where, 1. Note, That by fornications, her errors, idolatries, and false worship are understood. Note, 2. That these are compared to wine upon several accounts. Is wine pleasant to the palate? so is idolatry to corrupt nature, which is hugely pleased with a pompous worship, and a sensual religion. Is wine inflaming? so is idolatry: inflaming themselves with idols, Isa. lvii. 5. Does the wine deceive, and insensibly steal upon the drinker, and intoxicate him ere he is aware of it? so doth error and idolatry grow upon persons by insensible degrees; and accordingly, chap. xiii. the beast is said to deceive them that dwell on the earth: in a word, as persons drunk with wine are altogether incapable of counsel and advice from their best friends, in like manner such as are drunk with error and idolatry, with the wine of the whore's fornication, are besotted, benumbed, will not acknowledge their error, nor receive instruction. Note, 3. That this wine, as sweet as it is, is called the wine of wrath, partly because it inflames them that are drunk therewith with rage and cruel fury against sincere worshippers, and partly because it brings the wrath of God upon them that drink it; little do idolaters think of this, because it is a worship of their own invention, it pleases them because it feasts their outward senses, it is as grateful as wine unto them, but they forget that this wine is mixed with wrath, even with the wrath of God, the dregs of which shall be wrung out, and all idolaters shall drink them up.

9 And the third angel followed them, saying with a loud voice, If any man worship the beast with his image, and receive his mark in his forehead, or in his hand,

10 The same shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God, which is poured out without mixture into the cup of his indignation; and he shall be tormented with fire and brimstone in the presence of the holy angels, and in the presence of the Lamb:

11 And the smoke of their torment ascendeth up for ever and ever: and they have no rest day nor night who worship the beast and his image, and whosoever receiveth the mark of his name.

Observe here, The great and special care which Almighty God takes to warn men and women of those dreadful plagues, which should most certainly come upon the heads of idolaters; "a third angel followed, crying with a loud voice;" O how good is God, in that he doth always premonish before he punishes! warns before he strikes, and advises all not to partake with others in their sins, lest they be partakers of their plagues? Observe, 2. A most dreadful denunciation of the wrath of God, against all those who shall "worship the beast and his image," that is, submit to the enjoined idolatry, and "receive his mark in their forehead, or hands," that is, yield obedience to the beast as a servant, and openly own subjection to him as his slaves. Lord! what a dreadful guiltiness is it to follow antichrist, and to continue obstinate in idolatry, after God has sent one angel after another, minister after minister, to acquaint them both with their sin and danger. Observe, 3. The denunciation itself in several parts of it. 1. They shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God," that is, for their sin shall partake of severe judgments, the effects of God's wrath. Mark, Here is wine for wine: for the "wine of Babylon's fornication," here is "wine of the wrath of God;" the former wine was not so sweet, but the latter shall be as sharp. 2. Here is the quality of this wrath, "it is poured out without mixture;" its being poured out shows the abundance of it, and without mixture, shows that it is without the least drop of mercy to allay the extremity of their torment. 3. It is called "a cup of indignation," thereby intimating, that it is not the correction of a father, which is accompanied with lenity and love, but the vengeance of a judge that designs utter destruction. 4. Here is the effect of their drinking of this cup of the Lord's indignation, their being tormented with fire and brimstone, which expression denotes these sinners' torments to be most exquisite, both intolerable and indeterminate, and their punishment both ceaseless and endless. 5. It is here said, that this their torment shall be in the presence of the holy angels, and of the Lamb; in the sight of the Lamb, against whom and in the sight of the angels, before whom they had sinned in worshipping the beast, they shall see them, but none shall help them. 6. The eternity as well as the extremity of their torments is here set forth; "their smoke ascends for ever and ever;" the torments of hell are here set forth as most acute and exquisite, and as endless and ceaseless, they have no rest day nor night, not a moment's ease. It is well observed by Mr. Mede, that there is not a more terrible description of punishment in the whole book of God, than is here denounced against those idolaters which adhere to the beast, "the smoke of their torment," that is, the fire and smoke wherewith they are tormented, ascendeth up for "ever and ever, and they have no rest day nor night." And if the church of Rome, or papal Babylon, be here intended, and not pagan, as most protestants believe and affirm, then this shows that those of her communion, living and dying in a firm adherence to the chief doctrines of popery, and framing their lives by them, after they have had, or might have had, sufficient means to convince them of their error and idolatry, do expose their salvation to extreme hazard and danger. Blessed be God for our happy reformation, from the idolatry and superstition, from the tyranny and oppression, and the intolerable yoke of the church of Rome. God grant that we may be reformed in our lives as well as in our religion, otherwise our damnation is as sure as theirs is great, for the holiest doctrine and purest worship will be of no avail to impure worshippers and unholy livers; it matters not what church, or what communion a bad man is of, for it is certain he cannot be saved by any.

12 Here is the patience of the saints: here are they that keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus.

That is, here at this time will be exercised all the faith and patience of Christ's faithful servants, and this their exercise of these graces will make it appear that they were true and not counterfeit christians; it follows, "here are they that keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus," that is, who discover themselves sincere in their profession, by obeying the commands of God, and rightly believing in our Lord Jesus Christ. Where note, What is the characteristic mark of a sincere christian, namely, faith, and obedience united together, faith in our Lord Jesus Christ, and obedience to the will of God in all things, are never separated where they are sincere.

13 And I heard a voice from heaven, saying unto me, Write, Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord, from henceforth: yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors, and their works do follow them.

These words in their original and primary intention were delivered by the Spirit, and commanded to be written by St. John, for the support and comfort of the church under that severe persecution which should befall it; and to declare the happy condition of martyrs particularly, and such as die for the Lord; but they may be considered in a greater latitude, and be of general use to the church of God in all ages, and under all circumstances, and administer comfort to all believers who die in the Lord, that is, in the faith of the Lord, in the fear of the Lord, and in the favor of the Lord, to all that die sincere christians, both in faith and practice. Here note, 1. A solemn declaration of the blessed state of good men after this life, their death is blessed, and a blessing to them. Note, 2. The time from whence their blessedness commences, from henceforth, that is, from the time of their death, then doth their blessedness begin. Thence learn, that all good christians, immediately upon their dissolution and departure out of this life, are in a blessed and happy condition. Note, 3. Wherein the blessedness of the righteous after their departure doth consist. 1. In resting from their labors, that is, from all the troubles, sorrows, and sufferings, from all the calamities, infirmities, and miseries of this frail mortal state; no sin shall affect them, no sorrow afflict them, no danger affright them. 2. In reaping the comfort of all the good works they have done in the world, "their works follow them," that is, 1. A delightful remembrance of their good works is found with them, which if it refreshes their souls with transporting pleasures now, how will it swallow them up with the highest transports of complacency and delight then? 2. The blessed fruits and happy effects of their good works and the special reward belonging to them, shall accompany good men into another world, which will render them completely blessed, by procuring for them, through the merits of our Lord Jesus Christ, an admission into heaven, where they shall drink of those pleasures which are at God's right hand for evermore. Note lastly, How this truth concerning the future blessedness of the righteous, deserves our most serious and attentive regard and meditation, because delivered by an audible voice from heaven, expressly commanded to be written and confirmed by the solemn asseveration of the Spirit, "I heard a voice from heaven, saying unto me, Write, Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord."

14 And I looked, and behold, a white cloud, and upon the cloud one sat like unto the Son of man, having on his head a golden crown, and in his hand a sharp sickle.

15 And another angel came out of the temple, crying with a loud voice to him that sat on the cloud, Thrust in thy sickle and reap; for the time is come for thee to reap: for the harvest of the earth is ripe.

16 And he that sat on the cloud thrust in his sickle on the earth; and the earth was reaped.

In these verses a description is given of Christ as coming to judgment; to inflict punishment upon his stubborn enemies, and here we have the judge described, 1. By his form or shape, he was one like the Son of man. 2. By his place and posture of judgment, sitting on the white cloud, the cloud denoting the sovereignty of the judge, and whiteness prefiguring the uprightness of his proceedings, and both signifying his speed and swiftness in coming to execute judgment: on this white cloud did he sit, denoting thereby, both his composedness and freedom from all passion and perturbation as a judge, and also his majesty and authority, sitting as a king upon his throne, as well as like a judge upon his tribunal. 3. He is described by his royal ornament, having on his head a golden crown; behold here the different estate of our Lord Jesus Christ above, from what it was here below; here crowned with thorns, there crowned with gold, the reward of his sufferings! blessed be God, that as it was with the head so shall it be with all the members. 4 By the instrument which he had in his hand fit for the work which he had in hand, namely, a sharp sickle for the reaping of the earth. A sickle is a circular instrument, and compasseth the corn round about which it is to cut down; the judgment of Christ upon the wicked will embrace them all, not a soul of them shall be able to escape it; and a sharp sickle signifies the quality of his judgment, that it will be severe. Behold here the unavoidable destruction of the wicked, and how impossible it is for them to escape the judgments of Christ: all the wicked together are no more in the hand of Christ than as an handful of grass, or ripe corn, to a sharp sickle in a strong hand.

In the fifteenth verse, we have a manifestation of the church's fervent desire that Christ would make speed, and hasten his work, and come quickly to judgment, both for the expiation of their glory, and for the destruction of his own and their enemies; "thrust in thy sickle and reap, for the harvest is ripe;" that is, it is full time to execute thy judgments on the wicked, for their sins (which call for these judgments) are now come to the height. Behold here Christ's day of judgment is like a day of harvest: when the corn is ripe, the sickle is got ready; when the sickle is got ready, it is set to work; when it is set to work it cuts down all, wheat and tares, corn and grass, without discrimination; but the Lord of the harvest soon commands a separation to be made of the good grain from the tares, of the righteous from the wicked, laying up the former in the granary of heaven, binding up the latter for the fire of hell.

In the sixteenth verse we have observable, 1. Christ's ready answering of, and complying with, the desires of his people, to thrust in the sickle of his judgment, and reap the earth; "he that sat on the cloud did thrust in his sickle." How ready is Christ to fulfil the desires of them that fear him, to hear their cry, and help them in his own time, in the best and fittest season! Observe, 2. The great and infinite power of our Lord Jesus Christ, that upon the thrusting in of his sickle, the whole earth was presently reaped. Behold the ability of Christ for judgment, as well as his impartiality in judging; such a judge is he, as the power of the mightiest cannot daunt; such a judge, as the riches of the wealthiest, cannot bribe; such a judge, as the subtlety of the wisest cannot deceive; in a word, such a judge, as there is no appealing from, no repealing of his sentence. O great day! when the stiffest knee shall bow at the tribunal of Christ, and the strongest back shall bend under the insupportable burden of the wrath of the Lamb; when the Alexanders and Cesars, which once shook the earth, and caused the world to tremble, shall revere and lie prostrate at the foot of Christ! Behold then, and admire the wonderful power and dexterity of Christ in judging, that upon the thrusting in of his sickle the whole earth was presently reaped?"

17 And another angel came out of the temple, which is in heaven, he also having a sharp sickle.

18 And another angel came out from the altar, which had power over fire; and cried with a loud cry to him that had the sharp sickle, saying, Thrust in thy sharp sickle, and gather the clusters of the vine of the earth; for her grapes are fully ripe.

19 And the angel thrust in his sickle into the earth, and gathered the vine of the earth, and cast it into the great wine-press of the wrath of God.

20 And the wine-press was trodden without the city, and blood came out of the wine-press, even unto the horses' bridles, by the space of a thousand and six hundred furlongs.

In the former verses we meet with the metaphor of an harvest, in these we meet with that of a vintage; there the wicked were compared to ripe corn fit for the harvest, here to ripe grapes fit for the wine press; signifying by both, that the wicked, by filling up the measure of their sins do make themselves ripe and ready for judgment. Note here, 1. That as the true church is called a vine, so is the wicked antichristian church here called; but with this addition, a vine of the earth cleaving to, and only savoring of the earth; a good name will signify little in judgment; to be called christians, virgins, &c. what will it profit, without burning and shining lamps? Note, 2. Whereas the grapes of this vine are said to be not only ripe, but fully ripe, how great is the forbearance and long-suffering of God towards the wicked? Maximum miraculum est Dei longanimitas, the patience of God towards sinners is the greatest miracle in the world; but though lasting it will not be everlasting: when long abused, it turns at last into fury; ripeness in sin is a sure prognostication of judgment at hand. Note, 3. The vine with all its clusters is gathered, small and great, one and another, all shall appear before the bar of Christ, chap. xx 12. "I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God; and the books were opened, and the dead were judged out of those books." Note, 4. Whither this degenerated vine, with all its clusters, was cast, namely, into the wine-press of God's wrath, which is called a great wine-press, because it can contain all the wicked; it will hold them all, be they ever so many: and is said to be trodden; that is, by Christ, denoting the severity of that vengeance which will be inflicted upon sinners; the grapes which have hung a long time ripening in the sun are severely pressed at last. Note, 5. That the blood which came out of the wine-press, (the blood of the grape) was so much in quantity, that it came up to the "horses' bridles, by the space of a thousand and six hundred furlongs;" all metaphorical expressions, signifying, that wise is the wrath of God, and the cup of his indignation; and the hyperbolical expression of its height, reaching as high as the horses' bridles; and of its length, reaching more than a thousand furlongs, show that mighty deluge and inundation of God's wrath which the wicked in general, and all antichrist's followers in particular, shall not only drink of, but swim in; and as they shed the blood of the saints abundantly; in like manner, God will give them blood to drink in great abundance. Note lastly, That although these two metaphors of the harvest and the vintage signify one thing only, the vision is doubled, like Pharaoh's dream, to show the certainty thereof, yet we may conceive that the similitude of a vintage here holds forth greater judgments than the harvest: Almighty God, in his providential dispensation towards the wicked, proceeds gradually; as they proceed from one degree of wickedness, so does he from one degree of wrath and vengeance to another; the vintage follows the harvest, the sharp sickle follows the sickle, the harvest is said to be ripe, the vintage to be fully ripe; if the blood of God's anger in this life will not wash sinners clean, the deluge of his wrath in the next will wash them quite away; "blood came out of the wine-press, even to the horses' bridles, by the space of a thousand and six hundred furlongs." Eternal thanks to Christ the Lamb, who has delivered his from this dreadful wrath to come!

CHAPTER XV.

AND I saw another sign in heaven, a great and marvellous, seven angels having the seven last plagues, for in them is filled up the wrath of God.

This and the following chapter acquaints us with a fresh vision, which St. John had of the pouring forth of the vials, or the inflicting of the seven last plagues and judgments upon the world, upon the heathen world, say some, upon the antichristian world, say most. "I saw seven angels, having the seven last plagues; for in them is filled up the wrath of God;" where by seven angels, understand the ministers and executioners of the wrath of God: by the seven plagues, understand the last dreadful judgments that should be inflicted, which would make a final end of him, whoever he be, that they should be poured forth upon him one after another. Where note, 1. How the patience, forbearance, and long-suffering goodness of God is wonderfully seen in his carriage towards sinners: though he punishes the wicked sometimes, to let them see that his justice is not asleep, yet he doth not stir up all his wrath, nor poureth it out all at once upon them, but gradually; desirous of, and waiting for their repentance, even when he has begun in justice to punish them. Note 2. Whereas it is said, in them, (that is, in the present seven plagues) is filled up the wrath of God;

we learn what final impenitency and incorrigibleness under former judgments, will produce at last; namely, judgment to the uttermost; ripeness in sin will at last make men ripe for ruin: and when they have filled up the measure of their sin, God will fill up the measure of his wrath; in them is filled up the wrath of God.

2 And I saw, as it were, a sea of glass mingled with fire; and them that had gotten the victory over the beast, and over his image, and over his mark, and over the number of his name, stand on the sea of glass, having the harps of God.

3 And they sung the song of Moses the servant of God, and the song of the Lamb, saying, Great and marvellous are thy works, Lord God Almighty: just and true are thy ways, thou King of saints.

4 Who shall not fear thee, O Lord, and glorify thy name? for thou only art holy: for all nations shall come and worship before thee; for thy judgments are made manifest.

There seems here to be an allusion to the Israelites' deliverance out of Egypt, and to the song of Moses upon that occasion, recorded Exod. xv. As they were delivered out of literal Egypt, so these from mystical Egypt, both nests of idolatry and false worship; a deliverance from both, which deservedly called for a song of thanksgiving. "I saw a sea of glass mingled with fire;" that is, a great number of pure zealous christians, their multitude being represented by the sea, their purity by glass, and their zeal by "fire, who had gotten victory over the beast, and over his image;" that is, who overcame all temptations to idolatry, both from the pagan and antichristian emperors, called the beast his image. "Having the harps of God in their hand," in allusion to the musical instruments used in the temple-service, and denoting hearts fitted for, and tuned by, the spirit of God; to praise him with cheerfulness for preserving them from being overcome by temptations to idolatry. Learn hence, That such as are sincerely gracious, are truly thankful to God for all his benefits and blessings, but especially for their preservation from sin, and their getting victory over temptations. Observe next, The work of solemn praise and thanksgiving, which these purified and preserved souls were engaged in, and employed about; "They sung the song of Moses and the Lamb, saying, Great and marvellous are thy works, O Lord." Where note, 1. The title of the song, namely, "The song of Moses and the Lamb." The song of Moses, that is, a song much like unto that of Moses and the Israelites, after they had passed safely through the Red Sea, Exod. xv. And the song of the Lamb; so called, because it was a song indited by the Spirit of the Lamb, and tending to advance the glory of the Lamb. Note, 2. The matter of the song, which is divided into two parts. 1. The church's confession and declaration of those works which Christ doth; "Great and marvellous are thy works, just and true are thy ways;" that is, they are great and wonderful works, fit only to be done by him who is the Lord God Almighty; just and true; well becoming him who is King of saints. 2. The use which the church makes of these works; and that is, 1. To record, celebrate, and punish them. 2. To oblige and bind themselves faster, and closer to him in his worship and service. "Who shall not fear thee, O Lord, and glorify thy name? For thou only art holy." Observe farther, The titles, which are here by the church given unto God. 1. "The Lord God Almighty." A title full of comfort to the saints in their greatest straits, and full of terror to their enemies in the midst of their abundance. 2. He is styled the King of saints, they receiving special protection from him, and he exercising a particular care over them. 3. "He only is said to be holy;" that is, essentially and casually: essentially in himself, and casually with respect to us; all holiness is originally in him, all holiness is derivatively from him, therefore should the praise thereof be given to him. Observe lastly, The duty inferred from all those glorious titles which are here given to God, and for all the great and marvellous works done by him; "Who shall not fear thee, O Lord, and glorify thy name?" As if he had said, "All ought to do so, and there is great reason for so doing." As God is to be feared because he is full of power and justice, so then especially should his people fear him, when he is taking vengeance on his enemies, his own and his church's adversaries: "Who shall not fear thee? for thy judgments are made manifest."

5 And after that I looked, and, behold, the temple of the tabernacle of the testimony in heaven was opened.

6 And the seven angels came out of the temple, having the seven plagues, clothed in pure and white linen, and having their breasts girded with golden girdles.

Observe here, 1. The vision which St. John had; he thought he saw the Holy of Holies open to him, and seven angels coming forth with seven plagues, as the executioners of God's judgments upon idolatrous persons. Where note, 1. The instruments employed by God for executing his wrath upon sinners, angels, seven angels; not that he needs them, but he is pleased to make use of them; and they are but instruments in his hand, his bow, and his battle-axe, mere dead tools, who receive all their efficacy from the hand that uses them: their presence adds no strength to him, their absence makes the work no more difficult before him. Note, 2. From whence these seven angels came, namely, out of the temple, out of the oracle, more immediately from the presence of God; implying, that they came forth to execute vengeance by God's special directions; and not barely by his permission; and consequently that the work was very acceptable and well-pleasing unto God which they went about. Note, 3. How they are furnished, having seven plagues, namely, to inflict upon the idolatrous enemies of the church. Note, 4. In and after what manner these angels were apparelled and appeared. 1. They were clothed in pure white linen, to denote the holiness of their persons, as also the holiness of that work which they had then in hand. 2. This clothing of theirs was girded to them, expressing thereby their great readiness for, and their great alacrity and cheerfulness in their work. 3. The girdle wherewith they were girded was a golden girdle, exactly answering the habit of the high priest, when he entered into the Holy of Holies, to inquire of God, or came out with an answer from God. From the whole learn, That when the Lord comes to pull down Babylon, as well as to build up Zion, he will appear in glory: the angels are God's special ministers; when they go forth to pour out the vials of his wrath upon Babylon they appear gloriously apparelled, glittering like the high-priest, and girded with golden girdles.

7 And one of the four beasts gave unto the seven angels seven golden vials full of the wrath of God, who liveth for ever and ever.

8 And the temple was filled with smoke from the glory of God, and from his power; and no man was able to enter into the temple till the seven plagues of the seven angels were fulfilled.

Observe here, 1. That what was called seven plagues in the foregoing verse, is here called seven golden vials full of the wrath of God: In this verse vials are full cups. Vials of wrath are prepared when the measures of a people's sins are filled up; full cups of sin are followed with full vials of God's wrath. Next, these vials are said to be of gold, signifying, that these judgments proceed from a just God, with whom there is no corruption nor iniquity in judgments, he being holy in all his ways and righteous in all his works. These vials are also said to be "full of the wrath of God, who liveth for ever and ever," as an aggravation of the same, it not being like the wrath of a mortal man, of short continuance, but of endless duration; it is the wrath of him that ever lives to maintain his wrath, and to uphold and sustain the sinner under the execution, and infliction of this wrath, that the sinner cannot run from him. O what a fearful thing is it, to fall into the hands of the living God, whose wrath is both intolerable and interminable! the sinner can neither stand under it, nor flee from it. Observe, 2. The executioners of this wrath are said to be seven angels. The angels, which are merciful attendants upon the godly, are also at God's command, the executioners of this wrath upon the wicked. These angels are here said to be seven, to signify that God's judgments upon his church's adversaries shall be heavy and great: one angel plagued all Egypt, and destroyed Sennacherib's mighty host, but here went out seven angels to destroy antichrist. Observe, 3. The tremendous dreadfulness of this wrath, intimated by filling the temple with smoke, thereby signifying, that the wrath of God kindled against his enemies shall be unto them like a devouring and consuming fire, before the flames of which burst forth, a cloud of smoke appears. "And the temple was filled with smoke from the glory of God, and from his power." Learn thence, That Almighty God is glorified in the destruction, as well as in the salvation of sinners; his glory is as well seen in his smoking wrath against the wicked, as in his saving mercy towards the godly. "The temple was filled with smoke from the glory of God, and from his power;" it follows,—No man was able to enter into the temple; that is, to deprecate God's anger, and supplicate his mercy, or to avert the plagues threatened, and now just ready to be inflicted; when mercy has been long offered and despised, the Lord at last becomes inexorable, and will suffer none to intercede, or plead with him, Jer. xv. Though Moses and Samuel stood before me, yet my mind cannot be towards this people; cast them out of my sight, &c. The sins of a people may sometimes grow to such an height, that Almighty God will no longer be entreated; and when we know it, it is our duty to cease praying for them, Hæc, uoc, uoc, be unto such a people!

CHAPTER XVI.

In the former chapter, preparation was made, and a general commission given for inflicting the seven plagues, and pouring forth the seven vials upon the antichristian state. In this chapter we read an account at large, of the infliction of those plagues, and the effusion of those vials accordingly; and for as much as Rome is often in this prophecy compared to Egypt, Sodom, and Babylon, for their idolatry, cruelty, and other sins, Almighty God is here pleased to parallel her plagues with theirs: and it is observable that many of the plagues mentioned in this chapter do very nearly resemble the plagues of Egypt, recorded in the book of Exodus, as will appear by consulting the chapter itself, which speaks thus:

AND I heard a great voice out of the temple, saying to the seven angels, Go your ways, and pour out the vials of the wrath of God upon the earth.

Observe here, 1. The command given to the seven angels, the executioners of God's justice, to do their office, namely, in pouring out the vials of his wrath upon the earth. The command is here said to be given by a voice, by a great voice; because it was the command of a great God, and about a great work; and it is said to come out of the temple, in allusion to the Holy of holies, the place of God's exhibiting himself, and from whence he gave forth oracles of old. Observe, 2. How the seven angels (the instruments of God in executing his judgments) receive their commission from God, and pour out not one vial on the earth till they are required so to do; and being called vials of the wrath of God, it gives us this intimation, that what is done against antichrist is not the effect of man's revenge, but the fruit of God's wrath; and whereas vials are vessels of large content, but of narrow mouth, which pour out slowly, but distil effectually, and drench deeply, it imports, that the wrath of God is, though slow, yet sure; it comes upon sinners gradually; but if, upon its approach, they repent not, it will at last, like a mighty torrent, wash them away from off the earth.

2 And the first went, and poured out his vials upon the earth; and there fell a noisome and grievous sore upon the men which had the mark of the beast, and upon them which worshipped his image.

Observe here, 1. What allusion this plague inflicted upon Babylon has to that plague which God of old inflicted upon Egypt, Exod. ix. 9. Egypt had her boil, breaking forth, with blains upon man, and upon beast! in like manner, the worshippers of the beast having noisome and grievous sores upon them; that is, great trouble and uneasiness of mind upon the first prospect of the shaking of their kingdom, by discovering the vanity, blasphemy, hypocrisy, and tyranny, of their devised religion; even as sores and blains do vex and torture those that are troubled with them. Learn hence, that it is no small vexation and trouble to the wicked, when they have their sins detected and discovered, it is as great a torture to their minds as an ulcer or a boil is to their bodies.

3 And the second angel poured out his vial upon the sea, and it became as the blood of a dead man: and every living soul died in the sea.

4 And the third angel poured out his vial upon the rivers, and fountains of waters; and they became blood.

Observe here, That this second and third plague poured out upon the sea, and the rivers of waters, whereby they became blood, have a manifest allusion to that plague of Egypt whereby all the waters were turned into blood, Exod. vii. 19. Observe farther, That by the sea and the rivers full of blood, the bloody persecutors in the antichristian church are supposed to be meant, who, by slaughter and bloodshed, seek to plant and propagate a bloody religion throughout the earth. Observe lastly, That the pouring out of these vials gradually and successively upon idolaters and persecutors, and not all together, and all at once, but one after another, teaches us how abounding the patience, forbearance and long-suffering goodness of God is even towards the worst of sinners; not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance.

5 And I heard the angel of the waters say, Thou art righteous, O Lord, which art, and wast, and shalt be, because thou hast judged thus:

6 For they have shed the blood of saints and prophets, and thou hast given them blood to drink ; for they are worthy.

7 And I heard another out of the altar say, Even so, Lord God Almighty, true and righteous are thy judgments.

These verses seem to be a key to let us into the right understanding of the verses immediately foregoing : and clearly show, that as the idolatrous enemies of the church did shed the blood of saints and martyrs, so should theirs be shed ; which is called their having blood to drink. Here note, 1. The approbation which the angel gives of the equity and righteousness of God's judgments upon the bloody persecutors : " Righteous art thou, O Lord ! for thou hast given them blood to drink." Where the retribution which God makes of blood for blood, shows the righteousness of God in his judgments inflicted ; and also declares that Almighty God doth sometimes so suit his judgments to the sin committed, that persons may read their sin in their punishment. As these persecutors thirsted after blood, so here they get blood to drink. Note, 2. How the angel in the fifth verse, and the other in the seventh verse, do both rejoice in the execution of God's judgments, and in the terrible revenge of the blood of saints. For thus they sing, " Righteous art thou, O Lord, and just are thy judgments."

8 And the fourth angel poured out his vial upon the sun ; and power was given unto him to scorch men with fire.

9 And men were scorched with great heat, and blasphemed the name of God, which hath power over these plagues : and they repented not, to give him glory.

Observe here, 1. That the fourth vial is said to be poured forth upon the sun, which metaphorically taken in scripture usually signifies some great prince or potentate : here the head of the antichristian party is supposed to be the sun, upon which the wrath of this vial falls. Observe, 2. The effect which follows hereupon, Power was given him to scorch men with fire ; and the event which ensued was double, men blasphemed the name of God, and repented not, to give him glory. Learn hence, 1. That although God sends his judgments to call the wicked to repentance, yet they will not repent of sin, even when they lie under the wrathful hand of God, but will rather break forth to farther wickedness, even to blaspheme the holy name of God. Learn, 2. That what the damned do in hell, where the wrath of God is poured out upon men to the uttermost, that do incorrigible and unreclaimed sinners upon earth ; they are scorched with great heat, the vengeance of God cometh upon them ; they are mad and enraged, and blaspheme the holy and just God, who bringeth such plagues upon them ; but they have no sense of their sins, no thoughts of turning unto God, or of giving glory to him : these men here blasphemed, but repented not.

10 And the fifth angel poured out his vial upon the seat of the beast : and his kingdom was full of darkness : and they gnawed their tongues for pain.

11 And blasphemed the God of heaven, because of their pain and their sores, and repented not of their deeds.

Observe here, 1. The gradual approaches which Almighty God makes by his plagues and judgments towards the antichristian beast, he began farther off at first, and then came nearer and nearer to him ; the first vial was poured out upon the earth, the second upon the sea, the third upon the rivers, the fourth upon the sun, now the fifth upon the seat of the beast ; that is, probably, the seat of his empire, the chief place where he appeareth in the highest majesty and glory. This should teach us all at the first alarm of judgments to draw near to God by a true and timely repentance, before he comes nearer to us by a succession of plagues and punishments. Observe, 2. The effect and consequence which did ensue and follow upon the pouring out of this vial upon the throne or seat of the beast. 1. His kingdom was full of darkness ; this vial did not destroy, but distress him, it filled his kingdom with the darkness of misery and trouble, of calamity and confusion ; not but that the kingdom of the beast was a kingdom of darkness before but that darkness was a darkness of ignorance and error : this is a darkness of calamity and horror ; by the loss of that lustre, respect and reverence which the throne of the beast had before, but was wanting now. 2. As an evidence of this distress it is here said that they gnawed their tongues for pain ; that is, they were almost distracted at the declining of their grandeur. Where note, 1. From the gnawing of their tongues, which was an indication of the horror of their consciences, that as Almighty God makes the guilty consciences of the wicked to be their own accusers, so he can make them whenever he pleases, to be their own tormentors. Note, 2. How Almighty God so suits his judgments sometimes to people's sin, as that if they do not wink hard, or wilfully shut their eyes, they may and must see and read their sin in their punishment. These worshippers of the beast seduced others by their false doctrine, and sinned with their tongues, and now God makes their tongues like so many scorpions' tails, the instruments of their torment ; " They gnawed their tongues for pain ;" it is added, " That they blasphemed the God of heaven, and repented not of their deeds." Where note, That as the plagues he inflicted resembled the plagues of Egypt, so the worshippers of the beast, whom they were inflicted upon, resembled Pharaoh king of Egypt, who hardened his heart yet more and more against the Lord, and repented not.

12 And the sixth angel poured out his vial upon the great river Euphrates ; and the water thereof was dried up, that the way of the kings of the east might be prepared.

Observe here, 1. In the drying up of the river Euphrates, a manifest allusion to the manner of old Babylon's destruction. The river Euphrates ran through old Babylon, and was a greater defence to it than its celebrated walls, which for thickness and height were the wonder of the world. Cyrus, when he took Babylon, cut many ditches, and let the river Euphrates run out, and so he and his soldiers entered the city, then fordable, and took it. Now, as the drying up of the Euphrates then was an immediate forerunner of the destruction of Babylon, in like manner the drying up of Euphrates, signify what it will, shall be the immediate forerunner of the destruction of antichristian Babylon, whenever it shall be. The Romish Euphrates being dried up, the Romish Babylon will hasten again towards its final ruin. Quest. But what is meant by Euphrates here? Ans. Probably the Turkish empire, according to Mr. Mede and Dr. More, the Turks first taking up their habitation about this great river; so that by Euphrates may be understood the people inhabiting about Euphrates; and by drying up its waters, the diminishing and lessening of their empire. By the kings of the east, the Jews are said to be understood, who inhabit the eastern countries, to whom God made a promise, Exod. xix. 6. that they should be a kingdom of priests: so that here seems to be a prophecy of the Jews' conversion to the christian religion, which two things do chiefly hinder, namely, the idolatry of Rome, and the power of Constantinople; the image worship of the Papists, and the puissance of the Turks, but both these being taken away by the fall of Babylon, and the ruin of the Turks, the way then will seem prepared for the Jews receiving of the christian faith. Taking the words in this sense, the notes are these, 1. That the days will come wherein christian princes and states shall pour out the wrath of God upon Popish idolatry and Turkish tyranny. 2. That the pouring out of the wrath of God upon both these grand enemies of God, will prepare and make ready the way for the Jews' conversion for him.

13 And I saw three unclean spirits like frogs come out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet.

14 For they are the spirits of devils, working miracles, which go forth unto the kings of the earth, and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty.

In the foregoing verses an account was given of the subject upon which the sixth vial was poured out, namely, upon the river Euphrates. Here we have an effect that followed thereupon, namely, a warlike expedition or gathering to this battle. Where note, 1. The principal commanders in this battle, namely, the dragon, the beast, and the false prophet. 2. The instruments employed, and made use of by them, who are here said to be, for their nature, spirits, for their quality, unclean, for their number, three, for their similitude and resemblance, like frogs, namely, with respect to their original, they breed of corruption, and in great numbers swarm and croak in all places, and live both in the water and upon the earth; by all which many interpreters understand emissaries, missionaries, negotiators, solicitors and legates, sent forth and employed by antichrist for the support and strengthening both of him and his kingdom, by soliciting the kings of the earth to join together, in a battle against the church. Behold here how the dragon, the beast, and the false prophets, do send forth all their emissaries, and employ all their instruments to stir up princes, and engage them in battle, to withstand the reformation of christians, and the conversion of the Jews: "I saw unclean spirits like frogs come out of the mouth of the dragon, and go forth to the kings of the earth, to gather them to battle." Observe farther, The actions here said to be performed by them, namely, their working miracles by the power of the devils: that is, such wonderful things as satan can sometimes produce, or at least delude people's senses, and make them believe that they are produced and effected by him. Where note, That the advantage which the false church makes of a pretended power with her to work miracles, the Spirit of God, both here and elsewhere, 2 Thess. ii. 9. makes to be a badge of antichrist and his followers: "They are the spirits of devils working miracles."

15 Behold, I come as a thief. Blessed is he that watcheth, and keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked, and they see his shame.

These consolatory words of Christ seem to be inserted here for the support of the faithful servants of God, against those great preparations of the enemy in the day of battle. Behold, says Christ, I then come as a thief, secretly, suddenly, and unexpectedly, to destroy these enemies when they least expect me: and then I am at hand to take vengeance on them, and to deliver my church, when they least think of me: "Blessed is he that watcheth," namely, against those temptations which he will be then exposed to; and keepeth his garments, that is, his profession, unspotted from sin, and the defilements of antichrist; lest he walk naked, that is, appear as a man destitute of uprightness and sincerity: and they see his shame, which ever follows upon a sinful course. Note here, 1. That when Christ comes, he comes suddenly, even as a thief cometh. 2. That although Christ comes suddenly, and as a thief, yet he is pleased to give us warning of his coming. Behold I come. 3. That when Christ's coming is near at hand, there is danger that many for want of watchfulness will lose their garments. 4. That is, to such as through negligence shall lose their garments, this misery will befall them: they shall walk naked, and men shall see their shame. 5. That those few who watch and keep their garments, are certainly in a happy and blessed condition. "Blessed is he that watcheth and keepeth his garments."

16 And he gathered them together into a place, called in the Hebrew tongue Armageddon.

He, That is, Almighty God, by his permissive providence suffered the kings of the earth to hearken to antichrist's missionaries, who, like frogs, hop abroad even into king's palaces, and persuade them to assemble and gather together as Jabin and Sisera gathered together against Israel, to their own destruction: and whereas the place of their gathering together is called Armageddon, this is so named from the event of the battle; signifying such a place where the enemies of the church shall be destroyed. Learn hence, That the event and success of that battle, which the adherents of antichrist shall fight for him, will be desperate destruction to themselves, joyful victories and triumphs to the churches of Christ.

17 And the seventh angel poured out his vial into the air: and there came a great voice out of the temple of heaven from the throne, saying, It is done.

18 And there were voices, and thunders, and lightnings; and there was a great earthquake, such as was not since men were upon the earth, so mighty an earthquake, and so great.

19 And the great city was divided into three parts, and the cities of the nations fell: and great Babylon came in remembrance before God, to give unto her the cup of the wine of the fierceness of his wrath.

20 And every island fled away, and the mountains were not found.

21 And there fell upon men a great hail out of heaven, every stone about the weight of a talent: and men blasphemed God because of the plague of the hail: for the plague thereof was exceeding great.

These words describe and declare unto us the pouring out of the seventh vial by the seventh angel; in which we have observable, 1. The subject upon which it fell, namely, the air: not that the elements of air, earth, or water, are to be understood in this chapter literally; for the vials poured forth are vials of wrath, and consequently are poured forth upon the proper subjects of God's displeasure, which the elements are not: but it is the earthly antichristian church which is thought to be here intended, so called in opposition to the heavenly and pure church. So that by the air here, Mr. Mede understands all the subjects of satan's kingdom, who is called the prince of the air; and the pouring out of this vial upon the air denotes the full and final destruction of satan's power. Observe, 2. The adjunct accompanying the pouring out of this vial, namely, a voice out of heaven, saying, It is done; that is, "These last plagues are now finished, the work of God is done, and what in his counsels he designed for the destruction of his enemies, and for the deliverance of his people; this is said to be done, because it was now doing; and accomplished, because it was now accomplishing." God's threatenings of judgment (except men repent) are sure when denounced, as if they were already executed. Observe, 3. The direful effects and dreadful consequences of this last vial's pouring forth; namely, 1. Thunder, lightning, and earthquake; all implying thus much, that the storm of God's wrath now coming upon the kingdoms of sin, satan, and antichrist, would be very terrible and amazing. 2. "The great city was divided into three parts;" into three factions, say some, and that antichrist's kingdom was now fallen by being divided within itself: and the cities of the nations fell: namely, heathen nations, and places which withstood Christ and his gospel. For all Christ's enemies are now to be deposed from public authority. "And great Babylon came up in remembrance before God:" not that God was ever unmindful of her, either of her impiety towards himself, or of her cruelty towards his people; but as good works are said to be remembered when they are rewarded, so wickedness is then remembered when it is punished; God remembered Babylon, when for the full cup of her sins, he put into her hand a full cup of the wine of the fierceness of his wrath. God is never forgetful either of his church's sufferings, or his enemies' sins, but will punish the one, and redress the other, in his own appointed time. 3. As another effect of the pouring forth of this vial, it is added, "every island fled away, and the mountains were not to be found;" signifying, say some, that the remotest and strongest places, which owned and maintained Babylon, shall either be converted or confounded. Intimating, say others, that there shall be no place in that day of God's wrath, to flee unto for safety: neither island on the sea, nor mountain on dry land. Observe lastly, The superadded judgment of unusual hail which God poured forth upon Babylon, as before upon Egypt, Exod. ix. "There fell great hail out of heaven, every stone about the weight of a talent." An hyperbolic expression, setting forth the design and purpose of God to pursue Babylon, and the worshippers of the beast, until they be utterly destroyed. A talent, say some, was an hundred pounds weight; if so, these hail stones were sufficient not only to kill men, but to dash them all in pieces. This heavy hail shows that weighty sins procure heavy judgments; yet mark what a bad use these obdurate sinners made of all these tremendous judgments, they blasphemed God. They were so obstinate in their idolatry, that they stood it out against all God's judgments. And when they should have humbled themselves under his mighty hand, they opened their mouths in blasphemies against him. Here note, That in the book of Exodus we do not read that the old Egyptians blasphemed God when the plague of hail was inflicted upon them, nor when they lay under any of the ten plagues: but these idolaters, instead of giving glory to God, they blaspheme him, because of the greatness of their plagues. This, perhaps is an emblem of what the damned will do at the day of judgment; though their consciences be convinced of the righteousness of their sentence, yet will they not cease to pour out blasphemies against God, upon the account of the severity and eternity of their torments. But verily then will all the divine attributes be conspicuously glorified, his wonderful clemency sweetly displayed, his exact justice terribly demonstrated, his perfect wisdom clearly unfolded, and all the knotty intrigues of providence wisely resolved, and the injured honor and glory of Almighty God visibly cleared and repaired, to the joyful satisfaction of all good men, and to the dreadful consternation and confusion of all impenitent sinners, who with these worshippers of the beast will gnaw their tongues for anguish, and blaspheme the holy and just God most unjustly, for bringing upon them that destruction which they had deserved, yea, that damnation which they had chosen.

CHAPTER XVII.

AND there came one of the seven angels which had the seven vials, and talked with me, saying unto me, Come hither, I will show unto thee the judgment of the great whore, that sitteth upon many waters;

Observe here, 1. The angel's invitation to the subsequent vision, "One of the angels talked with me, saying, Come hither, I will show thee," &c. Where we see the readiness of those ministering spirits, the holy angels to do any good office for the saints, and with what cheerfulness they are employed about things for our consolation, and the sweet familiarity that is between them and the saints, evidenced by that expression, "He talked with me, saying, Come hither." Observe, 2. The promise which the angel makes to St. John, namely, to "show him the judgment of that great whore." By the whore all understand the city of Rome; only some will have it Rome Pagan, others Rome Papal, or the great idolatrous city and church of Rome: idolatry is often, in scripture-style, called whoredom; and idolaters are said to go a whoring from God. A whore is a person married to an husband, who afterwards proves false to his bed. The Papal present church of Rome deserves this name, having been guilty of the greatest defection and apostasy from the true evangelical doctrine and worship that ever was in the world; and she is deservedly also called the "great whore," because of her whoredoms committed with so many under her power and jurisdiction, having many people subject to her, and for that reason is here said "to sit upon many waters." The true church is Christ's bride and spouse, she is betrothed unto him in righteousness, in loving-kindness, and in tender mercy, and at any time by idolatry to apostatize from him is spiritual whoredom, which shall not pass without deserved punishment. Learn, hence, How hateful idolatry is to God, and how highly it provokes God's wrath, even as the whoredom of a woman who plays the common harlot, provokes the jealousy of her husband. Verily, never was husband more jealous of the chastity of his suspected wife than God is jealous in point of worship.

2 With whom the kings of the earth have committed fornication, and the inhabitants of the earth have been made drunk with the wine of her fornication.

Babylon was charged with committing whoredom in the former verse; in this, the persons are declared whom she committed whoredom with, viz. with kings, and the inhabitants of the earth; that is, with all sorts of persons, small and great, rich and poor. Where note, That she is, 1. A catholic whore, common and shameless: she refuses none that will be lewd with her. 2. A politic whore, she first draws kings and princes to commit fornication with her, and then other inhabitants; well knowing how fast the example of superiors is commonly followed by inferiors: and whereas she is said to make them drunk with the wine of her fornication, the Spirit of God seems to intimate, that idolatry is like unto wine; a sensual sort of worship, and therefore alluring; making persons drunk, therefore intoxicating. Wine is sweet, but proves deceitful; idolatry is pleasing to man's corrupt nature, but brings wrath and judgment upon the sinner.

3 So he carried me away in the spirit into the wilderness: and I saw a woman sit upon a scarlet-colored beast, full of names of blasphemy, having seven heads, and ten horns.

4 And the woman was arrayed in purple, and scarlet color, and decked with gold, and precious stones and pearls, having a golden cup in her hand full of abominations and filthiness of her fornication.

5 And upon her forehead was a name written, MYSTERY, BABYLON THE GREAT, THE MOTHER OF HARLOTS, AND ABOMINATIONS OF THE EARTH.

Observe here, 1. That St. John was not in one continued ecstasy, but at several times in the spirit; that is, in an ecstasy or rapture of mind, wherein his outward senses being bound up, his understanding was fixed and raised up to the contemplation of divine objects, represented to him in the vision. A spiritual frame of mind is requisite for discerning the visions of God; He carrieth me away in the spirit. Observe, 2. The place whither St. John was carried, and where he saw the following vision, namely, in the wilderness; He carried me away into the wilderness; a place of privacy, say some, where he might discern things undisturbed.

turbedly and undistractedly. Solitude is fittest for contemplation. A wilderness, say others, was the fittest place to see that church in a vision, which was itself a wilderness: the apostolical church before was driven into the wilderness; here the apostate church follows her, as an harlot succeeding to a faithful city. Observe 3. The vision itself; I saw a woman sit upon a scarlet-colored beast, &c. The woman here is the same with her that was called whore, ver. 1, namely, idolatrous Rome; she is represented as a woman richly and splendidly arrayed, with her wealth and riches, with her pomp and power, enticing the world to her idolatry, called so often whoredom and spiritual fornication; and the golden cup in her hand is an allusion to harlots, who with their philters or enchanted cups, do allure and provoke men to sensual satisfactions; in like manner doth Rome, by her outward splendor, allure, and, by other specious pretences and means, draw persons to her idolatries and superstitions. Note lastly, the name written on her forehead, to wit, Mystery, Babylon the Great; that is, not literal, but mystical Babylon, the great city of Rome, the mother of idolatry, the patron of cruelty, the patroness of all impiety; and propagating all these by her power and policies, who calls herself the mother church, but it is indeed the mother of harlots, and of all manner of abominations; that is, of abominable doctrines and practices:

6 And I saw the woman drunken with the blood of the saints, and with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus: and when I saw her, I wondered with great admiration,

7 And the angels said unto me, Wherefore didst thou marvel? I will tell thee the mystery of the woman, and of the beast that carrieth her, which hath the seven heads and ten horns.

8 And the beast that thou sawest, was, and is not; and shall ascend out of the bottomless pit, and go into perdition: and they that dwell on the earth shall wonder, whose names were not written in the book of life from the foundation of the world, when they beheld the beast that was, and is not, and yet is.

St. John proceeds in the description of this woman; he declared her to be a filthy and common whore, in the foregoing verse; in this he represents her as a cruel and bloody whore; she is said to be drunk, drunk with blood, drunk with holy blood, drunk with the blood of saints and martyrs. Behold the blood-thirstiness of the Romish church, and her insatiableness therein, even unto drunkenness. Observe, 2. With what wonder and admiration St. John was filled, when he saw this woman drunk with blood, I wondered with great admiration; intimating, that so astonishing is the cruelty of that church, that it justly causes wonder and admiration to all that are not of her cruel and bloody disposition. I wondered that God should suffer so much of his dear servants' blood to be shed by her, and at her insatiable cruelty in the shedding of it. Observe, 3. How the Spirit of God was pleased to open this mystery, which indeed is the only vision of this nature expounded throughout the whole book: he begins first with a description of the beast, affirming, that he was, and is not, and yet is: as if he had said, "The Roman empire was once pagan, now is not pagan, but christian; and yet is as idolatrous now, as it was of old: the same it was, only in another form." Rome papal is certainly as idolatrous, as cruel and bloody, as ever Rome pagan was of old: yea, perhaps, much more so, beyond compare. Observe next, The rise and original is declared from whence this idolatrous church should spring, namely, out of the bottomless pit, because her working is after the working of satan, with all deceivableness, with signs and lying wonders. And as its rise is declared, so is its ruin foretold; it shall go into perdition, that is, shall be finally destroyed, never to revive again: but before this destruction, the world shall be under such an insatiation, that the generality of the inhabitants of the earth, some few excepted, shall wonder after the beast; that is, be wonderfully taken with him, and shall follow him with an implicit faith, paying homage and subjection to him. But these admirers, and adorers of the beast are only such whose names were not written in the book of life; intimating to us, that in times of the greatest apostasy, and most universal defection from the truth, the Lord wants not his own true church: he ever had, and has, yea, ever will have a number to stand up for his name, and bear witness to his truth.

9 And here is the mind that hath wisdom. The seven heads are seven mountains, on which the woman sitteth.

10 And there are seven kings: five are fallen, and one is, and the other is not yet come; and when he cometh, he must continue a short space.

11 And the beast that was, and is not even he is the eighth, and is of the seven, and goeth into perdition.

Here the angel cometh directly to declare and unfold the mystery of the beast, premising first, that it requires heavenly wisdom in a person to understand it, and apply the marks accordingly. Here is the mind that hath wisdom, that is, the mind that hath wisdom, may here exercise itself. The seven heads, saith the angel, are seven mountains, that is, signify seven mountains; a clear description of Rome, as to its local situation, being built upon seven hills. And there are seven kings, that is, seven forms of government, by, and according to which, Rome was governed, namely, by kings, consuls, tribunes, decemviri, dictators, and emperors, that were pagan. Five of these were fallen in St. John's time, that is, utterly extinct, namely, the government by kings, consuls, tribunes, decemviri, and dictators:

And one is, to wit, the government by pagan emperors, which was in St. John's time in being. And the other is not yet come, that is, the government by christian emperors was not yet in being, and when it did come, it held but a little while before the bishops of Rome wrested the government out of their hands, and took it into their own. Behold here the great mutability of all earthly things! governments have their periods, kingdoms come to an end. Happy they, who serving God acceptably, with reverence and godly fear, have secured to themselves a kingdom that cannot be moved! Heb. xii. 28.

12 And the ten horns which thou sawest, are ten kings, which have received no kingdom as yet: but receive power as kings one hour with the beast.

13 These have one mind, and shall give their power and strength unto the beast.

14 These shall make war with the Lamb, and the Lamb shall overcome them: for he is Lord of lords, and King of kings: and they that are with him, are called, and chosen, and faithful

Observe here, the angel farther explains to St. John this great mystery of the beast; declaring, that the ten horns of the beast, do signify ten kings, which should employ their power with the beast, and in conjunction with his established idolatry, to uphold his bloody religion; Next their wicked unity is declared, in giving their power and strength to the beast; They have one mind, ver. 13. that is, they unanimously concur in aiding, strengthening, and assisting the beast, in using their power, and employing their authority to maintain him in his idolatrous and pagan-like superstitions. Lastly, it is declared for what end they thus concur together, in giving their power and strength to the beast; namely, to make war with the Lamb; that is, to take part with antichrist, and oppose Christ in his truth and gospel, in his ministers and members, in his children and servants.—But the Lamb shall overcome them. Some shall be converted by the power of the gospel, others shall be confounded, one way or other brought into subjection; for he is Lord of lords, and King of kings; that is, clothed with divine power, Christ, though a meek Lamb, yet is a mighty Lord. The titles here given him, show his Godhead and omnipotency; and having such a power, he knows how to fit instruments for his purpose; and those whom he will make use of in this work, shall be chosen persons, and faithful in the discharge of the trust committed to them. All that are faithful to Christ, shall share with him in his victory.

15 And he saith unto me, The waters which thou sawest, where the whore sitteth, are peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues.

16 And the ten horns which thou sawest upon the beast, these shall hate the whore, and shall make her desolate and naked, and shall eat her flesh, and burn her with fire.

Here the angel proceeds, and goes on farther in the explication of the vision. By the waters, whereon the whore sat, he declares are to be understood, many and divers nations belonging to the Roman empire. Behold then of what church multitude is a note! not of the church of Christ, his flock is a little flock; but of the antichristian synagogue, which vaunts, that multitudes are on her side; "The waters whereon the whore sat in multitudes, peoples, nations, and tongues." Alas! the multitude, or generality of persons, are prone to oppose that which is good, and those that do good. Next, it is declared what instruments God will make use of, as the executioners of his vengeance upon this great whore; the ten horns, that is, the ten kings which did before idolize her, and commit idolatry, and spiritual whoredom with her, shall at length revolt from her, hate her, "make her desolate and naked, shall eat her flesh, and burn her with fire." Lord! what a strange, sudden, and mighty change doth the power of converting grace make! Behold these ten kings, who sometimes doted upon the painted beauty of this great whore, when once their eyes shall be opened, their hearts will soon be alienated, Babylon's courts shall be crowded with suitors no longer; they shall make her desolate, by deserting her communion; make her naked, by withdrawing their former supplies afforded to her; they shall eat her flesh, feed themselves with spoils, and take her revenues to themselves, and burn her with fire; that is, shall utterly ruin and destroy her. The destruction of antichrist once begun, shall hold on constantly by degrees, till his final destruction.

17 For God hath put in their hearts to fulfil his will, and to agree and give their kingdom unto the beast, until the words of God shall be fulfilled.

Observe here, 1. How the infinitely wise and perfectly holy God, can, and does so order things, that all his judgments shall be executed by sinners, without his being the cause of any one of their sins; though by the permissive will of God, these kings gave their power for a time to the beast, yet they never had his approbation for so doing. God so overrules the actions of wicked men, that when they are doing their will, contrary to their own intentions, in and by them the Lord is likewise doing his will. God sometimes does his will by those who resolve they will not do his will. Observe, 2. The time when Almighty God, who permitted them to submit to the whore, will put it into their hearts to hate her, and help to destroy her, namely, "when his word is fulfilled." God's word shall be fulfilled, in spite of satan and all his instruments: yea, the wicked are then fulfilling God's word and will, that is, his permissive will, when they are going on in their wickedness; "God hath put it in their hearts to fulfil his will."

18 And the woman which thou sawest, is that great city, which reigneth over the kings of the earth.

This is so clear a description of Rome, that the church of Rome herself acknowledges it: for, if that be the city built upon seven hills, the city that allures the inhabitants of the earth to idolatry; if her idolatries be a lively image of the old pagan idolatries; if to her many kings have given their power and strength; and if she reigneth over the kings of the earth, there remains no doubt but that this great city is Rome; that Rome is the mystical Babylon, which has shed the blood of saints and martyrs without number, and must be destroyed for so doing; no pomp nor grandeur can exempt, or shall save her from the avenging hand of God, and his just indignation.

Lord! hasten that desirable time!

CHAPTER XVIII.

This chapter contains a large and particular description of the certainty of Babylon's ruin; whose destruction is set out in expressions borrowed from the old prophets, Jeremiah and Ezekiel, who prophesied of the certainty, terribleness, and irrecoverableness of old Babylon's ruin and destruction, unto which the Holy Ghost seems to allude throughout the whole chapter.

AND after these things I saw another angel come down from heaven, having great power; and the earth was lightened with his glory.

2 And he cried mightily with a strong voice, saying, Babylon the great is fallen, is fallen, and is become the habitation of devils, and the hold of every foul spirit, and a cage of every unclean and hateful bird.

The destruction of spiritual Babylon hath, in this prophecy, been several times predicted and already foretold: Now here an angel from heaven is employed, to declare it shall certainly be performed. This angel is variously here described: 1. By the place from whence he came, namely, from heaven; signifying, that the destruction of Babylon was there surely decreed, and should most certainly be accomplished. 2. By the authority and power with which he came, in the name of, and by commission from the great God, and having great power. A mighty angel is employed in this great and mighty work, to destroy Babylon, the mighty throne of antichrist. 3. By the effect of his appearance; "The earth was lightened with his glory;" denoting, that Babylon's destruction should be open and manifest, and matter of joy and glorious rejoicing both to heaven and earth. Learn hence, That as the destruction of Babylon is the work and office of an angel, under God, so is it unto the angels matter of joy and triumph, especially to such of them as are employed as officers therein; "I saw an angel come down from heaven, having great power, and the earth was lightened with his glory." Observe, 2. The place against which the mighty angel doth denounce the vengeance of God, and that with an imprecation, or repetition of the threatening: Babylon the great is fallen, is fallen; where, by Babylon, all, both Papists and Protestants, do understand the city of Rome, though in different respects. This is called mystical Babylon, in an allusion to ancient Babylon, because of their resemblance, 1. In sin; namely, in pride and self exaltation, in cruelty and oppression, in sorcery and witchcraft: See Jer. li. 7. 2. In punishment, the destruction of old Babylon was a sudden destruction; Isa. xlvii. 2. and a perpetual destruction; see Isa. xlii. 20. compared with Rev. xi. 10. and Rev. xviii. 8. It is also called Babylon the great, 1. Because of the greatness of its strength and glory; it was the strongest and most fortified place in the world. Cyrus besieged it thirteen years before he took it, and then by cutting channels, and drawing dry the river Euphrates. 2. In regard of her great power and dominion: Literal Babylon said, Are not my princes altogether kings? and mystical Babylon ruleth over all the kings of the earth. Farther, it is here said, that Babylon the great is fallen, nay, it is imprecated and repeated; is fallen, is fallen; implying, 1. The certainty of her ruin; it is a speech of faith, speaking of things to come as already past; God's punishments, when threatened, are as certain as if already inflicted. 2. It denotes the suddenness of her destruction, she is fallen, that is, subito ruitura she shall soon fall; as when Christ said of his suffering work, It is finished; he meant, that it was very near finishing. 3. It denotes her utter ruin and destruction, is fallen, is fallen, never to rise more: the church shall never more be tormented by her, or troubled with her. 4. It denotes the joy and rejoicing which will be found in Sion, at Babylon's downfall and destruction, she is fallen, is fallen; it is not only a speech of faith and trust, but of joy and triumph. Learn hence, 1. That Rome or mystical Babylon, shall certainly fall, shall utterly fall, shall irrecoverably fall. 2. That the downfall of Babylon will be matter of great joy and triumph to the inhabitants of Sion, because she has been to the church of Christ an old and inveterate enemy, a cruel and bloody enemy, and shall be the last enemy. When Babylon is fallen, then shall all persecutions cease; satan shall be bound, and the kingdoms of the world shall become the kingdoms of the Lord, and of his Christ. Let all that have an interest in God, be instant in prayer with him to hasten its time, that it may be in the history, as it is here in the prophecy, that Babylon is fallen. Observe lastly, What an heap of multiplied expressions the Holy Ghost is pleased to make use of, to set forth the utter ruin, and final desolation of Babylon; "She is become the habitation of devils, the hold of every foul spirit, a cage of every unclean and hateful bird;"

that is, as devils and evil spirits are supposed to haunt desolate places; and birds, which make hideous and dismal noises, do dwell in ruinous and ruined places; in like manner, these expressions denote how entirely and absolutely God will bring about the destruction of Babylon; inasmuch that the place which hath known her shall know her no more, and her habitation shall be an eternal desolation, so that none that pass by shall say, This is Babylon.

3 For all nations have drunk of the wine of the wrath of her fornication, and the kings of the earth have committed fornication with her, and the merchants of the earth are waxed rich through the abundance of her delicacies.

The Spirit of God is pleased here to assign the reason and cause of Babylon's fatal ruin and final desolation: namely, 1. Because "all nations have drunk of the wine of the wrath of her fornication." All nations, that is, very many; the generality of the Roman empire have been allured to, and intoxicated by her idolatries, which have brought all this wrath upon her and them. Where note, 1. How idolatry is compared to wine, because very pleasing to corrupt nature, and also very enticing and ensnaring, overtaking, like wine, a person unawares, and it is called wine of wrath, because it exciteeth and provoketh God's wrath against a person or people guilty of it. 2. Because "the kings of the earth have committed fornication with her;" that is, joined with her in her idolatrous worship. Where note, The policy of Babylon in drawing kings and princes to the bed of her fornications, well knowing how fast their example would be followed by inferiors. The example of superiors in doing evil is strangely powerful; Jeroboam made Israel to sin; not by commanding them to worship the golden calves, but by commending that idolatrous worship to them in his own person. 3. Because the "merchants of the earth were waxed rich through the abundance of her delicacies." By the merchants, understand all such as trade in Babylon's wares, her pleasing and costly wares of pardons, as masses and indulgencies, by which so many were enriched. All things are vendible at Rome; any sin may be forgiven for silver, and a licence for any thing that is unlawful for money. These are the reasons here assigned for Babylon's ruin. "The nations were made drunk by her, kings committed fornication with her, and the merchants enriched through the abundance of her delicacies."

4 And I heard another voice from heaven, saying, Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues:

Observe here, An admonition given, and a double reason assigned for that admonition. 1. The admonition itself; "Come out of her, my people; that is, come out of mystical Babylon, have no communion with that idolatrous church; abstain from all communicating with her in her sins, as ever you would approve yourselves to be my faithful people. Here note, It is not so much a local departure, as a moral separation, that is here intended; not so much from Babylon's local bounds, as from her abominable errors, superstitions, and idolatries. Learn hence, 1. That God has, and ever had, a people, even in Babylon. Learn hence, 2. That it is a special duty which God requires of his people, to depart from mystical Babylon, especially when her downfall is approaching. 3. That such a departure from Babylon is no schismatical separation; it is not a departure from the true church, but the true church's separation from an idolatrous communion; and that by the express and positive command of God himself, "Come out of her, my people;" an allusion to the charge given with respect to Babylon of old, Jer. li. 6. 9. "We would have healed Babylon, but she would not be healed; forsake her." Observe, 2. A double reason assigned for this admonition. 1. Because we are in danger of being partakers of her sins, namely, by incurring the guilt of her sins, and by contracting the spot and filth of her sins. 2. There is a danger also of being made partakers of her plagues; there is no safety in being near those who are under the curse of God; participation in sin will certainly cause a participation in judgment. How dreadful is this text to such as continue in, or apostatize unto, Babylon's idolatry and communion!

5 For her sins have reached unto heaven, and God hath remembered her iniquities.

6 Reward her even as she rewarded you, and double unto her double, according to her works: in the cup which she hath filled, fill to her double.

7 How much she hath glorified herself, and lived deliciously, so much torment and sorrow give her: for she saith in her heart, I sit a queen, and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow.

8 Therefore shall her plagues come in one day, death, and mourning, and famine; and she shall be utterly burned with fire: for strong is the Lord God who judgeth her.

Observe here, 1. The reason assigned why Almighty God inflicted such severe punishments upon Babylon; because her sins, that is, the cry and clamor of her sins, "had reached up to heaven;" the measure of her sins was filled up, "and God had remembered her iniquities," that is, manifested his remembrance of them, by inflicting on her so great, so just a punishment for them, viz. for her idolatry and persecution. Learn hence, That although sins be transient actions, yet they have a permanent pleading before the Lord's tribunal, to bring down judgments upon incorrigible sinners. And 2. That although the justice of God may be thought to be asleep, and he may seem to be forgetful of sin and sinners, yet he will take his own time to manifest that he remembers them, by inflicting the heaviness of his judgments upon obdurate sinners; "her sins reached unto heaven, and God hath remembered her iniquities." Observe, 2. The injunction and command given by God unto his people, to every one of them in their place and station, to contribute regularly all they can towards Babylon's downfall and destruction, "Reward her as she rewarded you, yea, double;" this is required, not from a private spirit of revenge, which christianity expressly forbids, but as a public work, in an authoritative way and manner, out of an ardent zeal for the glory of God, and from a just indignation against her tyranny and idolatry: and the command to "double unto her double," implies, that a double punishment is due unto her, yea a just one, according to her works. Behold here! what bloody persecutors may at length expect, namely, to receive at the Lord's hand double for all their sins. Babylon's punishment shall be double, respecting what she has acted, but not double in respect of what she has deserved; if possible let her have as much blood again to drink as ever she spilt; for one drop of the blood of Sion is worth more than an ocean of the blood of Babylon; give her therefore double, for though it be more in quantity, it is nothing so much in value. Observe, 3. How suitable and answerable Babylon's punishment inflicted will be to her sins committed; her sins were pride and insolence, luxury and voluptuousness. Note, 1. Her pride, "she said in her heart, I sit as a queen;" Mark, she did not barely say, I am a queen, but, I sit as a queen; as if she had said, "I am not only in a high place, but in a sure place: I have a warm and firm seat, I am well settled, I have a great command, yea, an uncontrollable command: "I am no widow," no desolate widow, no disconsolate widow; for I have many children to comfort me, many sons and daughters to support me; "I shall see no sorrow, I neither feel nor fear any." Behold how worldly men fancy to themselves an everlastingness in worldly things; they fancy themselves sitting as upon down pillows for ease and softness, and as upon rocks of adamant for sureness and unmoveableness: "I sit as a queen, and shall see no sorrow." Note, 2. Her luxury and voluptuousness; she lived deliciously, in pompous palaces, pleasantly situated, plentifully furnished; and her judgment bears a strict proportion to her sin, "how much she hath glorified herself and lived deliciously, so much torment and sorrow give her; the justice of God will exact all the arrears of abused mercy. Sinners that now fare deliciously every day, shall pass from their good things here, to the flames which live by the breath of God's revenging wrath. Ah! doleful exchange! one hour's feeling of that fire will be more tormenting than an age's enjoyment of this world's delights can be pleasing. Observe, 4. The equity, the celerity and multiplicity of Babylon's punishments; their equity is intimated in the illative particle therefore, that is, because of her former sins her plagues shall come: the celerity and swiftness of her punishment is intimated, they shall come upon her in one day as did Sodom's plagues, suddenly and unexpectedly: and the multiplicity and variety of her plagues is particularly here expressed; death, for putting the saints to death; mourning, for her former rejoicing; famine, for famishing God's people; and burning, for having burnt so many of the bodies of the holy martyrs to a coal. "Righteous art thou, O Lord, and just are thy judgments." Observe lastly, The reason here assigned for the unavoidableness of all these plagues coming upon Babylon, for strong is the Lord who judgeth her. True Babylon has all natural power, and all civil strength on her side; but the strong God is against her, it is his controversy with her, and he is able to effect what he pleaseth, how incredible soever the thing may seem to us; sooner may the ark and Dagon be reconciled, and cease to be adverse, than God can be at peace with Babylon; strong is the Lord who judgeth her.

9 And the kings of the earth, who have committed fornication and lived deliciously with her, shall bewail her, and lament for her, when they shall see the smoke of her burning,

10 Standing afar off for the fear of her torment, saying, Alas, alas! that great city Babylon, that mighty city! for in one hour is thy judgment come.

The Spirit of God having in the former part of the chapter set forth the certainty and severity of those judgments which should come upon mystical Babylon: he next declares what wailings and bitter lamentations her downfall would occasion to her votaries and admirers, to her friends and followers: more particularly he acquaints us with three sorts of persons that shall bewail Babylon's destruction, kings, merchants, and seamen; the former we have here before us, in these two verses; the kings of the earth, who have adhered to the whore, committed spiritual fornication with her, and delighted themselves in her carnal and pompous idol-worship, when they see the smoke of her burning, and understand the certainty of her destruction, they shall stand afar off, like persons astonished, and like persons afraid to come near, lest they be involved in it; and the words of their lamentation are here set down, Alas, alas, that great city Babylon! in one hour is her judgment come! As if they had said, "Notwithstanding all Babylon's grandeur, which we so admired and magnified, and which she herself put so much trust and confidence in, to our astonishment we behold in one hour, her judgment come upon her; a great and mighty city destroyed, a gay and splendid church politically founded, powerfully strengthened, on a sudden broken in pieces, and brought to desolation; Alas, alas, that great city Babylon!" Learn hence, That when God begins to enter into judgment with his church's enemies, the strong-eat arm of flesh cannot avail, but kings with their armies will flee and be discomfited, the stoutest hearts will be afraid and terrified, not daring to approach the presence of an angry God, "the kings of the earth shall stand afar off for fear of her torment."

11 And the merchants of the earth shall weep and mourn over her; for no man buyeth their merchandise any more.

12 The merchandise of gold, and silver, and precious stones, and of pearls, and fine linen, and purple, and silk, and scarlet, and all thyine wood, and all manner of vessels of ivory, and all manner of vessels of the most precious wood, and brass, and iron, and marble.

13 And cinnamon, and odors, and ointments, and frankincense, and wine, and oil, and fine flour, and wheat, and beasts, and sheep, and horses, and chariots, and slaves, and souls of men.

14 And the fruits that thy soul lusted after are departed from thee, and all things which were dainty and goodly are departed from thee, and thou shalt find them no more at all.

15 The merchants of these things which were made rich by her, shall stand afar off, for the fear of her torment, weeping and wailing.

16 And saying, Alas, alas! that great city, that was clothed in fine linen, and purple, and scarlet, and decked with gold, and precious stones, and pearls!

17 For in one hour so great riches is come to nought.

The second sort of persons who passionately lament, and bitterly bewail Babylon's downfall and destruction, are, the merchants who traded in and with Babylon. Here we have an allusion to the merchants and merchandise of Tyre, spoken of, Ezek. xxvii. As Tyre was the mart of the earth for temporal things, so was Babylon for spiritual things; making merchandise even of the souls of men, persuading the people that they could purchase the redemption of souls out of purgatory by masses. Here note, That Pagan Rome, though she did traffic for slaves, yet not for souls: but Papal Rome deals for both. She sells also the souls of men, by selling her ecclesiastical benefices, and cure of souls. And I would to God that this piece of spiritual merchandise were only found amongst them, and not heard of elsewhere. Observe next, The Holy Ghost is pleased to enumerate at large several sorts of wares, and the kinds of merchandise, which Babylon dealt and trafficked in, namely, "gold, silver, precious stones, fine linen, purple, silk, and scarlet;" all things for ornament, necessity, and delight; the pride and sensuality of Rome prompted her to buy up all sorts of commodities, and took off all that the countries round about could bring in; partly to gratify her pride, and partly to serve her idolatry. Observe farther, What a bitter lamentation is here taken up: but for what? Not for their sins, their luxury, or idolatry, but for the loss of their market and merchandise only. Behold, in these Babylonians, the spirit and temper of all natural men; they weep not for sin, but for sufferings; for any temporal cross they have tears enough, they refuse to be comforted; but for their sins, which are not their cross, but their curse, their plague, yea, the greatest of all plagues, because spiritual, these they can speak of with dry eyes and unaffected hearts. Observe, lastly, How these merchants here, as the kings before, stand afar off, for fear of her torment, weeping and wailing, pining and condoling one another, greatly affected and sorely afflicted to see the ruins of that polity that sustained them, but not able to help one another. Behold! how fruitless and helpless the wicked's friendship is to one another in the day of visitation; they stand afar off for fear of torments, but can afford no succour to each other; they durst not come near to help Babylon or them.

—And every ship-master, and all the company in ships, and sailors, and as many as trade by sea, stood afar off.

18 And cried, when they saw the smoke of her burning, saying, What city is like unto this great city?

19 And they cast dust on their heads, and cried, weeping and wailing, saying, Alas, alas! that great city, wherein were made rich all that had ships in the sea by reason of her costliness! for in one hour is she made desolate.

The last sort of mourners for Babylon's ruin are sailors and seamen: all spiritual seamen that have an oar in St. Peter's boat, shall lament greatly, whose life and livelihood did depend upon the merchant trade of that great city, These though they stuck so close to her, and trafficked with her in the day of her prosperity, yet now with the rest they stand afar off from her, lamenting her ruin, and their own loss, in the day when her desolation cometh. And as an evidence of the greatness of their sorrow and mourning, they are here said to cast "dust on their heads;" which amongst the ancients was used as a special token of extraordinary grief and sorrow, Job ii. 13. In a time of deep affliction we may express our outward sorrows by our outward gestures: These mourners for Babylon express their sorrow for her and themselves, by casting dust upon their heads.

20 Rejoice over her, thou heaven, and ye holy apostles and prophets: for God hath avenged you on her.

Note here, 1. That as Babylon's ruin was matter of great grief and sorrow to the forementioned mourners who merchandised and traded with her; so is it matter of great joy and rejoicing to all spiritual and heavenly-minded persons which are the true church, who are commanded to rejoice at it. Rejoice over her, O heaven; that is, ye angels in heaven, or ye saints, or that are of an heavenly disposition. And all ye holy apostles and prophets: that is, all faithful ministers who succeed them, who are endued with the same spirit, and teach the same pure and holy doctrine with them. Note, 2. The cause of this rejoicing declared; for God hath avenged them upon her. The church does not, the saints of God dare not, rejoice at Babylon's calamity, as such, but as an act of divine vengeance. God will be avenged on Babylon for the doctrine of the gospel corrupted by her, and for the rules of worship violated by her, and for all the barbarities and indignities which his church and people have suffered from her: God will revenge the wrongs of his people, when through want of power they cannot, and through his prohibitions they may not avenge themselves.

21 And a mighty angel took up a stone like a great millstone, and cast it into the sea, saying, Thus with violence shall that great city Babylon be thrown down, and shall be found no more at all,

22 And the voice of harpers, and musicians, and of pipers, and trumpeters, shall be heard no more at all in thee: and no craftsman, of whatsoever craft he be shall be found any more in thee; and the sound of a millstone shall be heard no more at all in thee;

23 And the light of a candle shall shine no more at all in thee; and the voice of the bridegroom and of the bride shall be heard no more at all in thee. For thy merchants were the great men of the earth: for by thy sorceries were nations deceived.

24 And in her was found the blood of prophets, and of saints, of all that were slain upon the earth.

Observe here, 1. Babylon's utter desolation represented by the type and sign of a mill-stone cast into the sea: like a mill-stone she had ground, and oppressed the church of God, and now like a millstone thrown into the sea, she sinks into the pit of destruction. Almighty God, by this sign or symbol, signified to St. John, that Babylon's ruin should be violent, irrecoverable, and irreparable; she falls never to rise more. The casting of a stone into the sea was anciently the emblem of everlasting forgetfulness. Observe, 2. The application of Babylon's ruin particularized in several instances. 1. That nothing should ever more be found in her that belonged to pleasure or delight; no voice of harpers, musicians, or trumpeters. 2. Nothing which belonged to profit or trading, no artificers or craftsmen. 3. Nothing belonging to food, no noise of a millstone for grinding corn and making provision for bread. 4. Nothing to relieve against the darkness and terror of the night; as the light of a candle. 5. No means for the propagation of mankind by marriage: "The voice of the bride and the bridegroom shall be heard no more." All which expressions do imply extreme destruction and utter desolation; intimating, that Babylon shall be a place utterly abandoned and forsaken. Observe, 3. A threefold cause assigned for all this, to wit. 1. Damnable covetousness; "Her merchants were the great ones of the earth." Her sinful way of merchandising, by dealing in spiritual commodities peculiar to Rome, seems to be here pointed at, her making merchandise of the souls of men, as we have it, ver. 13. 2. Her bewitching idolatry, called her sorceries, whereby she enticed people to join with her in superstitious worship. 3. Her cruelty and bloodshed; "in her was found the blood of prophets, and of saints, and of all that were slain upon the earth." Quest. But how can the blood shed by others be laid to her charge? Ans. 1. Because the doctrines which caused their blood to be shed were with her. 2. Because her jurisdiction gave commission to slay the saints which were slain in other kingdoms. 3. Because by the influence of her example at home, much blood had been shed abroad. God will charge upon others as he did upon Babylon, not only the sin which they have acted, but all the sins which they have been accessory unto.

CHAPTER XIX.

The foregoing chapter reported to us the final downfall and destruction of Babylon, never to rise more, together with the bitter lamentation of her friends and votaries upon that mournful occasion.

This chapter before us represents the great joy and rejoicing which was found both in heaven and earth, when it pleased the holy and just God to pour forth the vials of his wrath and vengeance upon that inveterate and bloody enemy of his church and people. A choir of singers is here found praising God, as ver. 1. informs us.

AND after these things I heard a great voice of much people in heaven, saying, Alleluia: Salvation, and glory, and honor, and power, unto the Lord our God;

Note here, That the first which sing this song of thanksgiving for Babylon's destruction, are glorified saints, called here much people in heaven; and they are said to sing with a great voice, expressing thereby their united zeal and fervent affection in this duty of thanksgiving, and they begin their song with an Hebrew word Alleluia, which is a word of excitation, and signifies, laud ye the Lord. Some think that hereby the christian churches do invite the Jews or Hebrews to join with them in praising God, and that after Babylon's overthrow Christ shall be solemnly praised as by the Gentile, so by the Jewish church: the tenor of their song is much the same with that which we had before, chap. vii. 10. to wit, salvation, (or deliverance from all evils, spiritual and temporal, particularly from those which the church suffered under Babylon's tyranny) "and glory, and honor, and power, be ascribed, unto the Lord our God," and to him alone, who is the Author of all good, and hath manifested his great power in destroying our enemies. Learn hence, 1. That the church's salvation is entirely from God, and the special effect of his divine power. 2. That to him, upon that account, all possible honor and glory is due, as having shown himself his people's God: "Salvation, and glory, and honor, and power, be unto the Lord our God."

2 For true and righteous are his judgments: for he hath judged the great whore, which did corrupt the earth with her fornication, and hath avenged the blood of his servants at her hand.

3 And again they said, Alleluia. And her smoke arose for ever and ever.

Observe here, 1. The cause assigned and set down, of this their doxology and solemn thanksgivings, namely, the truth and faithfulness, as also the justice and righteousness of God in the execution of his judgments upon Babylon; his truth appeared in performing the threatening which Babylon despised, and his righteousness in suiting his judgments inflicted upon her, to the sins of idolatry, and bloodshed committed by her. Observe, 2. The title here given to Babylon, she is called the whore, because of her idolatry, which is often in Scripture styled spiritual whoredom, and the great whore, because of her universal corrupting the whole earth; she made others to sin, and cruelly murdered those who would not sin. Hence learn, That idolatry and persecution constantly go together. Babylon's idolatrous practices were accompanied with bloody cruelties. Observe, 3. An intimation given of the irreparable ruin and irrecoverable destruction of Babylon, "her smoke rose up for ever and ever," that is, God followed her with a succession of plagues and judgments until she was ruined past recovery. Observe, 4. That the word Alleluia, as it begins the song, so does it also close the same, to show thereby the raisedness of the church's affections, and their unweariedness in praising God for this deliverance by Babylon's destruction.

4 And the four and twenty elders, and the four beasts, fell down and worshipped God that sat on the throne, saying, Amen; Alleluia.

5 And a voice came out of the throne, saying, Praise our God, all ye his servants, and ye that fear him, both small and great.

Note here, 1. How the whole heavenly choir praise God on the forementioned account, acknowledging the justice of his proceedings against Babylon; and, 2. An invitation is here given to all the saints upon earth, both small and great, to fear and praise him: Whence note, How the church triumphant and militant, the saints in heaven, and christians on earth jointly give praise to God, and glorify him for this great work, adoring his divine justice in destroying Babylon, the mother of idolatry, the nest of luxury, the seat of oppression and cruelty; it is a duty well becoming the saints both small and great, to celebrate the praises of God for the equity of his judgments upon his church's incorrigible and unreclaimable enemies; and here God himself, and his ministers, call upon the whole church to join in the solemn works of praise and thanksgiving, "A voice came out of the throne, saying, Praise our God: and the four and twenty elders, and the four beasts fell down and worshipped."

6 And I heard, as it were, the voice of a great multitude, and as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of mighty thunderings, saying, Alleluia: for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth.

7 Let us be glad and rejoice, and give honor to him: for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready.

8 And to her was granted that she should be arrayed in fine linen, clean and white: for the fine linen is the righteousness of saints.

saints to abound in the duty of thanksgiving; here ye find them unanimously addressing themselves to the practice and performance of that duty; and accordingly, they are called here "a great multitude, their voices like many waters for unity, and like mighty thunders," denoting that zeal and fervor which is in their thanksgiving. Where note, How exceedingly the church doth rejoice and triumph; no so much in Babylon's ruin, as in the glory of God advanced, and as his own kingdom is promoted by it. Observe, 2. A superadded ground and reason for this extraordinary joy and rejoicing, "for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and the wife hath made herself ready." By the marriage of the Lamb, Mr. Mede and Dr. More do understand the conversion of the Jews; by the Lamb's wife, the nation of the Jews, so called in regard of that relation which they stand in to God by virtue of the covenant: and she is said to have made herself ready, namely, by the wedding-garment of faith, to accept of the formerly despised bridegroom. Note, That it is probably conjectured by some, that the conversion of the Jews shall soon follow the destruction of antichrist; for his idolatry and persecution are great scandals to the Jews, and mighty stumbling-blocks in the way of their conversion: And whereas it is added, "that it was granted to her to be arrayed in fine linen," the words do seem to import, that the Jews shall, in due time, be brought in to Christ, to submit to his righteousness, and be clothed with it, and that an holy emulation shall be found between the Gentiles and them, which shall most and best adorn the profession of the gospel. From the whole, note, How the church is called Christ's wife. Christ and she are here betrothed to each other; but at the great day, the marriage will be here consummated. Note farther, The church's spiritual nakedness in herself considered: "It was granted to her to be arrayed in fine linen;" she had it not of herself, but it was put on by Christ; he decks and dresses his own bride with the ornaments of grace here, and glory hereafter; that he may "present it to himself a glorious church, without spot or wrinkle, holy, and without blemish."

9 And he saith unto me, Write; Blessed are they which are called unto the marriage-supper of the Lamb. And he saith unto me, These are the true sayings of God.

10 And I fell at his feet to worship him. And he said unto me, See thou do it not: I am thy fellow-servant, and of thy brethren that have the testimony of Jesus. Worship God: for the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy.

"Blessed are they which are called to the marriage supper of the Lamb;" that is, (say they, who understand by the marriage of the Lamb, the conversion of the Jews) who shall live in that happy time when the Jews being converted, shall, with the Gentiles, make up one glorious gospel church. But the marriage is one thing, and the marriage-supper another; the marriage-supper follows the marriage; so that the kingdom of glory rather seems here intended: blessed are they which are called to it, being made meet and prepared for it, by grace here, for glory hereafter: we must be made meet for heaven, before we can be admitted into heaven; "Blessed are they which are called to the marriage-supper of the Lamb." Observe, next, That St. John being overjoyed at the good news of his countrymen's (the Jews) conversion, fell down at the angel's feet to worship him, as Cornelius did at St. Peter's, when he heard of the conversion of the Gentiles, Acts x. 24. "And I fell at his feet to worship him." The holiest and best of saints are not wholly free from passionate infirmities: he would now have worshipped this angel, yet we read not of any attempt made to worship any of the former angels which conversed with him. This makes it probable that he apprehended it to be an uncreated angel, even the Son of God, which now talked with him. Observe next, With what indignation this holy angel rejected the offer of religious adoration, and how peremptorily he forbids it; ἀγαπᾷ μὴ, by no means, upon no terms do it. See thou doest it not. The church of Rome asks us, Why we reprove them for worshipping the angels, when St. John himself did it? Our answer is ready, That St. John himself was reprov'd for it: the angel rejected it as none of his due. O the presumption of those men, who dare do that which the angel expressly forbids to be done! Yet, after all, Beilarmine says, That St. John did well to worship the angel; then, say we, the angel did ill to reprove St. John: but whether we shall believe a cardinal at Rome, or an angel of God, judge ye. Observe, lastly, The reasons assigned why the angel forbade it. 1. Because God, and God alone, is the sole and proper object of religious worship: Worship thou God. 2. Because the angel was St. John's equal in office, though not in nature: I am thy fellow-servant. As if he had said, "Those who serve and worship God together with you, must not be worshipped by you: Those who are fellow-servants to one master, should not give to another that worship which is only due to their Lord and Master. But we are fellow-servants: how doth that appear? Thus: You have the testimony of Jesus, and I have the spirit of prophecy. Now, the spirit of prophecy and the work of the ministry in testifying of Jesus, being of the same nature and kind of service; therefore, from those that are employed in one of them, religious worship is not due to the other. 'Tis Christ that employs us both, and therefore, he alone is to be worshipped, and neither. I nor thou: "Worship God, to whom religious worship is justly and peculiarly due."

11 And I saw heaven opened, and behold, a white horse; and he that sat upon him was called Faithful and True; and in righteousness he doth judge and make war.

12 His eyes were as a flame of fire, and on his head were many crowns: and he had a name written that no man knew but he himself; dipped in blood : and his name is called, The word of God.

13 And he was clothed with a vesture

14 And the armies which were in heaven followed him upon white horses, clothed in fine linen, white and clean.

15 And out of his mouth goeth a sharp sword, that with it he should smite the nations : and he shall rule them with a rod of iron ; and he treadeth the wine-press of the fierceness and wrath of Almighty God.

16 And he hath on his vesture and on his thigh a name written, KING OF KINGS, AND LORD OF LORDS.

Here we have a new and fresh vision, in which St. John saw heaven opened, and Christ represented as a great and victorious General, marching forth with a glorious army for his church's enemies full and final destruction. This great General is first described from the place whence he comes, namely, from heaven ; he is no earthly prince and potentate, but an heavenly monarch. Next, he is said to sit on a white horse, denoting victory, prosperity, and success ; "He is called faithful and true, and righteous," because faithful in his promises, true in his threatenings, righteous in all his dispensations towards his enemies ; he will do them no wrong. Next his eyes are said to be as a flame of fire ; denoting his clear and piercing knowledge, and also his terror as a judge, his eyes being in wrath as a flame of fire ready to consume his enemies. And farther, to show his royal dignity, it is added, "on his head were many crowns," which also denoted his many victories over his many and mighty enemies. And by the name which no man knew but himself, some understand his nature and essence, which is so incomprehensible and unsearchable, as that none but he who is true God, is able to comprehend it fully, or reveal it perfectly. Others by his name, understand his judgments and ways by which he is known, as a man by his name. Observe next, This great and mighty General is described from his "vesture dipped in blood," which denotes the mighty overthrow of his enemies ; the cruellest and proudest of them can expect nothing in the end from him, but extremity of wrath and deserved destruction ! for they must all become his footstool. And his name being called, "The Word of God," speaks dread and terror to antichrist, who slanders, opposes, corrupts and suppresses, and offers all manner of indignities to the word of God ; and exercises the utmost cruelties against the preachers and professors of it. Observe farther, That after the description of this great and mighty General, follows next the description of his armies, his attendants, and followers, namely, the holy angels and glorified saints, ver. 14. these also ride upon white horses, as their General before them, and are clothed in "fine linen, white and clean." Behold the comely conformity, and purity, and holiness, between the general and his soldiers, between Christ and his followers ; they both appear on white horses, suitable to one another. Christ will admit none to be his followers that are not like him. Next, we have the weapon described, ver. 15. which Christ makes use of for the destruction of antichrist, and all his church's enemies ; and that is, "a sword, a sharp sword," the holy scriptures, particularly the threatenings of the word, with which he will smite all the wicked nations that side with antichrist against him and his kingdom ; dealing with his enemies as men do with grapes gathered into a wine-press, which they can easily crush. Lastly, He is described by a new name of royal dignity and supreme power, being called "King of kings, Lord of lords." And this name is said to be written on his vesture, and on his thigh, partly for perspicuity, that all might take notice of it ; and partly for permanency, to show that as long as himself lasts, which is for ever, so long shall his kingdom and dominion over all endure.

17 And I saw an angel standing in the sun ; and he cried with a loud voice, saying to all the fowls that fly in the midst of heaven, Come and gather yourselves together unto the supper of the great God ;

18 That ye may eat the flesh of kings, and the flesh of captains, and the flesh of mighty men, and the flesh of horses, and of them that sit on them, and the flesh of all men, both free and bond, both small and great.

After the description of the General and his army, follows next the event and success of the battle, which is a prodigious slaughter of the church's enemies : and as eagles and vultures, and other birds of prey, do attend an army, and flock where the slain lie in like manner, almighty God here invites the fowls of the air to sup upon the carcasses of his slain enemies. Antichrist would not suffer the dead bodies of the witnesses to be buried, but to be cast out, and lie in the streets ; and here God metes to him the same measure ; their carcasses also shall be a supper for the birds and the fowls of the air. "Come to the supper of the great God," to the slaughter of Antichrist and his adherents. Where note, That by calling it a supper, two things may be probably intended. 1. The facility and easiness of the victory ; that Christ and his church's enemies will not put him hard to it to overcome them ; as we proverbially say, they will be but a supper to him, or a breakfast for him. 2. The word supper seems to import, that this shall be the last effort, the last great opposition, that antichrist and the church's enemies shall ever make against Christ to the end of the world, as the supper is the last meal of the day.

19 And I saw the beast, and the kings of the earth, and their armies,

20 And the beast was taken, and with him the false prophet that wrought miracles before him, with which he deceived them that had received the mark of the beast, and them that worshipped his image. These both were cast alive into a lake of fire burning with brimstone.

21 And the remnant were slain with the sword of him that sat upon the horse; which sword proceeded out of his mouth; and all the fowls were filled with their flesh.

Observe here, 1. The final issue of the great battle, namely, the total ruin of all the enemies of the church; the beast and false prophet were taken, and cast alive into a lake of fire burning with brimstone. Behold the punishment of idolaters and idolatry; the false prophets had cheated credulous princes and people, with his pretended miracles, into idolatry; he had cast others into a bed of fornication, and God casts him into a bed of flames. Lastly, it is added concerning the remnant, that they were slain with the sword of his mouth: That is, by Christ's judicial sentence, they were righteously adjudged to be slain, and when they were so, all the fowls were filled with their flesh. Where note, That these persons were not excused, because they followed their leaders, and did what they bade them; Christ commands, for all that, that they also should be slain. Lord! how vain will the plea of many sinners be at the great day; we followed our guides, we did as we saw others do before us! Remember we, that God has given us a rule to walk by, the inallible and inflexible rule of his word: and neither the example of the most, nor of the best, must influence us to act contrary thereunto: for if we will do as the most do, we must be contented to go where the most go, even into the lake of fire burning with brimstone.

CHAPTER XX.

AND I saw an angel come down from heaven, having the key of the bottomless pit, and a great chain in his hand:

2 And he laid hold on the dragon, that old serpent, which is the devil, and satan, and bound him a thousand years.

3 And cast him into the bottomless pit, and shut him up, and set a seal upon him, that he should deceive the nations no more, till the thousand years should be fulfilled; and after that he must be loosed a little season.

This chapter begins with a fresh and glorious vision which St. John had of an angel's descending from heaven, to bind satan for a thousand years: and herein we have observable, 1. The person binding, the angel of the covenant, Christ Jesus, (for he only has the keys of the bottomless pit, of hell, and of death, Rev. i. 18.) This angel is here said to come down from heaven, and with a great chain in his hand, denoting his omnipotent power and sovereignty over satan, and his ability to restrain him. Observe, 2. The person bound, satan: Where mark, That he is set forth here by five names; he is called the dragon, the serpent, the old serpent, the devil, and satan. And note, Christ's power is set forth in as many terms as the devil has titles; he is said to lay hold on him, to bind him, to cast him into the bottomless pit, to shut him in, or seal him up for a thousand years: that is, to restrain him, and render him incapable of doing such mischief to the world as he had done before. Observe, 3. What we are to understand by Christ's binding satan: some thereby do understand Christ's overthrowing the power of the devil in the heathen world, his casting down those strong-holds of satan, to wit, ignorance, superstition, idolatry, and lying oracles, by the light and power of the gospel, preached among the Gentiles; his curbing of satan, that he should no more cozen the world with heathenish delusions as he had done. Others understand this binding of satan to be after the destruction of antichrist; when the Jews shall be converted, and there shall follow a quiet and peaceable state of the church for a long time, styled here a thousand years; during which time satan shall be bound, and there shall be no molestation from him. From the whole learn, That be the devil never so devilish, Christ has power to overpower him. Christ has a great chain in his hand to bind satan: Intimating, That how mighty and malicious soever satan is, Christ has him as a dog in a chain. But observe a little, how Christ's power meets with, and masters satan's power; the devil carries power in his name, he is called a dragon: in his nature, as being an angel: in his numbers which are numberless; but Christ overpowereth him, so that he cannot do his own will without him; he bound him in the execution of his malice, though his malice be boundless. Satan is bound in a double chain, in a chain of justice, and a chain of providence: he cannot move a foot, either to tempt or trouble us, without a permission from Christ:

4 And I saw thrones, and they sat upon them: and judgment was given unto them: and I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and which had not worshipped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands; and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years.

These words are conceived to set forth the glorious and happy condition of the church of Christ here on earth, during the time of satan's restraint; and the term of a thousand years, shows that it will be the longest happy condition that ever the militant church enjoyed, for purity of ordinances, for increase of light and knowledge, for the power of godliness, for the abundance of professors, for the more open and public profession of christianity, for outward freedom and peace, and all this for a long continuance of time: which happy state and condition is here set forth by thrones, showing the saints' dignity and dominion over their enemies. And whereas St. John says, he saw the souls of martyrs, who had shed their blood for Christ, the meaning, say some, is, He saw them in their successors of the same faith, those pious christians which should at that time live, and in their principles and practices are like the holy martyrs; these shall then enjoy a more quiet, happy, and comfortable state, during this time, than the servants of God enjoyed at any time before. Yet observe farther, That this glorious condition of the church is not absolute, but, comparative only, both in respect of purity, and in respect of peace; for whilst the church is on this side heaven, there will be both corruptions without, and temptations with crosses; hypocrites will be, and offences will come, though freedom from all these will at that time be more than usual: yet taking up the cross, and being conformed to Christ in his sufferings, will be duties belonging to saints whilst the world endures. Observe, lastly, That yet there is no ground from hence to expect Christ's personal reign upon earth, or his corporeal presence with his church here; for it is not said that he reigned with them, but that they reigned with him; denoting, that his kingdom is spiritual, consisting in purity and peace, in righteousness, and joy in the Holy Ghost. As to a personal reign of Christ then with his people here on earth, it seems not probable, because the scripture is silent of it, and joins Christ's personal coming, and the day of judgment together. Besides, were Christ personally upon earth, how should we enjoy him and converse with him? 'Tis impossible we should enjoy a glorified Christ till our bodies be spiritualized, which they will never be till they get to heaven. Once more, What will become of the saints during these thousand years of Christ's supposed presence with them! Either they will live all that thousand years (which is not rational to suppose,) or they will die in that time; if they die, and go to heaven, they will go from Christ, and not to him, and must for a time be absent from him, instead of being for ever with him; and doubtless, heaven will be a melancholy place, if Christ be out of it. The sum then is this, "That the saints living and reigning with Christ, holds forth the flourishing condition of the church militant: the expression of sitting upon thrones, speaks an honorable condition that the church will be certainly in, after the downfall of antichrist: and the term of a thousand years, shows it will be the longest happy condition that ever the church enjoyed." God Almighty hasten that desirable time!

5 But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished. This is the first resurrection.

6 Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: on such the second death hath no power: but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years.

By the rest of the dead, understand the subdued enemies of the church in their successors, who are said to be dead politically, in respect of their outward condition, which will now be very low, they lived not again a political life: that is, they did not regain or recover that power to persecute the church, which once they had, but are now divested of in great measure, namely, till the thousand years are finished; then they shall have liberty again to vent their enmity against the church, joining with Gog and Magog, as their predecessors, the worshippers of the beast, did combine together before them. This is the first resurrection, that is, the living again of the saints in that glorious manner before described in holy societies with greater degrees of purity and peace. Learn, That the reformation of the church, after the ruin of its Pagan and Papal enemies is as a splendid and glorious resurrection to her; and accordingly, such as are sharers in this political resurrection are pronounced blessed; blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection; that is, blessed are they that shall have their lot to live in this happy time, when the means of holiness will more abound, and the measures of holiness be more extensive and universal. The second death shall never affect them; everlasting misery shall be escaped by them; and they shall be priests unto God, to offer up, not expiatory, but gratulatory, sacrifices of prayer and praise unto him; and as the priesthood is spiritual, so is the kingdom also. They shall reign spiritually over their lusts and corruptions, and have greater power to overcome temptations, and this for a thousand years; that is, during the time of their living here, in that part of the happy millenium in which they shall live; they shall in that time enjoy a more holy, happy, peaceful and flourishing condition than the church of God did ever so long enjoy in former times. Some will have all this to be understood concerning a spiritual resurrection from the grave of sin to a life of holiness and grace; over such indeed the second death, or everlasting misery, shall have no power; but though this may be alluded to, yet a political, not a spiritual resurrection seems here to be principally intended.

7 And when the thousand years are expired, satan shall be loosed out of his prison.

8 And shall go out to deceive the nations which are in the four quarters of the earth, Gog and Magog, to gather them together to battle: the number of whom is as the sand of the sea.

9 And they went up on the breadth of the earth, and compassed the camp of the saints about, and the beloved city; and fire came down from God out of heaven, and devoured them.

10 And the devil that deceived them was cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, where the beast and the false prophet are, and shall be tormented day and night for ever and ever.

Observe here, 1. A prophetic prediction, that when the long time of the church's liberty and peace shall be expired, which is here expressed and set forth under the notion of a thousand years, God will then take off his restraint from the devil, and he shall influence the wicked world once more to make opposition against his church; "When the thousand years are expired, satan shall be loosed out of his prison." Behold here satan's restless malice against mankind, and particularly against the church of Christ. Observe next, That satan is first said to deceive the nations, and then to gather them together to battle against the saints: the same saints, either in their persons, or in their successors, who did formerly reign, will now suffer: but by whom? by Gog and Magog; where is probably an allusion to those two names mentioned often in the Old Testament, who were the last enemies of the Jewish church before Christ's first coming. In like manner, the last enemies of the christian church are here set forth by that name, who shall be utterly destroyed a little before Christ's second coming to judgment. Satan, with all his united power, and combined force, will attempt the whole body of the christian church before his last and fatal overthrow. Observe, lastly, That after the destruction of these agents and instruments of satan's fury, his own fall and final destruction is declared; which may be called his second imprisonment in that lake of fire and brimstone, which is both ceaseless and endless, there to keep company with the beast and false prophet to all eternity. Behold here the deceiver and the deceived plagued together; the devil that deceived, and the beast and false prophet that were deceived by him, and were his instruments to deceive others, are cast together into the lake of fire, to be tormented for ever. Satan was indeed condemned to this before, and reserved thereunto, but the actual and final execution thereof is suspended till the end come.

11 And I saw a great white throne, and him that sat on it, from whose face the earth and the heaven fled away; and there was found no place for them.

12 And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God: and the books were opened; and another book was opened, which is the book of life: and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works.

13 And the sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them: and they were judged every man according to their works.

14 And death and hell were cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death.

15 And whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire.

Here is another vision which St. John saw, namely, a lively representation of the great day of Judgment, when all, both good and bad, that ever lived, shall be raised and sentenced according to their works; the state of the wicked is set forth in this chapter, and the happy condition of the righteous in heaven gloriously described in the two next chapters. Observe here, 1. The Judge described, as sitting upon a throne or seat of judgment; a throne, to denote that this Judge is a King; and a white throne, to denote the purity and righteousness of this Judge; and a great white throne, because erected for a great Judge, and for a great service, namely, the judging of the whole world. Observe, 2. The dreadful majesty and glorious power of this Judge declared, that neither heaven nor earth are able to abide his presence, but are said, "to flee away, and that there was no place found for them." Observe, 3. The persons judged are here described, and that, 1. By their condition and qualification, all the dead, both small and great; all that ever lived, and all that shall then be found alive. 2. By their posture; they stand before the Judge, while he sits to show his authority. 3. By the manner of proceeding which is represented as being after the form of well-ordered judicatories here on earth; wherein the books are produced, namely, the book of God's omniscience, and the book of conscience, and the book of the law, and the book of the gospel. They that had not the written law, shall be judged by the law of nature; they that had the written law, are to be judged by that; and they that had the gospel, to be judged by that; and every one according to their works. Observe, 4. The execution of this sentence of this great Judge upon the wicked and impenitent world; they are cast into the lake of fire which is the second death. From the whole, learn, 1. That it is certain that there shall, and necessary that there should, be a day of judgment. 2. That in that day there will be no exemption of any persons from the examination of the Judge; I saw all the dead, small and great stand before God. 3. That Jesus Christ, called here God, (which clearly proves his deity) shall come in the clouds to judge the world; and will then be found such a Judge as the riches of the wealthiest cannot bribe; such a Judge as the power of the mightiest cannot daunt; such a Judge as the subtilty of the wisest cannot delude; such a Judge as there is no appealing from, no repealing of his sentence. Learn, 4. That as the same persons shall be judged, who formerly lived, so in the same bodies that died, and were either buried in the earth, or consumed in the sea: The sea gave up her dead; by which understand all places, though attended with never so many improbable circumstances of a resurrection, shall yet give up the dead. Death and hell, that is, death and the grave, gave up the dead, which were in them; that is, by the power of God were made to restore them. Learn, 5. That the sentence denounced will be according to every man's works at the great day; according to the nature and quality of the wicked man's works, shall his judgment and punishment be; according to the sincerity, not according to the imperfection of the righteous man's works, shall his reward be. God grant that the consideration of this may so far influence us, that no profit may tempt us, no pleasure entice us, no power embolden us, no privacy encourage us, to do that thing, of which we cannot give a good account in the day of judgment.

CHAPTER XXI.

In the conclusion of the foregoing chapter, St. John had a vision of the Judgment, and the execution of the sentence on the wicked was briefly declared and set down; in this chapter he has a vision of the New Jerusalem, the holy city, out of which all the wicked are excluded, and the excellencies thereof are more largely insisted upon, for the consolation of the righteous: concerning which he thus speaks:

AND I saw a new heaven and a new earth: for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away: and there was no more sea:

2 And I, John, saw the holy city, New Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband.

By the new heavens and the new earth here, all understand a new state and face of the church; but some apply it to the state of the church militant here upon earth, and others to the state of the church triumphant in heaven,

Accordingly they take the new heavens and the new earth to be the effect of that great change which shall be made by fire at the universal conflagration: and they are called new, not so much in regard of substance, as in respect of qualities, being now for nature more stable and for beauty more glorious. Quest. But what use shall there be of this new heaven and new earth? and who shall dwell therein? Ans. We cannot tell, but must rest satisfied with what God hath told us, that therein shall dwell righteousness; and it will be a standing monument of God's power and greatness: it is added, that "the first heaven and the first earth were passed away;" not by annihilation, but by a qualitative mutation. And no more sea: that is, say some, as it was before, turbulent, changeable, subject to corruption and vanity; say others, no more troublesome state of things, which is oft-times signified by the sea. A new and glorious state of things was undoubtedly here designed relating to the church. Observe next, The character St. John gives of the glorious state of the church triumphant, ver. 2. He compares her, 1. To a beautiful city, for amplitude and largeness, for compact structure, and for commodious habitation; she is called holy, because no unclean thing can enter into her, and because that holiness shall there be perfected which was here begun. 2. To an adorned bride; no spouse on her marriage day so adorned as she was. The church in heaven is so called, to denote her dignity, and the love which Christ bears to her, and the delight which he takes in her, which is so continual, as if it were always a wedding-day; and she is adorned for him, and adorned by him, with spiritual beauty, and glory, and perfection of grace.

3 And I heard a great voice out of heaven, saying, Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God.

4 And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying; neither shall there be any more pain; for the former things are passed away.

Observable is that variety of expressions which the Holy Ghost here makes use of, to set forth the excellency of the church triumphant by. 1. She is blest with God's immediate presence and abode, of which the tabernacle was a sign; the Lord manifesting himself in heaven unto his saints in a more immediate way than ever he did unto them here on earth. The tabernacle of God is with men; and to show the permanency of this privilege, it is added, He shall dwell with them; after an inhabitation here by grace, shall follow a cohabitation hereafter in glory. Next it is said, They shall be his people, and he will be their God; which must not be so understood, as if that relation did now begin between them, but the comfort of that relation is now perfectly understood, and they reap the complete advantage of that covenant-promise, whose sweetness they did only taste before. 2. Having described the positive good which the triumphant church shall eternally rest in; St. John next sets forth the private evils, which they shall everlastingly be freed from. All sorrow, and all the causes of sorrow, shall be removed; they shall have no outward occasion, nor inward disposition to weep: there shall be no more death, but immortality and eternal life; nor any more pain or sickness, but pleasure for evermore. Lord! what a sovereign cordial is this against all our present sorrows and sufferings! to consider the time is at hand when all tears shall be wiped from our eyes, all sorrows, and the causes of sorrow, banished from our hearts, and everlasting joys shall possess our souls, and we shall be with our Lord for ever, to obey him with vigor, to praise him with cheerfulness, to love him above measure, to fear him without torment, to serve him without interruption or distraction, and be perfectly like unto him as well in holiness as in happiness, as well in purity as in immortality!

5 And he that sat upon the throne said, Behold, I make all things new. And he said unto me, Write: for these words are true and faithful.

6 And he said unto me, It is done. I am Alpha and Omega the beginning and the end; I will give unto him that is athirst of the fountain of the water of life freely,

Note here, 1. How these new heavens and a new earth come to be effected and made, namely, by the omnipotent power of Christ. Behold, I make all things new; a good argument to encourage us to go unto Christ by prayer, for renewing grace. Surely, he that makes new heavens can make new hearts; he that renews an old world, can renew us in the spirit of our minds, and make old things pass away, and cause all things to become new. Next he commands St. John to write that these words set down here and throughout this prophecy, are true and faithful. We see then that the holy scriptures were written at the Lord's command, and therefore from him they do derive their authority. Observe, 2. The word of assurance here uttered by Christ, for the confirmation of what he had before declared and promised, he said unto me, It is done; signifying thereby, that it is as certain as if it were already done; namely, whatever he had promised relating to his church's happiness, and all that he had threatened relating to her enemies' destruction: let not the church then at any time stagger in her faith. Observe, 3. The title which Christ is pleased here to resume, which before was given by himself, chap. i. 8. I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end, to show, that as he first made the world, so he was now about to put a period to it, and would give to every thirsty or believing soul an everlasting life in the New Jerusalem, which shall no more decay, than water, which is in an ever springing fountain, can be dried up.

7 He that overcometh shall inherit all things: and I will be his God, and he shall be my son.

Observe here, 1. That our desires of happiness must be accompanied with endeavours after it, or they will be ineffectual; to thirsting in the former verse, he joins overcoming in this verse: we must not barely wish, but work; not only talk, but fight; and not only fight but overcome our spiritual enemies in fighting, or we are miserable; how strong soever our desires after happiness may be supposed to be, without proportionable endeavours, we can have no good ground of hope. Observe, 2. He that overcometh, that is, he that is overcoming, he that daily maintains the combat, though he has not yet obtained a perfect conquest over his spiritual enemies, yet keeps the field with sword in hand, resolving never to throw down his weapon, but to die as a conqueror, rather than be taken prisoner. Observe, 3. The encouraging promise given to the conqueror, He shall inherit all things. Where note, The extent and latitude of the promise, the enjoying all things, that is, all blessings and benefits, all joys and comforts that are requisite to make him perfectly and perpetually happy. Note also, God's way and manner of dispensing the mercy promised, and that is by free gift, he shall inherit all things, not merit any thing: an inheritance is gratuitum paterni amoris pignus, an estate freely given by the father to his children. Observe, 4. A superadded promise, "I will be his God, and he shall be my son;" that is, I will give him the manifestation of his adoption before angels and men; I am now his God, and he is now my son, but the world knoweth it not; they brand my people for a generation of hypocrites, and sometimes they call in question their own sincerity, and their title to the privilege of adoption; but at the great day I will publicly own them before angels and men, and make it appear that I love them as a father, and they shall live with me as sons for ever and ever; "He that overcometh," &c.

8 But the fearful, and unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars, shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone; which is the second death.

After a description given of the celestial happiness of the righteous at the day of judgment, here follows the eternally miserable condition of the wicked; and eight several sorts of sinners are here summed up, who shall be excluded out of heaven, and cast into hell; namely, the fearful, such as dare not own Christ, or for fear of suffering have disowned him, or apostatized and revolted from him; unbelievers, such especially as have sat under the dispensation of the gospel, but have rejected our Lord Jesus Christ, and refused to come unto him that they might have life: the abominable, such as live in the practice of sins against nature, sodomy, and such uncleanness as renders them abominable in the sight of God and man, Rom. i. 26. murderers, such as destroy either the soul, body, or good name of their neighbours, especially persecutors; the whore and her followers, who are drunk with the blood of the saints; whoremongers of all sorts, both spiritual and corporal, particularly such as are guilty of uncleanness in a conjugal state; sorcerers, such as exercise witchcraft, consult with the devil, and trade with familiar spirits; idolaters of all sorts and kinds, such as worship false gods, or the true God after a false manner; covetous persons, who make the world their God, and sensual persons who make their belly their God; lastly, all liars, those who lie with the lip, and talk falsely; those that lie in their lives, as all hypocrites do, whose practice gives their profession the lie: those who are the inventors of the doctrine of lies, which is no better than the doctrine of devils; these, all these shall have their part in the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone, that is, in exquisite torments, and everlasting. From the whole, note, 1. How the timorous and fearful stand in the front of all those vile sinners, whose ways lead down to the chambers of death and hell. Behold here! God's martial law executed upon cowards and renegadoes, whose fear makes them revolt from Christ in time of danger. Think of this, all you timorous and faint-hearted professors! who cannot bear the thought of lying in a nasty dungeon for owning Christ, how will you endure to lie in a lake of fire and brimstone for disowning of him! Is not the little finger of an angry God heavier than the loins of all the tyrants and persecutors in the world? Note, 2. That although eight sorts of sinners only are here reckoned up, yet all others who live and die impenitently in any known sin, besides these, of what kind soever, are certainly included, and their damnation implied also, as well as these; for whosoever lives in the habitual practice of any known sin, without converting from it unto God, is certainly in a state of damnation. Note, lastly, That the sins here mentioned must not be understood copulatively, but disjunctively; we must not suppose that such as are guilty of all the before-mentioned sins, are the persons threatened with hell fire; but such as are with allowance guilty of any one of these, or of any other besides these, and continuing impenitently in them.

9 And there came unto me one of the seven angels, which had the seven vials full of the seven last plagues, and talked with me, saying, Come hither, I will show thee the bride, the Lamb's wife.

10 And he carried me away in the spirit to a great and high mountain, and showed me that great city, the Holy Jerusalem, descending out of heaven from God,

11 Having the glory of God: and her light was like unto a stone most precious, even like a jasper stone, clear as crystal:

12 And had a wall great and high, and had twelve gates, and at the gates twelve angels, and names written thereon, which are the names of the twelve tribes of the children of Israel.

13 On the east, three gates, on the north, three gates, on the south, three gates; and on the west, three gates.

14 And the wall of the city had twelve foundations, and in them the names of the twelve apostles of the Lamb.

St John having delivered, before, a general account of the saints' happiness in heaven, descends here to a more particular description of it. Heaven, called the New Jerusalem, is represented by a city, with magnificent gates and walls; and the church, the collective body of glorified saints, is here called the Lamb's wife espoused before, but the marriage solemnized now. Note here, That as the earthly Jerusalem was a type of the church militant, so the church triumphant is called the New Jerusalem, and compared to a great city, for the multitude of its members; and styled holy, because sanctity is the special qualification of those who are the inhabitants of it. Note, 2 The light which is found in this city, it is not compared to the light of the sun, for that is attended with scorching heat; nor to the light of the moon, which is variable and uncertain; but to the light of precious stones, which is clear and pure, and has nothing annoying in it. Note, 3 The great safety and security of this city, and of all the citizens inhabiting therein: here is a wall great and high: Walls are for defence (called mœnia a muniendo) and the higher the wall, the greater the defence; God's omnipotency is a wall, and will be an invincible bulwark about his saints in heaven, nothing shall endanger them, nothing shall offend them. Note, 4. Here are twelve gates, for convenience of entrance into this city on all sides, and to give free and easy access from all parts, east, west, north, and south; to signify, that the church in heaven will be made up of persons coming from all parts as Christ foretold, Mat. viii. 11. Luke xiii. 29. They shall come from the east, &c. and shall sit down with Abraham. The triumphant church is a collective body of believers, of all nations, kindreds, and people, tongues and languages. Note, lastly, That as the names of workmen are sometimes set upon the foundation-stones, by which it is well known in after-ages who were the builders; in like manner it is here intimated, that as the ancient Jewish church was founded in twelve patriarchs, so the latter christian church in and by twelve apostles, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone, the foundation of both, he being fundamentum fundans, they fundamenta fundata, teaching us, that our faith must be built upon the doctrine of Christ and his apostles, and upon no other doctrine whatsoever, though it has a pretended stamp of infallibility upon it.

15 And he that talked with me had a golden reed to measure the city, and the gates thereof, and the wall thereof.

16 And the city lieth four-square, and the length is as large as the breadth. And he measured the city with the reed, twelve thousand furlongs; The length, and the breadth, and the height of it are equal.

17 And he measured the wall thereof, an hundred and forty and four cubits, according to the measure of a man, that is, of the angel.

Still St. John proceeds in the description of the heavenly state, and the church triumphant in it! this is called a city, in respect to its magnificent building, comely order, and invincible strength; a great city, in regard of its largeness and capaciousness, being full of glorified saints and angels; and Jerusalem because of that everlasting peace which is there enjoined, as the Hebrew word signifies; and here an account is given of the measuring of this great city. We read of its measuring before, chap. xi. but differently from its measuring now; then it was measured by a man, now by an angel; then by an ordinary reed, now by a golden reed; intimating the transcendency of the state of the church now, to what it was before, and representing the firmness, perfection, and greatness of the New Jerusalem. Here note, An observable difference in the measuring of the church militant, and of the church triumphant; the church militant, upon a just measure by the reed of the word, is found unequal in its parts, some parts of it are purer and better than others, but in the New Jerusalem all parts are equal in perfection and purity; the length is as large as the breadth, and height equal to either; the church of Christ in heaven shall be exceeding large and great, perfect and complete, nothing shall be found irregular in it, all things can there endure the measuring reed, and abide the exactest trial.

18 And the building of the wall of it was of jasper: and the city was pure gold, like unto clear glass.

19 And the foundations of the wall of the city were garnished with all manner of precious stones. The first foundation was jasper; the second, sapphire: the third, a chalcedony; the fourth, an emerald;

20 The fifth, sardonyx; the sixth, sardius; the seventh, chrysolyte; the eighth, beryl; the ninth, a topaz; the tenth, a chrysoprasus; the eleventh, a jacinth; the twelfth, an amethyst.

21 And the twelve gates were twelve pearls: every several gate was of one pearl: and the street of the city was pure gold, as it were transparent glass.

Some will have all this to signify and represent the purest state of the church here upon earth: but if there shall be any state on this side eternity which answereth this glorious representation, how much more will the perfect glorious church in heaven fully answer it? What was said of Jerusalem of old, may be truly spoken of the New Jerusalem above, Ps. lxxxvii. 3. Very excellent things are spoken of thee, thou city of God; her pavement of gold, her gates of pearl, her walls of precious stone, denoting the durability and permanency of the saints' happiness, the delight and satisfaction that accompany it, and the resplendent glory of it. As gold excels all metals, and is not subject to corruption, as precious stones are full of splendor and glory, in like manner will the mansions of heaven be most glorious, the conversation there pure and incorrupt, affording saints such an entire satisfaction as entirely exceeds all that the most rich and glorious things of this world can afford for the gratification of the outward senses.

22 And I saw no temple therein: for the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are the temple of it, 23 And the city had no need of the sun, neither of the moon, to shine in it; for the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof.

24 And the nations of them which are saved shall walk in the light of it: and the kings of the earth do bring their glory and honor into it.

25 And the gates of it shall not be shut at all by day: for there shall be no night there.

26 And they shall bring the glory and honor of the nations into it.

27 And there shall in no wise enter into it any thing that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination, or maketh a lie: but they which are written in the Lamb's book of life.

Observe here, 1. St John declares that the New Jerusalem shall not want either those spiritual supplies or natural advantages which Jerusalem below stood in need of; no need of any temple there for external worship and ordinances, which it is our duty to wait upon God in here: what need of an house of prayer for them that want nothing to pray for? what need of ministers and ordinances, to teach them whose knowledge is perfected? what need of sacraments to remember Christ in and by, when they shall always see Christ face to face? Again, what need of the natural light of the sun and moon, where the Sun of Righteousness for ever shineth, and where God is all in all? Happy they that enjoy him, for they enjoy all good in him and by him, he being the fountain of all goodness! Observe, 2. Having thus described the city, St John next declares who shall be the citizens, namely, the nations that are saved, all believing Jews and converted Gentiles, called elsewhere, "the general assembly and church of the first born," which are a great multitude; these shall be admitted into it, and partake of the glory and happiness of it: and whereas it is added, that "kings do bring their honor and glory into it," this is not to be so understood as if there would be a distinction in heaven between kings and subjects; no, all the saints there are kings and priests unto God; neither is it meant that kings shall carry their earthly glory and honor with them into heaven; but that kings who shall be so happy as to come thither, shall see all their honor and glory swallowed up in the glory and happiness of that place and state, and shall confess that all their crowns are infinitely short of the crown of glory, and that their thrones are dunghills compared with the dignity of this throne. Observe, 3. It is declared what perfect security and peace the saints enjoy in the New Jerusalem, together with their glory, riches, and happiness: this is signified, ver. 25. The gate shall not be shut at all by day, and there is no night to shut them in; the gates shall be open to show their peaceable state and secure tranquillity, without fear of any hostile invasion or entry of enemies, either by force or fraud. It is added, There shall be no night there, either in a literal or a metaphorical sense, no darkness, nor interruption of happiness, nor fear of danger, nothing that can either disturb or disquiet. Observe, 4. Who the persons are that shall be everlastingly debarred the enjoyment of all this happiness, all that have defiled themselves by lust and uncleanness, every person that hath not, by holiness of heart and life, separated himself from sin and wickedness, and dedicated himself to God and his service; nothing that defileth, nothing that worketh abomination; no open scandalous sinner, or he that maketh a lie, shall be admitted: to tell a lie is bad, but to make a lie is much worse; this is the devil's sin in a special manner, it is his by temptation, it is his by approbation, it is his by practice; he is a liar, and the father of lies and liars; it were well if our customary liars would consider it. The sum of all is, That without grace and holiness here, there can be no expectation of glory and happiness hereafter; this fits at once for the employment of heaven, and the enjoyments of heaven, it makes meet for the inheritance in light, and if we have not our present fruit unto holiness, our end can never be everlasting life.

CHAPTER XXII.

AND he showed me a pure river of water of life, clear as crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God and of the Lamb.

St. John, in this and the four following verses, goes on with the description of the heavenly Jerusalem, which he had begun in the former chapter: and here we have observable, 1. The city described as having a clear river running through it, and this of the water of life, an allusion doubtless, to the earthly paradise, Gen. ii. which was well watered, without which accommodation no place can be happy; the heavenly paradise here, or the New Jerusalem, is said to have a pure river of water in it, denoting the pure and unmixed joys of heaven, and those "rivers of pleasure," which are at God's right hand for evermore." Here is not a well of water, but a river, not of muddy or feculent water, but clear as crystal; not corruptible or dead, but living water, water of life. Observe, 2. The head or spring of this river declared from whence it doth arise, not from the hills, which may be cut off, diverted, or dried up, but it proceeds out of the throne of God, and of the Lamb, and therefore can no more fail, than God and Christ can fail: no river can fail, unless the springs that feed it fail; the saints in heaven shall be refreshed with such consolations as flow from the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, and their comforts cannot fail till they fail; he showed me a pure river of water, &c. proceeding out of the throne of God.

2 In the midst of the street of it, and on either side of the river was there the tree of life, which bare twelve manner of fruits: and yielded her fruit every month: and the leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations.

Note here, 1. That as there was a river and a tree of life in the terrestrial paradise, so in allusion thereunto, both are said to be in the heavenly paradise: behold here a tree of such vast proportion and extent, that its branches extend to both sides, that all may receive benefit by it; whom can this agree with but Jesus Christ, who is called a tree of life, because from him we have our natural, our spiritual, and our eternal life? From this tree do bud forth all the fruits of grace and comfort, and that for all seasons and conditions. In Christ, 1. Our souls have all necessities for food and physic, Its leaves are for healing, as well as its fruits for food. 2. All variety of fruits, called here twelve manner of fruits, that is, variety of graces and comforts of all sorts. 3. In him are these fruits at all times: this tree bears fruit every month, winter fruits as well as summer fruits, even in the black months of sickness and death. Christ is continually distributing of his divine fulness to the satisfaction of his people; he is all in all, in the enjoyment of mercy; he is all in all, in the want of mercy; he is all, in order to his people's salvation; and he is all in their glorification.

Quest. But will there be any need either of food or physic in heaven? If not, what need of the fruits of this tree for food, or of its leaves for healing? Ans. We cannot suppose that in the heavenly state there will be any want either of meat or medicines, any hunger that shall require food, or any sickness to stand in need of physic; but as food and physic are the instrumental means of the preservation of natural life, without which it will certainly and suddenly decay; in like manner our Lord Jesus Christ doth not only give spiritual life unto his people, but he is the conserving cause of it, he doth maintain, and will preserve it without the least decay to all eternity: thus are the leaves of this tree for the healing of the nations.

3 And there shall be no more curse: but the throne of God and of the Lamb shall be in it; and his servants shall serve him:

4 And they shall see his face; and his name shall be in their foreheads,

5 And there shall be no night there: and they need no candle, neither light of the sun; for the Lord God giveth them light: and they shall reign for ever and ever.

St. John has not yet done with this copious description of the New Jerusalem, but here he closes it by doing these two things. 1. He shows what shall not be found there, there shall be no curse, no accursed person, or accursed thing, no sin, nor any thing sinful, that deserves the curse; and there shall be no night there, no darkness of ignorance or error, no darkness of affliction, temptation or desertion, no night of natural darkness, no night of spiritual darkness, much less of eternal darkness, which is the portion of the wicked; farther, there shall be no need of natural light, the light of the sun: no need of artificial light, the light of a candle; no need of the spiritual light of the world and ordinances, all which shall then and there cease. 2. He shows what there shall be there, namely, 1. The throne of God and the Lamb, that is, the glorious and everlasting presence of God and Christ, as on a throne of royal majesty, insomuch, that the name of the city may be Jehovah Shammah, the Lord is there. 2. It is added, that his servant shall serve him, that is, the glorious angels and glorified saints shall continually stand before him, and administer unto him, not spend their eternity in a perpetual gazing upon God, but executing his commands, obeying him with vigor, praising him with cheerfulness, loving him above measure, fearing him without torment, trusting him without despondency, serving him without lassitude and weariness, without interruption or distraction, praising God and singing eternal Hallelujahs to the Lamb for ever and ever. 3. It is declared, that they shall see God's face, which imports fruition as well as vision of him, together with a sweet and satisfactory delectation in him. St. Mat. v. 8. Heb. xii. 14. Blessed are the pure in heart, and holy in life, for they see God; that is, have a clear apprehensive, though not a full and comprehensive knowledge of him. 4. His name shall be in their foreheads; his name, that is, his holy nature, his image and likeness, by which they shall be known, as a man is by his name; an allusion probably to the highpriest, who had holiness to the Lord written on his frontlet; or a reflection upon the worshippers of the beast, who have his name on their foreheads; in like manner the name of God shall be on his servants' foreheads; they are thankful for imperfect lineaments here, but shall be satisfied with his likeness then and there. Lastly, it is closed with this, they shall reign for ever and ever, not for a thousand years, as the militant church is said to reign on earth after antichrist's destruction, but for eternal ages, and this not partially, but fully and completely, when all the spiritual enemies, sin, satan, and the world, yea, death itself shall be put under their feet, and that for ever. From the whole learn, That when we are at any time dejected upon the account of our dark and imperfect knowledge, or afflicted upon the occasion of many wearisome nights and days of sin and sorrow, of trouble and temptation, of misery and desertion, which we have here on earth, let this meditation comfort us, that the happy day is coming, when there shall be no night, but an eternal sabbath of rest, light and life, with plenty of all good things, even fulness of joy and rivers of pleasure for evermore.

*O Lord, the well of life so pure
Doth ever flow from thee,
And in thy light thy saints are sure Eternal light to see.*

—"The Lord giveth them light, and they shall reign for ever and ever."

6 And he said unto me, These sayings are faithful and true: And the Lord God of the holy prophets sent his angel, to show unto his servants the things which must shortly be done.

7 Behold, I come quickly: blessed is he that keepeth the sayings of the prophecy of this book.

8 And I, John, saw these things, and heard them. And, when I had heard and seen, I fell down to worship before the feet of the angel which showed me these things.

9 Then saith he unto me, See thou do
